There are now in the park thousands of elk so tame that a person can ride or walk about among them. The General says he is reliably informed that one hunter has slaughtered as many as seventy-five of these animals in a single day. They are not slaughtered for their meat or skin, but shot down chiefly for the pleasure of killing them. Besides the elk, there are many antelopes, deer, Rocky mountain sheep, and bears. Grizzly, cinnamon, brown and black bears abound, and flocks of fifty and 100 mountain sheep are met with every day. The basins of the geysers have been hundreds of years in forming, and a man can destroy in a day what cannot be reproduced in three times the space of his life. Many of the deposits are white mineral, tinged with gray, largely composed of alumina. Much of it is arranged in layers several inches in thickness, bound together by alternating layers of silicious sinter. The action of the waters of the geysers, and the influence of the weather, have induced an irregular cellular structure, which gives a delicate and attractive appearance to much of it. These formations are soft, and can be cut with a saw or broken by hammer, and large blocks are cut or broken and carried away annually. Some of the most beautiful formations have already been entirely destroyed, and can never be replaced during a lifetime.

Gen. Brisbin says the disposition to vandalism seems to possess nearly every one who enters the park, and unless it is checked the "wonderland of the world" must soon cease to be an object of interest. During the summer a great many people will visit the "wonderland," and the General hopes that some immediate steps may be taken to prevent them from depredating, as most visitors have done heretofore. Especially the game and terraced borders of the pools should be protected. Two routes lead into the park—one from Virginia City and the other from Bozeman.

The General says the entrances to the park, and the park itself, can be easily guarded, and he would himself gladly afford the protection, should the General commanding obtain the necessary authority, and give him instructions accordingly. He recommends that a Sergeant and four men be stationed at the entrance of the park on the Virginia side, and a Sergeant and an equal number of men at the entrance on the Bozeman side. These parties can be easily supplied from Fort Ellis. The non-commissioned officers should, he thinks, be instructed to send a soldier with each party of visitors entering the park, directing him to note any damage done and report it, with the names of the persons.

An Antidote for Flies.

A few years ago a Philadelphia clergyman discovered an antidote for flies, or at least he said he did. He had occasion to change his abode. We do not know just what the occasion was. Probably he could not pay the rent, or perhaps his relatives out West, who were coming to see the Centennial, found out his old address, and wrote to him that they could not endure life any longer without seeing him, and would visit him all summer; at any rate he moved. He had in his house a number of house plants, and sent them to the new house the day before he moved. Immediately he was beset with swarms of flies, although he had previously enjoyed perfect immunity from these pests. And when he got moved, and settled down among his window plants again, the flies ceased to trouble him. It is a simple and very pleasant experiment. If it fails to drive away the flies, you will at least succeed in filling your house with plants, which is a pleasant thing to do, as it will keep you employed all the time in caring for them, and you will have plenty of time for vain regrets, when the plants all freeze along about Christmas. But there may be something in it. We have the word of a clergyman for it, and we do not see why even a clergyman should tell a fib about such a little thing as a fly.

A Good Deed in a Naughty World.

A month or two ago a young girl in Boston, the daughter of one of the wealthiest men there, being about to marry, asked her father to let her wedding be as quiet and inexpensive as possible, and to give her the money which would have been spent in flowers, wine, etc. With this sum she gave a certain sum to the poor of each city which she visited on her wedding journey. She had the blessing of the hungry and naked strewn along her path instead of roses. The story, without the names, crept into the newspapers. Last week the wedding of one of the great capitalists of this city was marked by as touching and beautiful an incident. One of the gifts to the bride was the sending of 100 orphan boys to homes in the West. A good deed is not so much like a candle throwing its beams upon the night as a beacon, which is no sooner kindled than it lights a hundred others in the distance.—New York Tribune.

Carver, the Marksman.

A Cleveland Leader reporter recently called upon Dr. William F. Carver, the great rifle shot, and had a long talk with him on matters connected with his early life. He possesses a wonderful history that is full enough of material for the framework of a good drama, without going into the realms of imagination or wandering from the paths of truth. The Indians title him "Evil Spirit," on account of his great accuracy with the rifle. Never missing his object, they could not understand how it was possible for one to be so deadly in aim without possessing some supernatural power.

Carver's life has been one of thrilling adventures. Captured by the Indians when only 4 years old, he never had an equal among the savage tribes that taught him their cunning, and helped to train the steady nerve and physical force that is his birthright. When 18 years of age, the tribe held a council, and declared him the medical man of the entire Dakota nation, which position he occupied for six years, and received in that way the title of doctor. After leaving the Indians he went to school in a small town in Illinois, where he remained four years. The inclination being strong upon him to return to his former associates and pastimes, he betook himself once more at the end of that time to the plains, and soon became famous as a hunter of buffalo, elk and the abundance of wild game that infest the frontier. He says that he has killed more buffalo on one run, solely and alone, than any party of hunters. In the fall of 1866 he rescued two ladies from a small band of Comanches, for which he was highly commented on by the entire Western press. He acquired the reputation of a phenomenal shot at the early age of 7 years, when he was known to bring down a blue-jay on the wing with a rifle.

As a result of constant practice in this particular line, together with his good habits, muscular form and unerring nerve, the acquirement of his wonderful skill is attributed. He has achieved most flattering success wherever he has appeared to give an exhibition on his way East. At Omaha he surprised his spectators by killing three teal ducks while flying in succession. At Detroit, he appeared on the Hamtramck race track, and, while shooting at glass balls, a swallow flew within range of his unerring gun. The crowd had become so sanguine of his ability that they cried out, "Shoot it," and they were not disappointed when the man leveled his rifle and brought the luckless bird to the ground. Dr. Carver stands six feet two inches in height, with a frank and pleasing face. He has a pair of keen, restless eyes, which gives him a wonderful quickness and precision in sighting. He weighs 196 pounds, and is 38 years of age. He intends making a tour of the world.

The Wheat-Belt.

The removal of the "wheat-belt" westward is strikingly exhibited by the trade of Cleveland. Only thirty-five years ago she shipped more wheat than any other port on the great lakes, Buffalo alone excepted. Massillon, now scarcely known in the wheat trade, was the chief point of original receipt, and received a larger amount of wheat than any other port of the world from the actual producers. Now both Cleveland and Massillon draw a large proportion of their breadstuffs from the Northwest. Westward the wheat-producing region takes its way, but this condition of affairs, although it will last for many years, will not be permanent. With improved agriculture wheat will again be grown in large quantities where it is now neglected; and the increased settlement of the West will, after a certain point is reached, provide consumers nearer the places of production in that region.—Buffalo Courier.

Tit for Tat.

The wife of a Hartford clergyman thought her pretty servant girl was becoming too intimate with the owner of the tenement where they lived, a widower, who occupied rooms in the same building, and, finally, in a fit of indignation, said: "Pack up your things and leave my house." The girl left, but returned in the afternoon, and entering said to her late mistress: "I am Mrs. ——; now pack up your things and leave my house." The servant girl had married the landlord, and the order was enforced.

CONTRACTION VS. INFLATION.

Contraction Hurts Nine-Tenths, Inflation One-Tenth.

Jesse Harper, of Illinois, writes as follows to the New York Advocate:

The specie payment banking system is a great wrong. To grant the privilege to a few men to issue their promises, then call that stuff money, is a dreadful crime against labor, and has in some countries robbed from labor more bread than have piracy and war combined. The wicked part of this is, that these paper promises of the bankers, called money, and allowed to circulate as money, are all to be redeemed in a higher type of money—coin. This is their assumption.

But this is not all. The rule of every banking system (of issue) that has ever flourished has been to issue from $3 to $10 of paper to $1 of coin.

So, when the system has been tested, it has proved to be a sham, a fraud, a means of stealing by the forms of law.

Still further. This system is more hurtful to the material interests of man than war. Because it establishes a "coin basis," upon which it rears its superstructure of credit. A superstructure that falls on an average of every six years—and in its fall, each time, robs labor of seventy cents on each dollar of its hard-earned substance, and thus crowds down toward bankruptcy and ultimate pauperism 90 per cent. of the people. All this, in order to raise to opulence, to the "height of money despots," 10 per cent. of the people—making them a ruling class by operation of law. This system was conceived in sin, and brought forth in iniquity.

The banking system carries on its work of plunder by a process—the devilish engineering of which they understand as thoroughly as ever Satan knew the plans by which he accomplished his schemes of sin. This process is inflation and contraction. And the more effectually to carry on this murderous business of making the rich man richer and the poor man poorer, they subsidize the press to their interest. They take whole administrations under their control, and convert to their own base use the head-centers of the church of God. And having filled up by these means "their army of villains," they go for ward.

They first inflate, send the business of the country forward at a whirlwind speed, then "issue" bank credits, filling the channels of trade as thickly as do the falling leaves the autumn ground. "Credit" is their motto.

Bank checks, bank notes, bank credit does 99½ per cent. of the business, and coin a half of 1 per cent. Thus England for a century has pushed forward her scheme of robbery. We are trying to reach it in this country, so that our ruin will be complete.

Now this going up, this inflation, does not hurt like the reverses—the downward road. For 90 per cent. of the labor masses, as money in volume is abundant, increase the aggregate wealth as rapidly and as happily to themselves as does the busy bee in the blooming flower time, increase the honey in the hive.

But from this height of bliss—this mountain-top of joy, where there is work for all and all work, the fall to "hard pan," to an "honest basis," is to be sudden as death, and cruel as the grave.

Labor is to be told—by those who have been the authors of "inflation"—that the toilers have been too active; that their too close and intense application to work, their joyous, heroic following of the industrial pursuits has brought upon the country a great calamity, an over-production.

The people are told when the politicians have reached this stage that there are so many shoes that the people must go barefooted, that there are so many clothes that the people must go naked; and there is such an abundance of food that the people must starve.

At this point it is discussed that the other wheel of the "bankers' warder mill" has been stealthily at work—"contraction." This device—as slyly as the assassin does his work—has, with noiseless step, passed down through the ruined fortunes and dying hopes of 90 per cent. of the business, and reached "hard pan."

The truth begins to be realized, as it never has been realized before, that inflation is in the main a blessing when applied to the whole body politic, because more than 90 per cent. of the entire population become active in all the pursuits of productive industry, and only about 10 per cent. are disagreeably affected—and that only in the particular of getting a less amount of commodities for their money than they would have got if there had been no inflation.

While this is true as to the increase in the volume of the money, contraction of the volume is appalling in its results.

The contraction of the currency has, and always must, work an appalling destruction—a ruin of labor, of all productive and industrial pursuits. Read this authority:

> The danger of an unduly increasing money is theoretical and fanciful. The mischief which practically threatens the world, and which has been the most prolific cause of the social, political and industrial ills which have afflicted it, is that of a decreasing and deficient money.
>
> It is from such a deficiency that mankind are now suffering, and it is the actual and present evil with which we have to contend.—Silver Commission, p. 61.

Business Failures.

The Sherman crash is working up, up. First it shipwrecked the working man. Now it spends its force on the men of business. But the rich man of fixed income is safe enough. Whatever he wants to buy he can have it at half price. He has lent on house or lands half their value, or less. He can now take the house or land, and send the owner adrift. But he won't do it. He knows better than that. Here is a big example, and the little examples count by millions:

Ben Wood, brother of Fernando, our Congressional tariff tinker, buys a house for $150,000, pays $50,000; balance on bond and mortgages; interest $7,000 a year; taxes $1,000 or $2,000. Ben's newspaper business falls off. He can't pay those heavy, ever-recurring sums. He begs the former owner to take the house off his hands—Ben losing the $50,000 he has paid. No! the mortgagee has no notion of it. He will foreclose, buy in the property as cheap as he can, and hold Ben or his bond for the balance. It is done. The house Ben had bought for $150,000 now sells for $40,000. Ben loses his $50,000, and is held on his bond for $60,000 more. To escape from this he takes refuge under the Bankrupt law, and even that law is about to be repealed, so that the debtor will always be held to stagger under the debt, discouraged and kept down by it to the end of his life.

The careless, selfish, stupid "business men" are now paying the heavy penalty of their public apathy. They saw that the country was going to ruin under the choking grasp of John Sherman and a frail Congress—or, rather, they did not see it. They did not lift up their eyes to see it or to look around them at all. "What is hope worth? Is flour, sugar, hides, lumber, coal, up or down this morning?" That was their continuous thought. If on "'change," they saw nothing but what was "changing" there. If behind the counter attending customers, that counter and their wares and the customers were the whole world to them. Supine and submissive to all public wrong, they offered a big, ripe harvest to the reaper of Sherman, Shylock, Syndicate, Scoundrel & Company. That company had nothing to do but mow down the harvest and gather it in.

And what has it come to now? Financial wrecks! Seventy-three failures, comprising $750,000, in New York city in the month just closed; and 150 applications in bankruptcy in the same place and the same time. So events succeed each other. First, the millions of workingmen are thrown idle—thrown into a condition of suffering that never, never can be computed. Next, and from the same cause, crash come the business houses in one widening ruin—one falling firm pulling the other down, one burning house setting fire to the next one, and no end seen to either the "falling" or the "fire."—Irish World.

What Next!

As we are promised that the curtain shall soon fall upon the first act of the tragedy of "Specie Resumption," carefully reproduced from the old English text, those who are too impatient to wait for the gradual development of the drama can readily anticipate the performance by simply referring to English history, which is conscientiously imitated by the playwright, stage managers, and scene-shifters of the centennial entertainment, to which we are invited.

That history tells us that the laws of 1797, which commanded the Bank of England to suspend specie payment, provided for the continuance of the same until "six months after the conclusion of a general peace, and no longer." This law, if not repealed, would have compelled the horror of a premature so-called resumption early in 1812. But the cry of agony which followed the first preparatory incision of the knife paralyzed the action of the not-yet-calloused executioners; and the day, miscalled the day of redemption, was postponed to July 5, 1818, and again postponed to Feb. 1, 1820.

The absurdity of the final enforcement is strikingly shown by reference to the pittance of specie in the Bank of England, which is quoted by Mr. Tooke, in his book "on prices," as being:

October, 1817	£11,914,000
February, 1818	10,055,460
Aug. 31, 1818	6,363,160
Feb. 27, 1819	4,184,000

The same author gives the following table, approximating the movement of available currency:

Years.	Bank Notes.	Bank of England Discounts.	Total.
1815	£46,272,650	£20,660,694	£69,933,344
1816	42,109,620	11,182,109	53,291,729
1817	40,294,900	6,501,392	46,802,292
1818	48,278,070	6,113,748	53,391,818
1819	40,928,428	6,421,402	47,349,880
1820	34,145,395	4,672,123	38,817,518
1821	30,727,630	2,722,587	33,450,217
1822	26,888,600	3,622,161	30,230,781
1823	27,398,544	5,624,698	33,021,242
1824	32,761,152	6,655,343	39,416,495
1825	41,049,298	7,691,464	48,741,762

With these figures at hand for reference, the reader can more intelligently study the annexed utterances of prominent witnesses of, and actors in the dreadful tragedies of those times.

The "British Annual Register" for 1830, in a condensed statement of the arguments of Mathias Atwood and Alexander Baring (afterwards Lord Palmerston), in Parliament, says:

> In 1816 the first effort was made to return to the gold currency, but the difficulty was to find the gold, for it had been taken to the continent during the war, where it was at one time purchased at £5 12s. an ounce.
>
> In 1819 an act of Parliament was passed, by which the Bank of England was obliged to retire its notes in gold, valued at £3 17s. 10½d. an ounce (on and after Feb. 1, 1820). We could not, however, get back the gold without altering and raising the value of the paper money which we gave in exchange for it, which was done by a great and rapid contraction of the currency.
>
> The consequence was that general ruin and unheard-of suffering were experienced by the productive and manufacturing classes throughout the empire, while the capitalists were proportionately enriched.
>
> We, then, in some degree, retraced our steps. We expanded the currency and postponed the resumption of cash payments, and the prosperity of 1818 was the consequence.
>
> The intense suffering of 1820, '21 and '22, at length forced a measure of relief from the Government, and which was effected by a prolongation in the last of these years, for ten years longer, of the right to issue notes below £5, then on the point of expiring in terms of the act of 1819.
>
> When the banks, by the act of 1822, were allowed to continue small notes in their issues, prosperity returned, in so much that in opening the session of 1825 the King told the Parliament the country had never been so prosperous.
>
> At the close of that year the country was in a woful state of distress, occasioned by the contraction of currency by £3,500,000, between March and December, in consequence of the drain of gold which had set in from South America; and the crisis was only surmounted by the sudden issue of £6,000,000 additional notes in the last of these months.

In summarizing these events, Sir Archibald Alison, the historian, deduces the following important lessons:

> To make paper plentiful when gold is plentiful, and paper scarce when gold is scarce, is not only a dangerous system at all times, and under all circumstances, but is precisely the reverse of what should be established. It alternately aggravates the dangers arising from over-speculation, and the distress consequent on over-contraction.
>
>
> If gold can only be retained when exchanges become adverse, by strangling industry, starving the country, and so lowering the prices of the produce of every species of industry, the remedy is worse than the disease. Gold is a very good thing, and necessary for foreign use, but it is not worth purchasing by the ruin of the country.—New York Advocate.

John Sherman's Defense.

We find in some of the Western journals a Washington telegram, according to which Secretary Sherman promises that he will prove James E. Anderson to be a liar and a cheat. Thus Mr. Sherman proposes, as we are told, to meet the case made against him on the first day of the Potter committee's investigation.

We suggest to Mr. Sherman that such a line of defense must prove entirely inadequate. It will be in vain for him to impeach the character or credibility of Anderson. All evidence on that subject will be irrelevant to Mr. Sherman's case. Proving Anderson to be the worst man in the world will not in the least diminish the force of the evidence introduced on the first day of the investigation. That evidence fully establishes the charge against Mr. Sherman; and the witness from whom it proceeds is no other than John Sherman himself.

The first part of this evidence is the following letter, bearing Mr. Sherman's signature:

> NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 20, 1876.
> GENTLEMEN: Your note of even date has just been received. Neither Mr. Hayes, myself, the gentlemen who accompany me or the country at large can ever forget the obligations under which you will have placed us, should you stand firm in the position you have taken. From a long and intimate acquaintance with Gov. Hayes, I am justified in assuming responsibility for promises made, and will guarantee that you shall be provided for as soon after the 4th of March as may be practicable, and in such manner as will enable you both to leave Louisiana should you deem it necessary. Very truly yours,
>
> JOHN SHERMAN.
> Mr. D. A. Weber and James E. Anderson.

Mr. Sherman appeared before Mr. Potter's committee to testify respecting this letter. He was sworn, the letter was put into his hands, and he was interrogated about it. To the question whether he ever wrote such a letter, he replied by declining to swear that he had never written it. He declined to say that there was anything in it that he could not have written; but he avowed that "there are things in this letter that I would have written." While he thus refused to deny positively that he had written it, his verbiage and elaborate phrases involved an admission that the letter was really his; and this is the judgment of all fair-minded people, Republicans as well as others.

Now, this is the testimony that establishes the case against Mr. Sherman. It is made up of his own statement under oath, equivalent to a confession that this letter is really his, and of the letter itself proposing to Weber and Anderson that they should not expose the false character of certain fraudulent documents, which document were indispensable to the counting in of Rutherford B. Hayes as President of the United States. Such is the evidence, proceeding from himself, which Mr. Sherman has to confront, and no charges or proof in regard to other subjects, brought against James E. Anderson or any other individual, can affect this evidence one jot or tittle.

This letter, with Mr. Sherman's sworn statement concerning it, settles the fact that he was concerned in a conspiracy to make Rutherford B. Hayes President, when Samuel J. Tilden had been elected; and that with a view of consummating that conspiracy he promised to the agents whom he used that, through appointments to office, or through other means within the power of the Federal administration, they should be rewarded for their services by being "provided for as soon after the 4th of March as may be practicable, and in such manner as will enable you both to leave Louisiana should you deem it necessary."

By no afterthought and by no device of his fertile cunning can Mr. Sherman overthrow this evidence given by himself.—New York Sun.

Hayes Personally Involved.

We were bitterly disappointed when Secretary Sherman did not deny writing the alleged letter, as we had reason to expect he would. And, while we have not the remotest thought that President Hayes has been involved in such matters, he ought to know that the persistent and abundant favor he has shown to men who were conspicuous in the doubtful political transactions of 1876 has lowered him in the general esteem, and robbed him of the respect and confidence of the best men in the country.

He has deliberately and continually used the Federal patronage to reward and honor men the whole country knows to be disreputable; whom he knows, in common with everybody else, to be tainted with the disgraceful maladministration in the Southern States; whom he could not have thought of appointing or retaining in office if he had sought persons of unblemished character and reputation, and to whom everybody sees he extends his favor for no other reason than that they helped, by dubious means, to raise him to the Presidency.

Grant that Messrs. Noyes, Stoughton and Kasson were proper objects of Presidential favor; surely the same thing cannot be said of Kellogg, whom Mr. Hayes' friends allowed to get another man's seat in the Senate; or of Packard, whom he has made Consul to Liverpool; or of Madison Wells, whom he has retained in office at New Orleans; or of Anderson, whom he has made virtual Collector of that port; or of Wharton, whom he made Marshal of Louisiana; or of Stearns, whom he made Commissioner to the Hot Springs; or of McLin, whom he made Judge in New Mexico; or of Cowgill, whom he made Marshal in Florida; or of George L. Smith, whom he made Collector of New Orleans, because he was the friend of Anderson and was satisfactory to Madison Wells; or of Hugh Campbell, whom he made Attorney of a Western Territory; or of Marks, a Louisiana elector, who was made Collector of Internal Revenue at the same time that he was subpœnaed by Republicans to testify before the Potter committee; or of Govin, concerned in doubtful election matters in Florida, whom he made Consul; or of a multitude of other men, petty politicians of damaged reputations in Louisiana and Florida, who are stuffed into Custom Houses and Washington bureaus, so that every step in the Potter inquiry turns up some new man of the ill omened crowd who has been "taken care of."

If he had been conscious of the frauds which are now coming to light, he could hardly have more zealously "taken care of" the persons concerned in them. The forgery of electoral certificates and the other dirty and disgusting crimes of reckless carpet-baggers do not seriously affect the good name of the country. But when men intimately associated with the authors of these crimes, their partners and allies, are persistently rewarded by the President, the people have a right to be offended and indignant.—New York Herald, Independent.

Spanish Stories.

Some of the old Spanish tales are cleverly told. A certain knave once saw a parson putting up money in his pouch, and followed afar off. The parson stopped to talk with a friend near the shop of an embroiderer who had a chasuble hanging up before the door. Into this shop entered the knave and bartered for the raiment, but wished, before paying, to see how it would look on a priest. Just then, in the nick of time, the parson, having parted with his friend, came by.

"Reverend sir," quoth the rogue, "be good enough to enter and try on this garment."

The parson, with his purse hanging to his girdle, entered, and, with much charity, put on the chasuble. Taking advantage of a favorable moment, the knave seized the purse and ran down the street, followed closely by the priest. After him ran the embroiderer, well assured that all was but an artifice to rob him of the raiment. The fat ecclesiastic was soon caught by the embroiderer, but, while the merchant was examining him as to his complicity, the thief escaped. This story, which was popular in its time, is told by various authors, and is termed by one of them a diabolical device.

Another story has for its hero a rich old man who was jealous of his young and pretty wife. Falling sick in due time, and feeling himself about to die, he summoned his wife to his bedside and besought her, as a last favor, with tears in his poor old eyes, not to marry the object of his jealousy, a neighbor, when he was gone.

"I will not," said the dutiful woman; "I will not, my dear husband; be in no concern for him; nay, I could not, for I have for some years past been engaged to another!"

Of course, wives of this kind are not to be found in existence nowadays.

A Genuine Negro Song.

A clear, ringing blast on a horn told me it was time for service, and I settled down more comfortably to listen patiently till the singing should begin in the little negro church hard by. They were praying now. I could hear them distinctly. The words were recited in a shrill, high key, almost as musical as their songs; for they cannot speak in public without falling into this singsong, chant-like voice. Then all was still again; but after a few minutes, as I sat watching the fireflies, I heard the sudden rush of voices,

Softening with Afric's mellow tongue
Their broken Saxon words,

singing these words:

Watch dat sun, see how she run,
If you don't mind, she'll catch you wid your work undone!
True believer, run home, run home,
For the sun dun rose,
And, I don't want to stay here no longer!

Sister, better mind how you step on de cross,
For your foot might slip an' your soul git loss.
CHORUS—True believer, etc.

Some goes to church to make a mock of God's works,
But dey don't know nothing 'bout a Christian's life.
CHORUS—True believer, etc.

Come along, Moses, come along cross,
Smote de water, an' don't git loss.
CHORUS—True believer, etc.

Stan' back, Moses, way in de north,
And let God's children walk on de cross.
CHORUS—True believer, etc.

Stan' back, Moses, way in de east,
An' let God's children hab some peace.
CHORUS—True believer, etc.

Stan' back, Moses, way in de west,
An' let God's children hab some rest.
CHORUS—True believer, etc.

Stan' back, Moses, way in de south,
An' let God's children hab a shout.
CHORUS—True believer, etc.

Raw Oysters as Food.

The oyster is a species of food combining the most precious alimentary qualities. Its meat is soft, firm and delicate. It has sufficient flavor to please the taste, but not enough to excite to surfeit. Through a quality peculiar to itself it favors the intestinal and gastric absorption; mixing easily with other food, and assimilating with the juices of the stomach, it aids and favors the digestive functions. There is no alimentary substance, not even excepting bread, which does not produce indigestion under certain given circumstances, but raw oysters never. This is a homage due to them. They may be eaten to-day, to-morrow, forever, in profusion; indigestion is not to be feared, and we may be certain that no doctor was ever called in through their fault.

Of course we except cooked oysters. Beside their valuable digestive qualities, oysters supply a recipe not to be despised in the liquor they contain. It is produced by the sea water they have swallowed, but which, having been digested, has lost the peculiar bitterness of salt water. The oyster water is limpid, and slightly saline in taste. Far from being purgative, like sea water, it promotes digestion. It keeps the oysters themselves fresh, prolongs their life for some time, until it is destroyed in our stomachs, or until the oyster has been transformed into a portion of ourselves.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Success of the Great Exposition—Agriculture, Machinery and Education—America's Pet Exhibits.

[Paris Cor. New York Herald.]

That portion of the press which sneered at the Exhibition is silenced by its immense pecuniary success and the increasing interest in it. It is funny enough to see this fighting nation with its Temple of Peace open, when Austria, which held the last great world show, is getting up a make-believe of belligerent preparation.

The Bonapartists, who still wish to speak depreciatingly of the Exhibition, and point to the fact that there have been no sovereigns to see it as there were at that of 1867, when Austria, Russia, Turkey, Egypt and other countries sent their monarchs, are answered by the Republicans, who triumphantly point to the Shah of Persia. His Majesty is not much to brag of in the regal line, but he is still a curiosity.

Apropos of the Shah, it is said that some smart New York operators have been trying to get his diamonds. Notwithstanding the strong guard of police, on Wednesday evening, at 9 o'clock, a fire broke out in his apartment at the Grand Hotel. Next day several fast New York men who had been staying at the hotel disappeared for parts unknown. Everything "smart" in this way being attributed here to Yankees, the inference is plain.

Our agricultural collection at the Exhibition is eliciting a high meed of praise on all sides. The specimen machines are superbly got up in expensive woods, with silver plating prodigally lavished upon them. A number of bales of superior cotton have just arrived from New Orleans.

The American educational exhibit is now completed, and its installation has been arranged with reference to artistic effect as well as to a scientific classification of the material. Two sides of the exhibit are occupied by the finest specimens of our school architecture of all grades. The other two sides are taken up with graphic illustrations, comprising maps and charts, astronomical and other drawings. The fine collective exhibition from Washington occupies the center, and embraces a model of a school-house, reports, text-books, views and plans of all the school-houses, and 1,000 specimens of work by scholars of all classes. The National Bureau of Education has sent reports and documents, and the catalogues of 138 libraries in the United States. A word of praise is due to Mr. Philbrick, the director.

Already the international juries have begun their work, and exhibitors are all agog for the good words of these worthies. Until the close of the Exhibition we may expect to hear of much intriguing and pipe-laying for these certificates of award of which the public afterward learns so much through the advertising columns of the newspapers.

The Vice Presidency of the second group having, under the French regulations, been awarded to the United States, Commissioner McCormick has designated President White, of Cornell University, for the position. The Americans have also secured the Presidency of class 54, on machines and apparatus in general, and class 55, on machine tools. Prof. George Davidson, of the Coast Survey, has been selected for the former and Mr. Charles B. Goodman for the latter.

Commissioner McCormick has had considerable trouble with the jury list. Many of the original appointees have resigned, some having been called to America, others being unwilling to serve without compensation. The English have similar trouble with their jurors. There is excellent harmony between the English and American sections.

Little Danny and His Dead Mother.

I've just been down in the parlor to see mamma. She's in a long box, with flowers on her. I wish she'd come and bathe my head—it aches so. Nobody ever makes it feel good but mamma. She knew how it hurt me, and she used to read to me out of a little book how my head would get well and not ache any more some day. I wish it was "some day" now. Nobody likes me but mamma. That's cause I've got a sick head. Mamma used to take me in her arms and cry. When I asked her what's the matter she would say, "I'm only tired, darling." I guess Aunt Agnes made her tired, for when she came and stayed all day mamma would take me up in the evening on her lap and cry awful hard. I ain't had my dinner to-day. Mamma always gave me my dinner and a little t-enty pudding with "D." for "Danny," on the top. I like little puddings with D's on top. I like to sit in my little chair by the fire and eat 'em. I wish mamma wouldn't stay in the long box. I guess Aunt Agnes put her there, 'cause she put all the flower trimmings on and shows her to everybody. There ain't any fire in the grate, but I guess I'll sit by it and make believe there is. I'll get my little dish and spoon and play I've got a pudding with D for Danny on it. But anyway I want mamma so bad.—New Orleans Picayune.

Feeding the Animals.

The feeding of the animals in a menagerie is always carefully done, because their lives depend on the adaptability of their food. The Philadelphia Times says that the daintiest eaters in the Zoological Garden there are two chimpanzees. They breakfast on weak tea, with plenty of milk and sugar, and bread thickly spread with honey. They lunch at 10 o'clock on bananas and oranges, dine at 3 on rice or tapioca, served with sugar and sherry, and sup at 7 on rice and milk. The seals are less troublesome to feed, but more expensive, for five of them eat daily eighty pounds of fresh fish. Formerly, the lions, tigers, and other carnivora were costly, but of late they have been fed on horse-meat, which is very cheap. The buffaloes, deer and elephants live now on the grass in the grounds. The rhinoceros is the greediest of the lot; but it is quantity that he craves, without much regard to quality. He will eat twenty-five pounds of hay every day, and a bushel of potatoes is to him like a plate of strawberries to a hungry man. His feed costs $10 a week, which is as much as that of an elephant. The giraffe has to be fed carefully, because he has no regard for his long, narrow throat, and starts one mouthful down before the one before it has reached his stomach, thus choking himself. Common monkeys eat nearly everything that is offered; so do the ostriches and cassowaries, but some of the insectivorous have to be patiently catered to. The moose is hardest to please, and misses the twigs of his native woods.

The Widower and the Widow.

When Mr. Thomas Thompson was courting the widow who became his sixth wife, said he, taking a pinch of snuff and looking wise, "I will tell you what I expect of you, my dear. You are aware that I have had a great deal of matrimonial experience. Ho-hum! it makes me sad to think of it. My lot in the cemetery is almost full, and I may truly say that my cup of misery would be running over at this moment if it were not for you. But to business. I was about to remark that Jane, my first, could make better coffee than any other woman in this world. I trust you will adopt her recipe for the preparation of that beverage."

"My first husband frequently remarked—" began the widow.

"And there was Susan," interrupted Mr. Thompson. "Susan was the best mender that probably ever lived. It was her delight to find a button off, and, as for rents in coats and things, I have seen her shed tears of joy when she saw them, she was so desirous of using her needle for their repair. Oh, what a woman Susanna was!"

"Many is the time," began the widow, "that my first hus—"

"With regard to Anna, who was my third," said Mr. Thompson, hastily, "I think her forte above all others was in the accomplishment of the cake known as slapjack. I have very pleasant visions at this moment of my angelic Anna as she appeared in the kitchen of a frosty morning, enveloped in smoke and the morning sunshine that stole into the window, or bearing to my plate a particularly nice article of slapjack, with the remark, 'That's the nicest one yet, Thomas. Eat it while it's hot.' Sometimes, I assure you, my dear, these recollections are quite overpowering."

He applied his handkerchief to his eyes, and the widow said, "Ah, yes. I know how it is myself, sir. Many is the time that I see in my lonely hours my dear first hus"—

"The pride and the joy of Julia, my fourth, and I may say, too, of Clara, my fifth," interrupted Mr. Thompson, with some apparently accidental violence of tone, "lay in the art of making over their spring-bonnets. If you will believe it, my dear, one bonnet lasted those two blessed women through all the happy years they lived with me. They would turn them, and make them over so many, many times! Dear, dear! what a changing world—what an unhappy, changing world!"

"I say so to myself a hundred times a day, sir," said the widow with a sigh. "I frequently remarked to my first hus"—

"Madam!" said Mr. Thompson suddenly and with great sternness, "oblige me by never mentioning that cheap man again. Are you not aware that he must necessarily be out of the question forevermore? Can you not see that your continual references to him sicken my soul! Let us have peace, madame—let us have peace."

"Very well, sir," said the widow, meekly. "I beg your pardon, and promise not to do it again."

And they were married, and their lives were as bright and peaceful as Mr. Miller's sundown seas.—Buffalo Express.

Peace in Cuba.

Again it is announced that the Cuban revolution has definitely and conclusively collapsed. In the Havana Cathedral, Te Deums have been sung for the pacification, and there have been festivities in Santiago de Cuba. But it would be premature to affirm that the beautiful and queenly island will now enjoy entire repose. It has been substantially in a state of siege for half a generation. Its population has been exceedingly discontented for a much longer period. Its geographical position cannot be changed by any political event. The same feeling which led the United States, in 1848, to offer $100,000,000 for Cuba still exists, and, in spite of the vigilance of our Government, may provoke other and unlawful invasions. It is only twenty-five years since the Ostend manifesto declared that the island ought to belong to the United States. Since 1849 there has been a series of Cuban conspiracies, every one of which has resulted in failure more or less rapid. There was the memorable fiasco of 1851, which cost the adventurer, Narcisso Lopez, his life. Then came the outbreak of 1855. Then, in 1867, began the war which has now ended—a war of skirmishes, of guerrilla operations, of assassinations, raids and robberies. Since that time the mother country has sent to Cuba over 80,000 soldiers, and has lost nearly all of them; while more than 13,000 Cubans have been killed in battle, and nearly 44,000 prisoners put to death. The expenditures of Spain have been enormous; up to 1871 they had reached over $70,000,000. The amount of money disbursed by the patriots cannot be definitely stated, but it has not been small.

Bryant's Wealth.

Bryant was the richest poet America has ever produced. His productions have had a steady sale for half a century, and no library is perfect without Bryant. His "Library of Poetry and Song," issued by J. B. Ford & Co., is the only unsuccessful book connected with his name. It deserved a better fate, being a really admirable collection; the real editor, however, was Mr. E. H. Knight, of Washington, and Bryant looked over the work, and no poem was inserted without his consent. To this he added an elaborate introduction. The Evening Post has been a remunerative journal, and thus, between the combined profits of poetry and journalism, Bryant had acquired a property whose value is estimated at half a million.—New York letter.

The Louisiana branch of the Potter committee commenced their investigation of the Presidential fraud last Monday morning.

Senator Thurman has been interviewed by a representative of the Cincinnati Enquirer, and represents himself as being in sympathy with the financial doctrines set forth in the platform of the Ohio Democracy as adopted last week.

The prospect for another "breakfast job" is very good. A collision between Uncle Sam's boys and the Mexican Greasers is regarded as inevitable. The Diaz Government objects to Mexican raiders being followed into Mexico by United States troops, while on the other hand the Americans insist upon the right to punish the raiding thieves who cannot be reached otherwise. A collision may be expected which in all probability will result seriously.

A bill has passed the Senate, will pass the House and will receive execution, sanction, making greenbacks receivable for customs on and after Oct. 1st, and making them receivable by the Treasury in exchange for 4 per cent. bonds. (Since this was written the bill was brought before the House, and was defeated by the Ewing Democrats.)—Vidocq, Auburn Republican.

The following from the Enquirer are the facts in the case referred to: "It will be remembered that the House bill for the repeal of the Resumption Act was amended by the Senate, or, rather, the Senate agreed to a substitute making greenbacks receivable forthwith for the purchase of four per cent. bonds and for the payment of custom dues after October 1st, next. This substitute received the votes of so many hard money men in the Senate that when it was sent to the House for its concurrence, the greenback men were apprehensive that there was some trick in it, for the reason that Secretary Sherman, as well as the President, approved the Senate substitute. It was decided, therefore, to write Secretary Sherman, and request from him a statement whether he would or would not use the proceeds of the sales of four per cents. for resumption purposes. Accordingly Congressman Philips, of Kansas, wrote him two letters, asking that very pertinent question. The first reply was decidedly evasive, and the second, while being less so, was susceptible of the construction that he would use the greenbacks thus received for resumption purposes only. The greenback men of the House very wisely foresaw that such an interpretation of the law would act as a still further contraction of the currency, and they refused to concur in the Senate substitute, although it was noticable that nearly every eastern Republican voted to concur. Sherman is now trying to turn the Philips correspondence to a good political account. He has had the same printed at the expense of the public, and it is being circulated through the west and south at the public expense through the mails, with an explanatory affixed that, while a Republican Senate offered this means of financial relief, a Democratic House refused to accept it. Of course among the more intelligent greenback constituencies this will not have weight, but the object is to scatter this insinuation, unjustly conceived, broadcast, with the hopes that the tares may fall onto ground where they will yield fruit.—Sherman fails to add in this new political circular that, had the House passed the bill as it came from the Senate, further contraction of the currency would have gone on to the extent of the purchase of four per cent. bonds with greenbacks; and moreover, to state that had the bill been concurred in, he had made an arrangement with a number of National Banks to take the loan and thus almost at one fell swoop have contracted the currency many millions of dollars. The wisdom of General Ewing and other greenback leaders of the House in refusing to have this trick of Sherman's forced down their throat by passing the Senate bill now stands out pre-eminently.

That "Rag Baby."

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

It is grown to be a lusty infant. It is only three years since it was christened the "rag baby." It has had a hard time of it, to be sure. The Government that gave it birth sought to murder it. In the first month of 1875 it was sentenced—this puling infant—to be burned at the stake. This sentence of death is known as the Resumption Act. Every man's hand was against the poor baby. There were deeply-plotted conspiracies against it, as though it were heir to a throne. Some of the conspirators have repented, for the friendless waif of a few years ago is becoming a commanding youth that bids States and statesmen, National legislators and National laws, come and go, and the feeble wail of the "baby" is now the voice of authority. All men, apparently, were arrayed against the infant and orphan. It went unto its own, and its own received it not. The Bayards tried to expose it to the measels. The Barnums and the Eatons and the Kernans and the Tildens sought to afflict it with the mumps. The whole Republican party endeavored to strangle it in its little bed. All the powers of the government were summoned to its distruction and invited to its funeral—that was appointed by law. The tremendous Money Power of the country connived at its assassination. In the face of these obstacles to breath and long life the "rag baby" has done pretty well. It has survived all the attacks peculiar to babyhood. It is possessed of a strong constitution, and its life is insured for a large number of years.

In the abundant and choice vocabulary of—of certain persons, the money of the United States was but yesterday stigamatized by other means than 'rags' and "rag-baby." Men called it "corn-stalk currency," "cabbage-leaves," and the men who advocated it, because hidden in the doctrine of the year was a fundamental principle in finance that will last through all the years, were called "lunatics," "repudiationists" and other things. But that "corn-stalk" has become an oak, and the acorn planted when the greenback was born will not live so long in the "monarchs of the forest" that spring from it as the "corn-stalk" idea contained in the greenback will live in the money of the Republic, and in the monetary systems of the world. That "cabbage" has become a banyan tree. From the "cabbage-leaves" have dropped the thoughts that have taken root in soil unexpectedly ready. The corn-stalk or cabbage head in Ohio has dropped stately trees in all the Western and all the Southern States, has planted itself firmly in Pennsylvania, a great and powerful State, that has exercised more controling influence over National politics than any other State in the Union. The "baby," the true prince, the heir-apparent, has won a powerful element in New England. There are protestants in Connecticut, and there are zealous laborers in Rhode Island, and some of the men and many of the masses that have made the history of Massachusetts glorious are friends of the outcast of a few years ago. The Democracy of Vermont have always lived in courage hopelessness and in noble tenacity. They number about one-third of the voters of the State, but their vote falters not. This corn stalk or cabbage-stalk has dropped a branch, like that of the banyan tree, in Vermont It is there to stay and grow. Another banyan-tree branch from that corn-stalk or cabbage-stalk has dropped and taken root in Maine. The great reform movements in this country have been born in New England. The New England town meeting gave the Democratic idea of this Republic. The anti-slavery movement was nurtured among the New England hills and carried to completion by New England persistency. Currency reform is the only great reform in the history of the country distinctly Western. That element in our people that combines, more fully than any other section, the British pluck, the Scotch tenacity, the Irish enthusiasm, the Puritanical conscience, is enlisted in this great cause at last. The Yankee has taken hold of the question. We are at last able to carry the discussion of the issue to New England. The idea is permanently planted in the New England thought, in the New England argument and the New England tenacious conviction. This fact gives assurance, with others nearer home, that this question will not be settled till it is settled right. The "rag-baby" that was hissed at has been adopted by the country. The corn-stalk currency that was abused has stalked from the land of the orange and the palm to the land of the hemlock and the pine, from the Mississippi to the Penobscot, from the Lakes to the Gulf. The "rags" and "cabbage-leaves" that were doomed to death are now in this country to stay. We are proud of the "baby."

ED. COURIER:—I noticed in last weeks paper a puzzle handed you from this point, which said, "James took a back seat, how far would he have to go to climb a tree." In the first place I think fighting is no mark of a gentleman, nor do I consider myself the best man in the community, but I have never seen the need of taking a back seat. If the author of that puzzle will set the time, and place, I will meet him and there he can solve this puzzle. When a person writes for a paper they ought to give the truth and not lying slang.

GREETING.

In assuming the editorial and business management of the COURIER, we are fully advised of the great responsibility of the situation. We are equally well advised of the great amount of labor necessary in the undertaking; especially in succeeding an editor of long experience, whose qualifications and personal character have gained for him the confidence and respect of his patrons, and the people genrally, who have given their assistance in building up and sustaining the COURIER until it has become one of the requisites of many households in DeKalb county.

We come among you almost an entire stranger, trusting that we may be able by a strict application to business, and pursuing a straightforward and honorable course, to gain the good will of all. We deem it unnecessary to occupy the time of the reader in defining our position upon the many issues that divide public sentiment, it is sufficient to say, that the COURIER will be devoted to the agricultural and mechanical intrests of DeKalb county, and to the welfare and prosperity of her citizens. Politically, we shall faithfully and zealously expouse the cause of Democracy, of which the COURIER will be a fearless advocate. In county politics we shall be glad to consult with the democracy of the county, and will always be ready to entertain any suggestions that may be thought for the good of the party. We do not wish it understood, however, that we are here offering ourself as a personal sacrifice for the benefit of mankind, nor do we desire to disguise the fact that newspaper publishers, as well as other people, follow their profession for the money there is in it; yet, while we are trying to make the COURIER a success financially, we shall also use our utmost endeavors to make it popular with the public.

Having thus briefly met the people on paper, we await their personal acquaintance. THEO. REED.

Eliza Pinkston, not to be outdone by McLin, Dennis, Anderson or "any other man" in revealing the secrets of the greatest outrage ever prepetrated upon any people, now assumes a changed position upon the political rostrum and relieves her guilty conscience, in substance as follows: That she received $500 for her appearance and testimony before the New Orleans returning board in 1876; that she was carefully instructed what to say before the visiting statesmen, that, though entirely able to walk she was laid on a sofa when she was about to enter the chamber of the returning board; that her testimony was false; that her husband was murdered and she was assaulted, not by Democrats, as she testified then, but as has always believed, by colored men who had threatened to kill her husband, and that the quarrel had nothing to do with politics. She was brought by Republicans from her home in New Orleans, and instructed by them to pretend she was more seriously hurt than she was, and also instructed to lay the blame of the killing and assault on the Democrats. Next.

Local Politics.

In our connection with local politics as Editor of the organ of the Democracy of this county, we shall endeavor to avoid unnecessary quarrels and personal controversies.

Our object (politically) is to advocate the views, and defend the measures of the Democratic party to the best of our ability, rather than devote the columns of the paper to the abuse of individuals, or to our personal defense. Editors too often forget that they are publishing a paper for the benefit of their patrons, who expect news that will be of interest to themselves and their families, and not article after article of slander in pretended self defense. To our brother Editors of DeKalb county, whether Democratic, Republican or Independent, we extend an outstretched hand, hoping a speedy acquaintance and everlasting friendship.

Come and see us.

LYNCHBURG, VA., June 28 '78.

FRIEND TOM:—I thought when I left Auburn I should write soon after arriving in this part of the world, but on account of having been at work since, I have not been able to do so. We came by way of Washington, and were obliged to lay over there twelve hours, which time we put in "doing" the city to the best of our ability. Congress being in session, I spent some time in the House and had the satisfaction of hearing many of the most prominent members speak. They had a loud time voting on a bill pertaining to the pay of army officers, and it reminded me very much of a red hot Democratic convention. I was in the Senate for a few minutes but saw nothing of interest. Bayard, from Delaware, was delivering a "cut and dried" speech on finance to empty seats. What few members there were in the Senate were either reading newspapers or writing. We saw many other interesting features in and around the city, and took the night train for this place, arriving here about four o'clock next morning, upon landing we were greeted with many strange sights, sounds, smells, etc., with all of which we have since become familiar. The city has a population of about eighteen or twenty thousand, mostly negroes; is built in among the hills, and for that reason is not very attractive. It is, however, a place of considerable importance, and a great deal of business is done here, but it does not seem to have the business air of a western city. There are about one hundred tobacco factories here, and tobacco is hauled in from distances of forty to fifty miles, there being no other market. The country hereabouts is, I suppose, about as poor as any part of the State, although it abounds in beautiful scenery, and they claim to have some good farming land. Most of it is mountainous, the low, originally poor, has been farmed so long that in order to raise a crop they have to resort to guano or some other fertilizer, and very frequently the merchants, who furnish the guano, and take a lein on the crops for security, come out in the lurch. Prices for nearly all kinds of merchandise are high, and so are taxes, licenses, etc. For instance, a boarding house has to pay $25.00 State license, and $24.00 to the city. Railroad fare is four and a half cents a mile, whisky is said to be fifteen cents a drink, barbers charge fifteen cents a shave, and many other things are in the same ratio. Terms are cash, too, no such thing as giving them the "stand off." For these and several other reasons, I believe I should prefer to live some place else. Negroes are about as numerous as flies, they hang around every place and frequently blockade the sidewalks. Most of them are dirty and ragged, and I have no doubt fared much better while they were in slavery, but they seem to be perfectly happy notwithstanding their wretchedness. The lines are drawn strictly between them and the whites, and they never speak to each other in a roadway. They transact business together and no bad feelings exists between them, they are as courteous and polite to the whites as only negroes know how to be. The new bridge, when completed, will be an important feature, as the river is seven hundred feet wide, and at present the only means of crossing is by a flat boat and rope suspended across. The work, under the efficient management of J. A McKay, Esq., goes rapidly on, and if nothing happens, by the first of August Lynchburg will boast of having one of the best bridges in the state. The COURIER, with its budget of news, comes to hand every Monday morning. Without it, life in this place, would be always a burden. You may rest assured that so long as I am in Virginia, and can get it without paying in advance, I shall not go back on the COURIER. My attention was called yesterday by Mr Alex McLachlin, of Ft. Wayne, to a notice in the Gazette of your nomination for the office of Clerk." Here's congratulations, shake. Give our regards to the good people generally, and "write soon."

Yours &c., C. D. HARE.

The Daily Globe, Toronto, says: "On Saturday last a novel and entertaining exhibition, under canvass, was given in the afternoon and evening, and those who attended were almost unanimous in pronouncing it to be one of the most pleasing entertainments that has ever been offered to the public. At one o'clock a balloon ascension took place, when Mons. Gascon went high into the heavens, having for a seat a trapeze bar only, on which he performed some very daring feats. The exhibition was novel scientific and interesting in the highest degree. The optical illusions were really wonderful. Apparently living, solid bodies were transfixed with swords without injury; figures floated through the air or remained suspended in strange attitudes, and inviting chairs, when attempted to be sat upon, gave no support. The sprightly Siegrist Midgets went through a series of acrobatic acts that certainly have never been equaled in this place.

We hope the readers of the COURIER, especially those in Auburn and vicinity, will bear with our local department during our limited acquaintance. To be an efficent localizer, requires a thorough knowledge of the locality, as well as the names of the people. By the assistance of Bro. Mays, we hope to be able to render satisfaction in this particular.

We will regard it as a favor if the citizens will promptly report any items of news worthy of publication.

Our Candidates.

The ticket presented to the voters of this county by the recent Democratic convention, is one which, taken as a whole and severally, is beyond question, such that inspires in the minds of all an assurance that not only the ticket will receive the unqualified support of the party; that the party's interest will be protected, and if successful at the polls, the duties they will owe the public will be discharged faithfully, honorably and honestly. When there were so many good and true Democrats brought forth and supported with so much zeal by their friends, which is the best evidence in the world that they were good and true men, it was to be expected that some disappointment would be felt. Necessarily disappointment had to come to some. The party through its legitimate channels have spoken and doomed some to be disappointed and favored others with the honors of nomination. Our opponents ever ready to take advantage of the least ripple of trouble in the democratic ranks, are assiduous in their endeavors to magnify and increase these trifles of disappointment felt by the unsuccessful and their friends, but our friends can and do see the ulterior motive which is prompting these efforts on the part of the Republicans, and before election day arrives our party will be an unit for the success of the ticket, and those who are now petted by the radicals to rebel and revolt, will be our most gallant and earnest workers at the polls. Our ticket is composed of as good men as can be found in the county, so our party have proclaimed, and are entitled to the honest, earnest and hearty support of every Democrat, and one too of which no one need or can be ashamed.

Hon. S. S. Shutt, a resident since boyhood of Concord, is a farmer of large landed interests, and is in every sense of the word "a self-made man," having by his own industry and economy accumulated a sufficiency of this world's goods, and by his perseverance and close application, without the aid of academies or schools, is far more qualified than the average members of the Legislatures of this or other states. Four years ago he was for the first time before the people, and was elected Representative by more than an average majority. Two years ago he was placed on the ticket as a candidate for the State Senate in this district, with its thousand Republican majority against him, and although, as a matter of course, defeated, he did much good work and carried the full strength of his ticket. As there will be an United States Senator to elect, and other important legislation to be done at the coming session of the Legislature, it is important that he be re-elected.

T. C. Mays, the candidate for Clerk, although not a resident of our county so long as any of the other candidates is probably as well known to the people of this county as any other person in it. For nearly eight years he has been the sole proprietor and editor of this paper, and we have reason to believe his paper and writings were a welcome weekly visitor to almost every Democratic household in the county. He enlisted while under age and served a term of over four years in the Union army with courage and fidelity, and since that time has been identified with the press at Fort Wayne. His known energy, business capacity, quickness of perception, suavity of manners, strict integrity and personal popularity, will in the event of his election render him a most efficient and reliable officer in the clerk's office and court room.

C. C. Walters, candidate for Auditor, a resident almost from infacy of Jackson township, but now of Concord, a son of Esq. Walters, who was at one time a county commissioner, and one of our early settiers, is a thrifty industrious farmer, unassuming and unpretending, yet a man of more than ordinary education and mental capacity, and whose character for probity and integrity is second to none in the county. In fact none are superior to him in looking after and assisting the county commissioners in taking care of the financial interests of the people and the county. We anticipate his election by a large majority.

Daniel Gonser is a candidate for reelection as county Treasurer. This fact and the further one that he was nominated by aclamation is a sufficient guarantee that he is one who is peculiarly adapted to the place and the right man in the right place. Such an endorsement by his party goes much further than anything we can say about him. He resides in Smithfield when at home, has been a resident of our county twenty-five or thirty years, was county commissioner several terms and is a well to do thrifty farmer.

Wesley I. Work, of Butler township, won on the sixth ballot, after an earnest zealous and manly a contest as ever half a dozen as good, substantial and deserving men engaged in, came out the "Noblest Roman of them all" as the man who should be the Sheriff for the next term. "Wes." is a farmer and is now living on and owning the farm on which he was born, and is the son of Hon. Robert Work, a pioneer of this county, who was at one time an associate judge and a member of the constitutional convention which adopted our present state constitution. His qualifications are not questioned, his character cannot be improved and his very appearance and looks denotes energy, power and determination, and should there be any criminals to be looked after or hanged, no flinching or faltering would be found in his composition.

J. J. Latson, for Coroner, resides near Auburn on a small farm, having held that office almost "from the time that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary" and little need be said, save that by experience, he is the best qualified man in the county for the position.

J. J. VanAuken, who is on the ticket for re-election as Surveyor, has acted in that capacity for several years, and as a surveyor, engineer and draftsman has no equal in the county.

Edward Kelham, for Commissioner in the south-west district, has been a resident of our county almost twenty-five years and is an energetic, well informed and accomplished farmer, of Keyser township. And such may be also said of John Shaub of Stafford, the other candidate for Commissioner. With these two men on the County Board our tax-payers may rest assured that the same care, industry and economy will be practiced, which has marked these men in their private and daily walk through life.

We hope to refer again before long to the merits of our candidates, for we feel proud of them and we know they will never cause any to regret their selection.

Corrention.

To correct an impression relative to this office, we would say that Mr. Mays still retains an interest in this paper, and has only retired as editor and manager of the same. During the campaign we will have entire control.

Prof. Starr, in his exposition of spiritualism last Tuesday night at Ensley's Hall, gave very good satisfaction to a fair audience. He showed how mediums moved tables, how spirits untied ropes, and how deception is used to gull the people.

Another candidate for the kingdom. Probabilities of a cord-ial reception in the case of Robert Hilton who shot and killed Wm. Kennedy at Roanoke, Huntington county, last week. Hilton is now in jail at Fort Wayne to await his trial. Too much "bug juice" caused the shooting.

The Democratic County Convention held at Auburn, Saturday last, was well attended; and, although the Court House was filled to its utmost, yet the order was good and everything passed off "soberly" and satisfactorily to all—except disappointed office-seekers. We never attended such a quiet Democratic convention before.—Garrett Herald.

Quite a serious disturbance occurred in East St. Louis last Sunday afternoon between the city marshals, organized by the Mayor, and the metropolitan police force, each contending for the possession and control of the city. The affray resulted in two men being killed and several wounded.

Tom. C. Mays, of the Auburn COURIER, has been nominated by the democracy of DeKalb county for county clerk. Bro. Mays is a genial, whole-souled fellow of sterling ability, and his nomination is a compliment to the newspaper profession, and an honor to the democracy of his county. Hope he will be elected.—Lagrange Register.

While making a flying visit to Waterloo this week we had the pleasure of meeting Messrs. Best & McClellan, who very kindly showed us through their spacious and elegantly furnished law offices, equal we think to any we have seen in towns of much greater pretensions. The surroundings indicate a lucrative practice and prosperous business.

Congressional Convention.

By advertisement, the time of the National Greenback Labor Congressional Convention for the Thirteenth Indiana District, is changed from the 18th, inst., to the 19th of July, next, to be held at Kendallville at 10 o'clock A. M. for the purpose of putting in nomination a Candidate for Congress.

T. H. STEWART, Chairm'n, Com.

Kendallville; June 13, 1878.

Mrs. Nora Dancer, wife of Wilson S. Dancer, died last Sunday night, aged about thirty-two. She was buried here last Tuesday with the beautiful funeral services of the Catholic church. She leaves a husband and six children, the youngest only a few months old. A general sympathy is extended to the bereaved husband and family in their great affliction, for what can be more sad, more distressing than the loss of a mother.

—Roofing and Spouting put up in this and adjoining counties. All work warranted. B. GOODMAN.

Extra Inducement.

In view of the approaching campaign which will be of great importance to all who are interested in state and county politics, we will furnish the COURIER to the citizens of DeKalb county from now until the first day of November, for the very small sum of 50 cents in cash. In consideration of this greatly reduced price, we hope the friends of the COURIER throughout the county will secure as many campaign subscribers as possible, for which we will be very thankful. Remember that payment must be made in advance or the paper will not be sent.

MARRIAGE LICENSES.—The following marriage licenses were issued by Clerk Mess during the month of June: John Nauksaky and Agnes Yosnak, David Wasson and Sarah Foltz, John F. Thomson and Sallie W. Schnson, Henry C. Mann and Mary C. Felkey, S. M. Davis and Henrietta Heldebrand, Wm. Crooks and Queen Householder, Wm. H. Miller Louisa M. Houser, Wm. Vollmar and Josie Fisher, Wm. Walson and Mary Bissell, Andrew Bushong and Mary Barkey, Chas. H. Knapp and Clara E. McCullough, B. F. Sponhour and Catharine Butler, Jeremiah F. Davis and L. O. Draggoo, Isaac Livergood and Mary C. Thomas, Henry Schophorst and Amelia Kessler.

Butler Township Items.

—Farmers are busy harvesting.

—$1.50 is supposed to be harvest wages.

—Mr. James Hague has retured from college, to spend vacation.

—The Text school at Cedar Creek has adjourned for several week.

—The Winebrenarians met last Saturday and Sabbath Rev. Martin officiating. Rev. Burns addressed a large and attentive audience Saturday evening.

—We came very near losing John Harvey last Saturday. In attempting to hold a colt belonging to Henry Probdst, he was thrown against the fence, and was injured so that he could not attend to business.

IRONICAL.

St. Johns and New Era Items.

—Pay car came along Monday last.

—Wes. Work has his new barn nearly completed.

We learn that Philip Noel and Bill Farrier are candidates for Sheriff before the republican convention.

—We heard someone say that Billy Shryock would soon hang out his shingle some where and pull out our aching grinders.

—Callie Whetsel's school closed last Saturday. Davis Moody and Chas. Emanuel happened along and while Charley took the school marm out riding, the other legal gentleman amused himself by playing croquet.

SORIANAUX.

Pyle's Items.

—F. Metcalf has just completed his new barn.

—D. Obenholtzer is erecting a new dwelling house on his farm.

—Josiah Likens has sold his farm to David Steward, of Spencerville.

—Quite a serious accident happened on the old Altenberg farm, resulting in the death of a boy 11 years old and seriously wounding another boy about 8 years old. The two boys with their mother were engaged in hauling hay with a team of horses when they got among some bees. The oldest boy was trying to hold them by the bits and was thrown under their feet and stamped to death. The youngest was hurt by the upsetting of the wagon. S. S. S.

Spencerville Items.

—Tommy Fales is at home for a few days.

—For fear that we may offend some of our friends in this community, we would just say that the scene last Saturday night was a disgrace to any community.

—Married on Sunday, June 23rd, by Rev. T. Lancaster, Mr. Wm. Volman to Mrs. Josie Fisher, both of this place. Will has caught the big fish and the little minnows.

—The following were installed as officers of Spencerville lodge No. 422 I. O. O. F. on Tuesday evening last: D. M. Allen, N. G.; O. W. Rummel; V. G.; D. C. Butler, Sec'y.; Will C. Tindall, T.

—Saloons—yes, that is the name—drunken rows and disgusting men, demoralized children, miserable wives and disgraced friends go hand in hand through life. We do not profess to be free from faults, as we all fail to be what we ought to be, yet we have this to say in regard to the disgraceful affair on last Saturday night. Men who are depending upon the steady part of the community for favors, would do well to change their modes of doing business and to be careful in the future how they issue rations of demoralizing character. The disgusting row Saturday night surpasses "Leo" in its palmiest days. The "Mohock chief" executed the war dance to perfection Saturday night.

TOWN TALK.

The Star sells a fine unlaundried, all-linen bosom and cuff shirt for 75c that sells all over the town for $1.00.

Other clothing men keep pacing up and down in front of the Star Clothing House, and wonder "how" the thing is done,

"They can't sell at such and such a price. It's mere talk," etc. Still our people get convinced on visiting the Star.

Brother clothiers engage men to buy up our cheap suits for them; still they say we a e not offering bargains'

We again assert that we shall not sell our goods to merchants; our customers shall derive all the advantages of low prices.

Our sales in two days were $2,300.00.

All our citizens who study economy, quality and style, should inspect the stock of Sam, Pete & Max's.

An extra force of salesmen in attendance at the Star Clothing House.

As we have stores in all the principal cities in the west, we have faculties for buying that small dealers do not possess.

8 oz. Duck Overall for 40c at the Star Clothing House. They are selling at 75c elsewhere.

A German friend of ours who has the misfortune to be in the same business as we are in, stood in front of the Star Clothing House, threw up both hands, and exclaimed, "Mine Gott, vat a crowd of beoples!"

A TRAMP.

His Story.

BY NORA PERRY.

Tramp? Yes, I'm a tramp, and one of the worst of the kind,
Thinks my lady who peers at me there through the bars of her blind,
As I lounge in the shade of the tree here and greedily munch
The broken bread-crusts which she'd airily call my lunch.
My lunch! That sounds well to a man who for forty-eight hours
Hasn't broken his fast until now—now, while he devours
The broken bread-scraps that stick in his starving throat,
Which he cools now and then, as my lady takes pains to note,
From a rummy old flask, which she thinks she can smell,
From behind her blind-bars, as the vintage of hell.
They'd never believe, though I poured it out at her feet,
That it was only a draught of the ale that Adam found sweet.
Give her temples of chastity chills at this villainous sign
While through the window below on the sideboard, carven and fine,
I can see the decanters filled with old Madeira and sherry,
For respectable lips to drain, till the wits grow mellow and merry!

Well, my lady, I wonder what you would say,
If I should rise in my rage and tell you that in my day had toasted as fair as you in wine of the choicest and best,
And been of the rich and the gay a courted and flattered guest?
Believe me? No, you'd turn with scorn from my tale,
And send for the nearest police to lodge me in jail
For a lying vagrant and nuisance plying the trade
Of a swindler for the chance of a theft to be made.
And the police; I can see my gentleman's face
As the story is told—a tramp is a tramp all base
Through and through, a bundle of rags and of lies,
One begetting another, both stripped clean of disguise
In that sharp professional sight on the watch for a thief.
And I can hear my gentleman's voice, curt with unbelief,
As he stabs me here and there with a question or two:
Yes, a curious story, indeed, if it chance to be true!
But men so high in the world wouldn't let an old comrade dine
On beggarly crusts; they'd feast him on woodcock and wine!
Would they? Ah, my professional friend,
Your wisdom is not of the world of "the upper West End."
Of crime and vice you've a knowledge far beyond mine,
But of the friendship that lavishes woodcock and wine
On the man who's at odds with Fortune and Fate,
A poor, shabby devil without worldly estate,
Who has once been as high as now he is low,
I think I may venture to swear that I know
All the ins and the outs—and the outs, let me say,
By a heavy majority carry the day!
But 'twas never the way of the world to look back
For the unfortunate rider who slipped in the track!
Once down, he may scramble to foot as he can;
But the chance is, once down, that a luckier man
Closes in to the line and fills up his place,
And he finds ere he knows that he's out of the race.
So I slipped from the track, and the world doubtless thinks
Lost the race like a coward who shivers and shrinks
From the brunt of the battle, sneaking out of the strife,
For the shameless, sweet sloth of the vagabond's life.
Oh, my world, so you judge from your fine, airy height
Of respectable sin the poor, luckless wight
Who has lost in the race and drifted below
Your chariot-wheels—God! what you do know
Of the straits men may come to when flung to the wall,
Out of pluck, out of pocket—in short, stripped of all
That can give a man reason or courage to face
His fellows once more in the heat of the race?
You to talk in that virtuous, copy-book way
Of the certain rewards that are sure to repay
Honest worth and endeavor; you to preach and to prate
As you sit at your ease high in church and in state
Of adversity's uses and poverty's gains!
Oh, my world, let me say, as a fool for your pains,
And a selfish old braggart, you'll rank with the best,
While I—well, I sat with you once as your guest,
And I know you, my world, for your wisdom was mine
In those days when we feasted on woodcock and wine.
But since then I have tasted a vintage that brings
A wisdom denied to courtiers and kings!
'Tis the vintage that's grown from the vine we may call
The vine of experience, and bitter as gall.
It has shown me the folly of faith here below
In those fine little saws and proverbs that glow
Like a coal from the altar of heaven till the day
That we bring them to bank with their promise to pay.
There's that one about honest worth and endeavor,
With its certain rewards—well, perhaps I'm not clever
At counting rewards; perhaps I should find
My reward in my conscience, and thus go it blind;
But though I have kept this conscience as fair,
Perhaps, as my lady who peers at me there,
I am not of that sort of ethereal stuff
To sup on a conscience and find it enough.
Yet no epicure's feast do I hanker for now,
But that promise fulfilled, "By the sweat of thy brow
Shalt thou eat." A curse, yet a pledge, there it stands,
To crumble and fall at the touch of my hands,
Like the fine little proverbs I mouthed in the days
When, a fool, I fancied I knew all the ways
Of life and the world. Good God! did I know
That one day I should wander like this to and fro
Through the breadth of the land, a man without stain
Of a crime, seeking vainly that toil that shall gain
The bread and the breath of his life, his place
Once more among men, a chance to lift up his face
Unashamed to the light of the heavens, and the gaze
Of the curious world, from whose open highway
He has shrunk step by step in his terrible straits,
With the demon of Death and Despair that waits
For its prey, beckoning on and still on day by day;
While afar, in the life I had left, in the open highway
Of the world, men, my fellows, a brief space ago,
Sitting snug in high places, well fed, and aglow
With that wisdom that carries the fool's current stamp,
Set their dull wits to solve that problem, the tramp!
Not a man like themselves, but a "creature," a "thing,"
A nuisance to legislate over, and bring
To the test of the law, by which shall abide
This "creature" and "nuisance," they calmly decide;
So you gather us up, so you measure us all,
A bundle of tares, nothing else—O Saul
Midst the prophets!—O fool, deaf and blind!
While you fashion your laws for men, not mankind,
I, out of your world, ask myself if the Man—
The Man we call Christ—would have followed your plan?

THE MIDNIGHT VISITOR.

A Doctor's Singular Adventure.

"No one will come to-night," said the doctor, glancing at the clock on the mantelpiece, as he drew his chair close to the fire; settling himself comfortably in it, and planting his feet on the fender, he began to read.

The servant had gone to bed an hour before; the boy was in his dormitory; the cat and dog occupied the center of the hearth-rug, under their master's legs, in a strangely-complicated embrace, just as they had fallen asleep in the midst of their play, Buff, the cat, having his fore-paws round Nelson's neck, and Nelson, a beautiful young water spaniel, with his nose snugly bedded in the thick, tan-colored fur which had given a name to his friend.

The doctor laid his book upon his knee, and, taking up the poker, gently tapped and played with a large coal, through whose fissures the blazing gas spirted with a sputter and fume that in the deep midnight silence sounded clear and loud. He was enjoying to the full that sense of security from interruption which medical men so seldom have an opportunity of feeling. He had in immediate prospect none of those urgent cases which have no regard for time nor tide, and the wind that prowled in the chimneys and the heavy rain that beat furiously against the windows promised him security from all cases of minor necessity. So he played with the blazing coal, and enjoyed his comfortable fireside as much as a man can who has no wife to share it with him.

As the sound of the wheels rumbling along the street mingled with the noise of the storm, he gave an exulting poke to the coal, which left it a heap of flaming ruins; and then he nestled deeper into his chair, with serious thoughts of setting public opinion at defiance by smoking a cigar. But suddenly the spaniel raised his head, erected his silky ears, and uttered a short, inquisitive bark. In the next moment the doctor heard that the wheels stopped before his door. Pulling a long face that seemed to commiserate himself on the disturbance of his quiet, he sat upright waiting for the summons, and muttering, philosophically, "Put not thy faith in any sort of weather!"

Then came a ring at the night-bell, and a female voice that called from the vehicle:

"Don't knock! You need not rouse the whole house."

"I hope they'll make haste and come, then," replied a gruff voice, the tones of which carried with them a strong conviction that the vehicle outside must be a cab; "if I don't knock 'em up, I shall be kept waiting here for an hour!"

"There is some one coming—I see a light," replied the voice from the cab. "Inquire if the gentleman is at home."

"Here's the doctor himself, I suppose," said the cabman, as the street door opened and showed the figure in slippers and morning-gown that stood within.

"Open the door and let me out!" said the lady, impatiently; and no sooner had the driver, in his deliberate, sleepy way, obeyed her commands, than three light bounds placed her safely on the door-mat. She seemed young, but her thick veil effectually hid her face.

"Do you want me to go anywhere?" said the doctor, glancing at his slippers; "for if so, I'll—"

"No—oh, no!" she interrupted. "I wish to speak with you. "Wait for me," she added, addressing the cabman; "I will pay you double for your time, in consideration of the bad weather."

The door was shut, and the driver, divesting himself of his water-proof coat, which he threw over the reeking flanks of his horse, ensconced himself in the inside of his carriage to exchange his habitual dozy condition for a state of complete somnolency. In the meantime the doctor had politely bowed his visitor into the parlor, and seated her on the sofa.

"This is dreadful weather for you to have to come out in, ma'am," he began; "but I suppose the case is very urgent. I should judge from the liveliness of your movements that you cannot have come on your own account."

"You are mistaken, sir," she replied; "I seek your advice and assistance for myself, being at the same time in perfect health."

"I must ask you to be more explicit," said the doctor, quite mystified.

"To enable you to judge correctly of the case, I must explain all the circumstances," she said. "To begin, then: I have a father and mother, two aunts, one a widow and the other an old maid, living with them; a married sister on the other side of the street, and several grown-up brothers; so you may easily imagine what an overpowering weight of family influence can be brought to bear upon my individual will, in any case in which it dares to act for itself. Well, urged by the wishes of my family, and also, I must own, in accordance with my own inclination, I some months ago entered into an engagement with a gentleman who was a great friend, or perhaps I should say a constant companion of my eldest brother. To-morrow is the day fixed for the wedding. I am certain that I should not have made this engagement if I had had greater freedom of intercourse with other men, so as to be able to compare and judge of character. This freedom I have never enjoyed until lately, and the result of my observations has been anything but favorable to my intended. Daily I discovered in him traits of character which effectually destroyed all the romance of my predilection. But still I forbore to break off with him, consoling myself with the reflection that no man is perfect, and that I must expect to meet with defects in whomsoever I might take for my husband. I tell you this that you may understand why I did not seek to put an end to this engagement until it had approached so near to its completion. I felt dissatisfied, and wished that I were free; but it was not till this evening that I perceived in him points of character which excited my contempt. I need not explain what those points are—it is sufficient that I feel contempt for him; and, with such a sentiment in my heart, can it be right that I should marry him?"

"Decidedly not," said the doctor, emphatically.

"Then what course would you advise me to adopt to be rid of him?" demanded the lady.

"Would not this be a question for a clergyman or a lawyer to settle?" asked the doctor, gently, "rather than for a physician, whose skill is mainly directed to curing the ills of the body? Nevertheless, as you ask my advice, I cannot but give it to the best of my knowledge and judgment. It seems to me that you have one of two courses to pursue; either to decline openly to keep your engagement, or to throw yourself upon the honor of the gentleman. He could not insist on your keeping a promise of this nature if you expressed your wish to retract it."

"Under ordinary circumstances, and with ordinary people to deal with," said the lady, "either of these plans, or a combination of the two, would, no doubt, be successful. But I have already told you in what a formidable array my family can muster to oppose me; and they would do so, every one of them, if I were to attempt to bring such disgrace on them (for such they would all consider it) as to refuse this marriage, from apparent caprice, at the eleventh hour."

"In a matter so entirely concerning yourself, and in which your happiness for life is involved, I should imagine that, in these enlightened days, every one would yield to your wishes and judgment," said the doctor.

"The days are certainly past when a lady could be stormed and carried at the point of the bayonet," replied the visitor; "but an immense amount of coercion can still be used, of a kind that no laws can protect us from."

"Then it seems to me that your own firmness and resolution should supply the deficiency," said the doctor. "You are of age, I presume?"

"Yes," she replied, "and a year beyond it. But my being legally entitled to act for myself does not, as I told you, protect me from the peculiar kind of coercion which I dread. Do you remember the ballad of 'Auld Robin Gray?'

"'My father urged me sair, but my mither didna speak;
Yet she lookit in my face, till my heart was like to break.'

"Can you say there was no coercion toward the heroine of that sad tale? And it is precisely this kind of influence that I fear; and I fear my own strength to withstand it. On every hand I shall be beset with arguments, anger, reproaches, upbraidings, lectures, appeals to filial and sisterly affection, sobbings, sighings, and hysterics. My conduct will be ascribed to every motive but the true one, because they have seen no change in the gentleman, and will not allow that I am blessed with keener sight. At one moment I shall be told that I am a shameless jilt and an arrant coquette; that I crave so inordinately for notoriety at any cost that I can coolly sacrifice the most sacred feelings of a confiding lover, in order to become a nine-days' talk. And the next moment I shall be informed that such conduct as mine can only be explained on the supposition of my having formed some attachment so excessively unworthy of my birth and connection that I am ashamed to acknowledge it; and this kind surmise will come from my Aunt Matilda, my maiden aunt, who is so only because she was stopped when about to run away with my grandfather's valet. I should in fact be assailed by an amount of talk against which it would be impossible to stand."

"Then why not take the other alternative I mentioned," said the doctor, "and throw yourself upon the honor and generosity of the gentleman?"

"Simply because there is nothing of the kind to throw myself upon," she replied. "If there were, I should not wish to be freed from him. He possesses neither honor nor generosity; but in their place there are the most groveling deference to the world's opinion, and an intense selfishness. The first of these paramount feelings would prompt him to compel me to keep to my engagement, lest he should be sneered at as a jilted man; and the second would not allow him to forego his own pecuniary expectations for the sake of a mere woman's wish.

"I retired to rest this evening racked by anxious thoughts of how to escape him, and at one time the only means of escape seemed to be in running away with some one else; and, really, so great was my misery that, if I could have guessed at any one that had a predilection for me, I should have gone to him and asked him to elope with me. Then another and a better idea came to my aid. I had once, in play, stolen a latch-key from one of my brothers. I took this key, disguised myself in a suit of discarded mourning, went out into the street, found a cab, and told the driver to take me to a doctor's, resolved to state my difficulties to the gentleman to whom Providence or chance might conduct me, and to beg his assistance in furthering my plan."

"What is that plan?" demanded the doctor, dryly.

"Not to ask him to marry me," she answered, quickly, with a nod of the head that seemed to imply that she detected in him a suspicion of that nature. "I want you to give me some medicine that will make me ill."

"That is a dangerous experiment," said the doctor, dubiously.

"But one that I am resolved to try," replied, the high-spirited girl. "What is a temporary physical discomfort compared with the degradation of being linked for life with a man whom I despise? I know very well that there are medicines that will bring on all the appearance of disease; but I wish to keep on the safe side as much as possible, and therefore I come to consult you. Give me that which is the safest to take, and tell me the proper quantities; otherwise I must have recourse to more desperate means."

"Are you aware," said he, "that when the effect of this medicine is over you will be in exactly the same position as at present?"

"Not at all," she answered; "the wedding-day will have passed without a wedding, and I shall take care not to fix another. All that I want is time. Enable me to obtain that, and I am safe."

"It is a singular duty that you require of me," said the doctor; "but under the circumstances I do not see how I can refuse you. I will fetch you something."

"Not a policeman!" she cried, springing between him and the door—"for mercy's sake, don't fetch a policeman!"

"Nothing is further from my intention," he replied, quite unable to repress a laugh at her hasty suspicion; "I am going to fetch the medicine you wish for."

"I beg your pardon," she said, returning to her seat. "'Conscience does make cowards of us all.' I know that I must appear to merit a lunatic's cell, or a reprimand from a police magistrate; but answer me candidly—do you not think I am acting wisely and conscientiously?"

"Conscientiously, without doubt," said the doctor; "but I think more wisdom would be shown in refraining from tampering with your health, and in making a bold stand upon your right of free choice."

"It is very well for a man to talk of standing by his rights," she replied; "but you forget that I am a woman, brought up in strict subserviency to the will of others, and never accustomed to dream of possessing rights. The only thing that could make a woman so trained throw off her shackles and assert what little independence the law allows her would be the impetus given by a new affection."

"Then why don't you—" he began, but suddenly broke off and hurried into his surgery, muttering, "What a confounded fool I was going to make of myself! She may be a mere adventuress, for aught I know."

In a few minutes he returned to the young lady with medicine and full directions for its use, and also an antidote, in case she should require it.

Before leaving she asked his name and address, and put his card safely in her pocket-book. Then, with a slight inclination, she laid a folded white paper on the mantelpiece and requested him to summon the cabman.

The doctor listened with some curiosity, in the hope of guessing whereabouts she lived from her directions to the driver, but they were merely couched in the very indefinite words, "Return to the place where you took me up."

The surgeon returned to his parlor, and, with the air of a man fully prepared to laugh at himself for being "taken in," he opened the little paper which the lady had evidently placed there as his fee. He was agreeably surprised to find that she had proportioned her acknowledgments rather to the service rendered to herself than to the trouble she had given him, and in token thereof had left a ten-pound note behind her.

"After all," said the doctor, as he placed it in his pocket-book, "I don't regret having had my rest disturbed."

Two years after this occurrence the same doctor was suddenly summoned to attend a lady whose name was quite unknown to him, although there were tones in her voice which sounded strangely familiar to his ears.

"Have you any recollection of having seen me on some former occasion, Dr. ——?" she asked him, during one of his visits.

"I certainly recollect your voice," he replied, "but I could not have forgotten your face if I had seen it, and this partial recollection has puzzled me from the first moment I heard you speak."

"Do you no remember once receiving a visit, during a midnight storm, from a lady in black, who came to beg your assistance in avoiding a disagreeable marriage?" she said, smiling.

"Certainly I do—of course I do!" he exclaimed; "and you are that lady! I wonder that I did not recollect you sooner."

"I only wonder that you remember so much of me," she replied.

"May I ask if your plan succeeded?" he inquired; "or is Mr. ——"

"No, no," she interrupted, laughing; "I did not make such a mistake in the character of my former suitor, otherwise I should not have been so happy as I am now. The plan succeeded admirably. My apparent illness enabled me to enlist the sympathies of my mother and aunts, and, to a certain extent, the sympathy of all my relations. Then I contrived to show the gentleman's character in its true light. Their eyes were gradually opened, and liberation was afterward easy. My present marriage was entirely of my own choice, and, if it continues as happy as it has been hitherto, I shall have no reason to repent of it."

"Old Man Honest."

The following story is from the Golden Rule Pilot, a little paper published on the Golden Rule. It revives the story of "Old Man Honest," as Mr. Atkins has been called by some of his friends:

"There is a curious case soon to be brought against the Adams Express Company. The following will give some idea of the foundation for the suit: In the year 1864, J. A. Atkins, residing in Cincinnati, on Third street, between Sycamore and Main, on going home one night about 9 o'clock, saw lying in the middle of the street, at the corner of Third and Sycamore, a small linen-covered valise. On picking it up he found it required all his strength to carry it. Having taken it to his room and opened it, he found it was almost filled with gold, silver, and bonds. 'I was so worried,' said Mr. Atkins, 'over having such a large amount of money in my possession that I could not sleep. On counting it in the morning I found it amounted to a little over $100,000. Not wishing to retain what did not belong to me, I began to think of some way by which I might return it to its owner. I knew that if I made it known that I had found such a large amount of money there would be a large number of claimants, and I might be deceived into giving it up to the wrong person. So I just advertised in one of the papers that I had found a valise, which the owner could have by proving property. Strange to say, no one answered the advertisement until the eighth day afterward, when two men from the Adams Express Company's office called and claimed it. I made them describe the valise, and also give a list of its contents. There being still some doubts in my mind as to whether it would be right to give it up to them, I refused, when they gave me its whole history. It had been brought to America by an Englishman named J. C. Barker, who came here to speculate, and is now residing somewhere in Georgia. At New York, thinking it too much money to carry, he gave it into the charge of the Express Company, and, on leaving New Orleans by boat for Cincinnati, did the same thing. The valise was the last thing taken off the boat, and, its value not being known, it was thrown carelessly on top of the wagon. In driving over the rough streets it was jolted off. They told me that the owner was at the Burnett House, and was almost crazy over his loss, and that he would pay me a suitable reward. Upon their continued earnest solicitations, and having known them for some time, I allowed them to take it. I found out, within a few months afterward, that one of the men had quit the employ of the Express Company, and purchased a farm in Ohio. I investigated, and learned that the company had advertised a reward of $10,000 for the recovery of the valise. I had determined even then to bring suit, but was called away from home on business. On returning I was taken sick, and have been sick almost all the time since."

Mr. A. is now hunting up all the parties who knew anything of the transaction, and, when he has the testimony of all persons, will bring suit for the payment of the $10,000 and interest at 6 per cent. In all it will amount to about $18,400. Mr. Atkins is 80 years old, and was a passenger, this trip of the Golden Rule, from Cincinnati to Louisville.—Cincinnati Commercial.

THE LINCOLN ASSASSINATION.

Contents of the Murderer's Missing Statement—The Tragedy Not Contemplated Prior to the Day of Its Execution.

[From the Baltimore Gazette.]

In an interview with a reporter of the Gazette, John T. Ford, who was manager of Ford's Opera House in Washington when Booth assassinated Lincoln, made his first statement in connection with the tragedy. Mr. Ford said John Wilkes Booth was trained from earliest infancy to consider the almost-deified assassin Brutus just as Shakspeare immortalized him. His father was named Junius Brutus, and his brother is now the bearer of that same name. The great actor frequently appeared in the play "Julius Cæsar," and not later than 1864 three of his sons acted the three leading characters of the play to an audience that applauded the sentiments of Brutus to the echo. Now trace the assassination of Lincoln. On the morning of April 14, 1865, Booth, who had conspired for six months previous to abduct President Lincoln and convey him a prisoner to the South, was the last guest at breakfast at the National Hotel in Washington. The surrender of Appomattox had ended all chance for him to carry out his original conspiracy. He left the hotel after 11 o'clock that morning, and walked up Sixth street to and stopped at the Surratt House, where he met the widow who kept it returning from the religious services on Good Friday, and then in the act of going to her farm or country place, the vehicle to convey her being already at the door, to collect some money due her, so as to pay what was due by her to the Calvert estate. Booth, when informed of her intended visit, requested her to get some articles belonging to him that he had left at the country tavern, and then, bidding her adieu, he walked up the street to Tenth and down Tenth to the theater. When he reached there it was about, or probably a little later than, 12 o'clock mid-day. There he heard, for the first time, that both President Lincoln and Gen. Grant were to visit the theater that night. The private box was in process of decoration, and the White House messenger had been there an hour before to procure its use. I believe, and all reliable written or oral testimony confirms that belief, that then and there the terrible thought of assassination first suggested itself. It came like this: "If I failed to serve the South in my conspiracy to abduct, I can now be her Brutus." This thought fastened on his brain, led him to go from the theater toward the Kirkwood House, to have a conference with some of his old conspirators. John Surratt was away; O'Laughlin was in Baltimore, and Arnold was in a sutler's store at Fortress Monroe. They knew the abduction conspiracy had been abandoned; but Payne, Atzerodt and Harrold were in Washington. These latter he got together and conspired with them to kill the President, the victorious General, and some of the Cabinet. He must have written between the time when he parted with his conspirators and the hour he again appeared at the theater a lengthy statement for publication, excusing his intended crime by Roman precedent. When dying he referred to it for his justification. He gave, on the evening of the 14th, a package to an actor, directing its delivery the next day to the National Intelligencer. The actor confesses that he, frightened at the risk he ran, broke the seal, read the inclosed matter, and at midnight burned it. If that package had been preserved it would have revealed the declaration that until noon that day its writer had not premeditated murder, but, feeling deeply the humiliation of the South, to the people of which he bore all the love that Brutus ever felt for Rome, he would strike down that night the leading men of the victorious hosts, who were shouting the pæan of triumph. When dying, with his face lit up with the blaze of the burning barn upon the Garrett farm, just at the break of day on the morning of April 24, he muttered some words. A soldier bent over him and caught them from his fast-ebbing breath, first a message for his mother: "Tell her I did it, as I thought, for the best;" and then he said: "Tell others that the communication I wrote addressed to the National Intelligencer will explain why I did what I did." During the conspiracy trial at the arsenal Joseph Holt, the Judge Advocate, called John A. Coyle, then the publisher of the National Intelligencer, and asked if that communication had ever been received. His reply was, "No." It was, continued Mr. Ford, burnt in the grate of a chamber of a boarding-house, and a Catholic priest now living in Washington had the fact confessed to him soon afterward. I had the occurrence related to me, with the added information of the confession, by the party who was the custodian of the package. This fully sustains my theory that John Wilkes Booth had not contemplated the assassination of President Lincoln when he met Mrs. Surratt at mid-day, and he never met her again.

Why Gold Changes Color.

It is well known that the human body contains humors and acids, similar in action to, and having a like tendency toward, baser metals, as nitric and sulphuric acids have, namely, to tarnish or dissolve them, varying in quantity in different persons; of this theory we have abundant proof in the effects which the wearing of jewelry produces on different persons. Thousands wear continually, without any ill-effect, the cheaper class of jewelry with brass ear-wires, while if others wore the same article for a few days they would be troubled with sore ears; or, in other words, the acids contained in the system would so act on the brass as to produce ill results. Instances have occurred in which articles of jewelry of any grade below eighteen carat have been tarnished in a few days, merely from the above-named cause. True, these instances are not very frequent; nevertheless, it is as well to know them, and they are sufficient to prove that it is not in every case the fault of the goods not wearing well—as it is generally called—but the result of the particular constitution by which they are worn.—Jeweler.

A SUBSCRIBER wrote to a journal to make some inquiries about the next world's fair, whereupon the wicked editor replied that he was under the impression that the next world wouldn't have any fair.

THE FAIRY PRINCE WHO ARRIVED TOO LATE.

BY CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI.

Too late for love, too late for joy,
Too late, too late!
You loitered on the road too long,
You trifled at the gate;
The enchanted bird upon her branch
Died without a mate;
The enchanted princess in her tower
Slept—died behind the grate;
Her heart was starving all this while
You made it wait.

Ten years ago, five years ago,
One year ago,
Even then you had arrived in time,
Though somewhat slow.
The frozen fountains would have leaped,
The buds gone on to blow.
The warm south wind would have awaked
To melt the snow,
And life have been a cordial "Yes,"
Instead of dreary "No."

Is she fair now as she lies?
Once she was fair;
Meet queen for any kingly king,
With gold-dust on her hair.
Now these are poppies in her locks,
White poppies she must wear;
Must wear a veil to shroud her face,
And the want graven there;
Or is the hunger fed at length,
Cast off the care?

We never saw her with a smile
Or with a frown;
Her bed seemed never soft to her,
Though tossed of down;
She little heeded what she wore,
Kirtle, or wreath, or gown;
We think her white brows often ached
Beneath her crown,
Till silvery hairs showed in her locks
That used to be so brown.

We never heard her speak in haste;
Her tones were sweet,
And modulated just so much
As it was meet;
Her heart sat silent through the noise
And concourse of the street.
There was no hurry in her hands,
No hurry in her feet;
There was no bliss drew nigh to her,
That she might run to greet.

You should have wept her yesterday,
Wasting upon her bed;
But wherefore should you weep to-day
That she is dead?
So we who love weep not to-day,
But crown her royal head.
Let be these poppies that we strew,
Your roses are too red;
Let be these poppies, not for you
Cut down and spread.

SABBATH READING.

A Year.

She has been just a year in heaven;
Unmarked by white moon or gold sun,
By stroke of clock, or clang of bell,
Or shadow lengthening on the way,
In the full moon and perfect day,
In Safety's very citadel,
The happy hours have sped, have run;
And, rapt in peace, all pain forgot,
She whom we love, her white soul shriven,
Smiles at the thought and wonders not.

We have been just a year alone;
A year whose calendar is sighs,
And dull, perpetual weariness,
And smiles, each covert for a tear,
And wandering thoughts, half there, half here,
And wistful attempts to guess
The secret of the hidden skies,
The soft, inscrutable blue,
With gleaming hints of glory sown,
And heaven behind, just shining through.

So sweet, so sad, so swift, so slow,
So full of eager growth and light,
So full of pain which blindly grows;
So full of thoughts which either way
Have passed and crossed and touched each day,
To me a thorn, to her a rose;
The year so black, the year so white,
Like rivers twain their course have run,
The earthly stream we trace and know,
But who shall paint the heavenly one?

A year! We gather up our powers,
Our lamps we consecrate and trim,
Open all windows to the day,
And welcome every heavenly air.
We will press forward and will bear,
Having His word to cheer the way.
She, storm-tossed once, is safe with Him,
Healed, comforted, content, forgiven,
And while we count these heavy hours
Has been a year, a year in heaven.

Look on the Bright Side.

Is there one of us who does not sometimes need this bit of advice? Things are contrary. The people around us are not entirely congenial. Our worldly affairs are not adjusted to our satisfaction. The children are fretful. Our favorite book has been borrowed, and the borrower is a notoriously careless person, so that we know that it will come back despoiled of its freshness. The plan of life on which we have built seems very much like a failure. We are in some anxiety about some loved one, whose chamber of sickness may, perhaps, become the chamber of death. Some other loved one misunderstands us, or opposes us with caprice and temper when we are in almost childish want of sympathy and support. Perhaps our hardly-earned money, the accumulations of faithful and frugal savings for years, is gone, like a puff of smoke, or a breath. Look on the bright side? How can we? We are ready to say that the heaven is hung with gloom, the earth obscured, the onward path hidden from our view. We are in the condition of travelers in a mountain land, on whom, midway in their journey, has descended a cold, blinding, and impenetrable veil of fog. A step either way may be perilous, for it may be over a precipice. It becomes to our thought almost an impertinence, this sweet voice which bids us be of good courage, and count up the mercies, instead of mourning over the disasters.

Yet there is, if we but care to look for it, always a bright, serene aspect somewhere, always an element of cheer, and always the hope of better days to come. It is very seldom indeed that things are so utterly forlorn that they may not be worse. In our reasonable moods, we recognize this, and, however great our trouble, we can acknowledge that it might be greater. This is true, particularly with regard to calamities and afflictions, such as visit us and constitute events in life. These, it is safe to say, are frequently encountered and borne with rare heroism by those whose fortitude fails them when small worries and cares annoy and distress. It is amid the trifling, fretful pin-pricks of vexation and daily embarrassment that we are mortified by finding that the soul's armor is not of proof. Then we are resolved to see no bright side, and we are angry at those who try to present it to our view.

Quite apart from material burdens and sorrows, there is another region of life, in which at times there seems to be no brightness possible. "In the mid-silence of the voiceless night," have you ever lain awake, questioning your own soul, while the tick of the clock, and the echoing footfall of some belated passer on the street alone broke the silence? Ah! the mystery, the [illegible] which have blackened on you, and shut you in, as the tide [illegible] in some cave on the ocean [illegible] the thought of a swift-coming eternity has made you feel your own nothingness, your helplessness, and with what awe you have contemplated the hour when but a few failing pulse-beats should be between you and that vast unknown. Speculation, separated from faith, sets you adrift, a [illegible] upon a torrent, and you have taken up the cry of one of old, "Lord, what is man, that Thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that Thou visitest him?" with a chill dismay creeping over you, lest you should slip away from the ever-present care of God.

Some of the purest, noblest natures suffer from this benumbing paralysis of doubt, now and then. It is humiliating to reflect, too, that the tortures which visit the intellectual and mental part are often part of the penalty which an abused physical constitution exacts. The nerves are over-wrought, the brain has been unduly stimulated, or the stomach has been ill-treated, and then the body makes its reprisals on its spiritual tenant.

But, come from what source soever it may, there is a mute agony of soul, which we sometimes endure, and in which it is a consolation indeed to remember the Master, and His hard and bitter conflict beneath the olives of Gethsemane. At such hours, like sheeted ghosts, the errors and defects of the past revisit you, and life grows unutterably sad.

Is there a bright side here? Some poet has said that the [illegible] in nature is capacity for pain, and to these nights of sorrow there are corresponding days of joy. But the real bright side is found only when, out of the whirl of struggling emotions, the spirit casts itself upon the sympathy of Jesus. So strong, so true, so tender is the love of our Lord, that even as we cry, "Save or we perish," there comes, swift as our need, the answer, "Lo, I am with you always."

No subtler habit of evil is there in the world than that of self-pity. The victim of this form of selfishness is always surveying the dark side of things. If we choose we can cultivate in ourselves and in our children the sunny nature, as well as that which is ever bemoaning itself, and comparing its lot with that of others. It would be well for each of us, every day, when the trials press, to say, "But after all, how much pleasure there is here; how much delight there is yonder, and what a garden of glory is this beautiful world. Let me, at least, try to be as happy as I can."—Margaret E. Sangster, in Christian Intelligencer.

A Cuban Bull-Fight.

A citizen of Georgia has written from Cuba a private letter, from which is taken the [illegible] published in the Augusta Chronicle:

"[illegible] last Saturday afternoon at [illegible] o'clock, in the Consul's carriage, and insisted that I should drive with them to the large amphitheater known as 'Point Qua Mendos,' for bull-fighting. I went, but I do assure you it is my last time. At 4 o'clock a horseman, well mounted, rode into the arena and saluted the Governor, who tossed him the keys to open the gates; after which eight or ten 'teasers' with red flags marched into the ring, followed by two men on horseback, with long spears. It was not long before the bull himself, already greatly infuriated, cavorted before us, dashing about from side to side after the fiery ensigns and plunging at the nearest horseman. The story is one long and sickening; so, in summing up the affair, I have only to say that one man was killed. I didn't care a fig for the man nor his relations and friends; my sympathies were with the horses and bulls. Two steeds were killed by the first and third bulls, and one so lacerated by the fifth animal that it had to be driven from the ring, almost torn open. Then I was wrought up. I was mad with the Governor, Spain, the Spaniards, and even Christopher Columbus did not escape my ill wishes. Weak though I was, I wanted to fight about three Spaniards, although I was still weak from malarial fever. Seven bulls were tortured to desperation and then butchered. After the horsemen were through with worrying them, two angling Spaniards on foot, with barbed reeds, gayly decorated and brightly polished, would dance around the enraged bull, stick him in the tender parts of the shoulders, inflicting horrible agony into the poor beast's exhausted body. But the diabolical sport did not end until another relay of fiends would dance around and thrust into the quivering, dying animal sharp darts loaded with a torpedo at the end, which would explode directly under the skin, causing the most excruciating agony. The poor bulls, now unable to defend themselves against every form of attack which ingenuity could devise or human wickedness employ, would dash themselves wildly against the wall, endeavoring to wreck their miserable existences, or, failing in this, would run around the ring, looking piteously into the faces of the multitudes above them, appealing, in their mute misery, to the stony-hearted spectators. It was simply terrible. By the time the bloody sport was over I was nearly dead myself, and, although the day was very warm, drops of cold perspiration beaded upon my brow and chilled my forehead. Men, women and ministers of religion would first cheer the men and then the bull, and each unfortunate rider, as he was dethroned by the bull, would be frightfully hissed by the spectators. I haven't eaten a beefsteak since my visit to the bull-fight."

American Debts and Expenditures.

Mr. Edward Young has contributed some valuable statistics to Financial Opinion, the general conclusion of which is that the foreign indebtedness of the United States amounts at the present moment to £210,000,000. There were no national securities held away from home at the outbreak of the civil war, the only securities held abroad being some State bonds and some railway shares and bonds. An estimate of £10,000,000 is believed to be ample allowance for these ante-bellum securities, so it follows that £200,000,000 of the whole indebtedness has been incurred during the past fifteen years.

Mr. Young incidentally gives some interesting figures respecting the expenditure of Americans abroad. He estimates that from 20,000 to 25,000 Americans visit Europe annually, expending on an average from £160 to £200 each. The total annual expenditure, therefore, of citizens of the United States residing or traveling in Europe amounts to £4,000,000. This large sum, annually expended in Europe, is, however, counterbalanced in part by the expenditures of foreigners in the United States, on business or for pleasure, and in part by amounts brought by the large number of immigrants who make America their home. Of these two classes 4,379,413 persons have arrived in America during the last fifteen years.

The average amount of money brought by immigrants is stated at from £13 10s. to £20, and, taking this as a correct estimate, it follows that during the last fifteen years the aggregate sum taken to America by immigrants and other alien passengers amounts to £59,560,017—a sum almost exactly equal to the estimated expenditure of citizens of the United States in foreign countries.—The Week.

A $7,500 Dress.

Seventy-five hundred dollars seems a good deal to pay for a wedding dress, but that was the actual sum paid by the Countess of Rosebery to the London dress-making establishment that made the marvelous costume. For the edification of the lady readers of the Bazar we give a technical description of it. The dress, then, was of antique pearl-white satin, with deep flounces of the very finest point d'Alencon and fringes of fleurs d'oranges, and guirlandes of the latter beautifully arranged on the head, from which descended, to meet the flounces, a veil of the richest point a l'aiguille, artistically manufactured, of the point d'Alencon. The ensemble was perfect. The traveling costume was composed of a dress of blue sapphire velvet, trimmed with blue fox fur, with pardessus and muff and bonnet to match. The cost of the veil alone was $2,500.—Harper's Bazar.

A LIVERPOOL court recently sentenced a Persian dealer in curiosities to two months' imprisonment for assaulting his wife. He tied her hands behind her back, and, after also tying her feet, struck her twelve violent blows on the soles with a piece of horn.

MURDERED FOR TEN DOLLARS.

A Case for Jersey Justice.

[From the Chicago Times.]

No recent murder betrays on the part of the guilty wretches who compassed it more deliberate cruelty [illegible] craft than the sudden [illegible] M. Armstrong, at Camden [illegible] months ago. The party [illegible] on trial, his chief [illegible] son [illegible] Secretary [illegible] defense must be [illegible] and [illegible] rous if [illegible]

Armstrong's [illegible] business was [illegible] [illegible] known [illegible] Of late years [illegible] in [illegible] ventur[illegible] whom he had [illegible] life-long friend [illegible] associate, Benjamin Hunter, a manufacturer of means and a man of rich connections. Either by assignment from Armstrong as security for his indebtedness, which was not large, or by his own direct [illegible], Hunter held policies of insurance to the amount of [illegible] on Armstrong's life. In January last Armstrong was assaulted on a quiet street in Camden [illegible] beaten about the head by a hammer, which was found in close proximity to his body, that within a few days he died, and without recovering consciousness. The hammer bore the initials "F. W. D.," and, as it was known to the family of the deceased that he had gone to Camden for the purpose of seeing one Davis, with whom he was on bad terms growing out of some business transactions, suspicion fell upon him, and he was arrested as the murderer. His detention was brief, as it was soon manifest that there was no evidence against him save the circumstances narrated, and that he would be able to overthrow this by conclusive proof of alibi. The widow of the murdered man received a note from her husband shortly before his death, saying that he was going to Camden in company with Hunter for the purpose of meeting Davis. Shortly after the perpetration of the crime she sent her son to Hunter to inquire if he had been at Camden with Armstrong, but he denied having been there, and begged that his name might not be mixed into the unfortunate business. The fact, however, that Hunter held policies of insurance on Armstrong's life became known, and he was arrested on suspicion. He would have escaped, undoubtedly, had not Thomas Grahame, a young, shiftless fellow, who had served a number of years as an apprentice to Hunter when he was engaged in the manufacture of heaters and ranges, presented himself to the Prosecuting Attorney and circumstantially narrated the full particulars of the deadly assault upon Armstrong. As a witness for the State Grahame told this story on the stand last week, and if it cannot be broken, as it certainly was not upon a searching cross-examination, it will send him to the penitentiary for a term of years and commit Hunter to the gallows, or there will be little faith in the certainty of Jersey justice.

For several years after leaving his employment Grahame, though living but a few blocks from him, saw little of Hunter until December last, when he asked him if he knew Armstrong. Grahame was able to answer that he did, when Hunter, claiming Grahame as his friend, represented that, for the good of his creditors, Armstrong should be killed, and proposed that if he would undertake the bloody work he should have $500 for his reward. Grahame readily assented. The matter rested for a time, when the witness went to Hunter's house, and, asking for $1 on account, received $5. It was Hunter's plan to have Armstrong murdered at the place in Camden where the [illegible] it was finally made and the crime was to be committed during the absence of Hunter on a visit to relatives in Virginia, but Grahame failed, and when Hunter returned he found no progress had been made in the tragedy. He gave Grahame $2, and provided him with a hammer, stating particularly that the murder must be accomplished by its use as a weapon. The failure of Grahame to appear at the appointed place in Camden frustrated the murder for one night, Armstrong having been on the spot in accordance with what he was led to believe was an appointment with Davis. This decided Hunter to make sure of both his men for another evening, and the ferry-boat which contained Hunter and Armstrong, en route, as the latter was led to believe, to a business interview with an old enemy in the Jersey town, had for a passenger Thomas Grahame, who, in addition to the hammer, carried a hatchet with which he had been provided by Hunter. The story of the killing itself shall be in Grahame's own words:

"Armstrong and Mr. Hunter went up Vine street to Fifth, and I followed behind; Mr. Hunter went up an alley just above the corner and Armstrong stood on the pavement; I walked up toward him, and Mr. Hunter came out of the alley and said 'Yes;' I was up to Armstrong then, and as I went to hit him with the hammer it slipped and struck him in the face; on the forehead; just then I saw a light in the house, and my heart failed me; I turned around and was walking away, when I looked around and saw Mr. Hunter standing over Armstrong, who was lying on the pavement; Hunter cried out, 'Hit him, hit him;' then I ran away; I looked back again, and again saw Mr. Hunter standing over Armstrong, and then I threw the hatchet back of me and jumped into an empty cellar; I jumped up the other side and ran across a lot, up an alley, through a back gate, along a little street and into Fifth street; I then walked slowly toward the ferry; that 'Yes!' of Hunter's (he told me before I went over there) was to be the signal; Armstrong had on his head a fur cap; when I got on the ferry-boat I walked slowly up to the bow and saw Mr. Hunter standing there by the chain; he said, 'I finished him;' we sat down on the outside bench; he said, 'You threw the hatchet so far away that I had to go as far as from here to there (pointing to a post) before I could find it;' we went up Market street, and at Water street I asked if he had any change, and he gave me a quarter and I bought a drink; he said that we had better part there and then; I saw Mr. Hunter the next day; he told me to meet him at Girard avenue and Broad at 3:30 o'clock that afternoon; I was there ahead of him. As Hunter came out Girard avenue he whistled and beckoned for me to go out Girard avenue, and so I went out toward Fifteenth street; he then stood and talked with an oldish man at Broad street; I stood at Fifteenth street and Mr. Hunter came up, shook hands, and put two $5 bills in my hand."

[illegible] bills the price of assassination [illegible] has become so cheap [illegible] the service of another [illegible] works for nothing [illegible] by Armstrong's [illegible] the finishing blows, worked [illegible] cheaper, for, [illegible] ment danger of his [illegible]

It will [illegible] or of the defense to show [illegible] was the real [illegible] and [illegible] wering [illegible] with [illegible] his crime upon an [illegible] who was of his benefactor. As a motive for the murder by Grahame, the defense will seek to show that he suspected his pretty wife of an illicit intimacy with Armstrong, but it will take strong evidence to overthrow the impression created by Grahame's [illegible] circumstantial narrative.

Mrs. Bonanza Macker.

M. Henri Cernuschi's recent ball in Paris is said to have cost that Republican banker $20,000. His guests showed their appreciation of his hospitality by their magnificent toilets. The American, Mrs. J. W. Mackey, for instance, wore a dress of [illegible] faille, covered in front with jet embroidery, worked with the beads called "multicolore," and which are to imitate precious stones. The immense train was pink satin, almost concealed with old point d'Angleterre; her ornaments were sapphires and diamonds, but of unparalleled beauty; the sapphire in the center of the necklet was literally as large as a pigeon's egg. Her headdress consisted of red roses and magnificent diamonds, and almost at the top of her left arm she wore a bracelet, in the center of which was a single diamond the size of the largest hazelnut.

Story of a Deserted House.

A singular story is told of a deserted house near Haverhill, Mass. Twelve years ago an energetic young mechanic was engaged to marry a young woman of that city, and worked hard to lay up money enough to buy a home to which to take his bride. One morning he invited her to drive, took her to a handsome and well-furnished residence in the suburbs, showed her through the rooms, and told her it belonged to him. To her inquiry how he obtained it, he finally admitted that it was purchased with a part of $20,000 which he had drawn in a lottery. Being a girl of strict principles, she declared she would never marry him until he gave back the money, and, on his refusing, left him forever, and the house is still tenantless.

A Handy Improvement in Cooking Stoves.

The utility and convenience of a shelf attachment to the oven of cooking stoves is now universally acknowledged by all housekeepers, who have used or seen them, and it is a matter of choice whether the shelf is permanently attached to the side of the stove or opened and closed inside of the oven by the movement of the door. The Grand Charter Oak will hereafter be constructed so as either the automatic or permanent shelf can be ordered with any size. Our attention has been called to a circular containing a caution against the use of automatic shelves, issued by certain parties who claim to own letters patent No. 180,001, stating that they have brought suit against this company for infringement on said patent, and warning all persons not to buy or use stoves having such shelves and made by us. We have only this to say in regard to the matter, that we shall vigorously defend this suit, and have no doubt of our success in such defense, and hereby agree to protect each and every person buying, selling or using our Grand Charter Oak, or other stoves of our manufacture from any damage by reason of any claim said parties can have under said letters patent. As our construction of shelves is not only covered and fully protected by valid letters patent owned by us, but are acknowledged by dealers and all others who have seen them to be much more simple in construction, to operate easier and to be less liable to get out of order than any other kind in the market, and we will cheerfully ship a sample of our Grand Charter Oak with an automatic shelf to any responsible dealer or housekeeper who desires to examine it before purchasing, and at end of ten days, if it is not acknowledged as having more conveniences and being the best constructed, finest finished, most elegantly proportioned, perfectly operating and heaviest cooking stove ever made or offered for the price at which it is rapidly being sold, it can be held subject to our order, and we will pay all expenses. Respectfully yours,

EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING COMPANY,

STECK HALL.—One of the most charming halls for concerts in New York city is the justly celebrated Steck Hall, No. 11 E. 14th Street. The seating capacity is about 600, and the acoustic properties of the building are so excellent that they surpass those of any other similar establishment. Connected with this hall are the warerooms of the renowned STECK pianos, the manufacture of which was started a quarter of a century ago by Mr. Geo. Steck. These instruments are unrivaled for tone and durability, and have taken the first prize at the Vienna Exhibition in 1873, and at Philadelphia in 1876. The firm in full sympathy with the times offer intending purchasers every possible inducement as to price and terms.

WILHOFT'S FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—This medicine is used by construction companies for the benefit of their employes, when engaged in malarial districts. The highest testimonials have been given by contractors and by the Presidents of some of the leading railroads in the South and West. When men are congregated in large numbers in the neighborhood of [illegible] Wilhoft's Tonic will prove an invaluable addition to the stock of medicines, and will amply reward the company in the saving of time, labor and money. We recommend it to all. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & CO., Proprietors, New Orleans.

WHAT THE POTTER COMMITTEE HAS ACCOMPLISHED.

Never in the history of proceedings designed to unearth crime has greater success been achieved than that which up to the present date crowns the labors of the Potter investigation committee. It should be understood by those who would form even an approximately correct judgement of results to remember that the committee has had to contend against a corrupt and criminal administration, the chief of which is himself, the largest beneficiary of the crimes the Potter committe was created to expose. It should be remembered that every federal official who hold office by virtue of the grace of Hayes, from the lowest scullion who cleans spittoons or performs other services of a still more menial character to the most barzen villain that represents the government in the cabinet, or wears his crime scabs in a foreign court, each and all were pledged to throw every obstacle possible in the way of the committee and to do all in their power to obscure the tracks of the radical rascals who, in the hour of defeat, transformed forgery and fraud and perjury into lever and screw, and, in defiance of constitutions and statutes and in utter disregard of the anathemas of heaven lifted Hayes into power. Against these guilty conspirators and their guilty pals the Potter committee has had to contend. But the work of investigation has gone steadily forward. John Sherman has been laid out cold and stiff in his political shroud. He attempted the old game of bravado. He demanded a hearing. He gave out that he would "stand firm." He was called before the committee, and there he fell—a great lie stuck in his throat. When confronted with a copy of his letter he dared not deny its authorship, which in effect was a confession of authorship, and his friends led him forth a poor, self condemned, crime stained conspirator—a creature who bargained for perjury and offered federal offices as its reward. This much the Potter committee has accomplished, and the radical party realizes the indelible stain that has been fixed upon it.

The case of Stanley Matthews is, if possible, still more humilating. The brother-in-law of Hayes, he assumed at an early day the management of affairs, and at once placed himself in intimate communion with such despicable wretches as would do the most lying for the smallest rewards. This radical villain has been fully exposed by the Potter committee. He has been placed in the pillory, and now the people divide him, spit upon him and denounce him. Some declare that he is a fool, some a knave. All agree that he is a despicable conspirator; that he engaged in atrocious aggressions on the liberties of the people, and deserves the fate to which the Potter committee has assigned him.

The Potter committee has mapped out every slimy track of the perjured conspirators, located their dens, given to the country their most secret consultations, catalogued their forgeries and perjuries, and linked the conspirators and their crimes to the radical party by the logic of facts, from which there is no escape in time or eternity. Such a mass of corruption, such fathomless depths of depravity, such a combination of crimes, such interlacing of villainy, such a writhing, squirming mass of animate viciousness was never before presented to the horrified gaze of mankind, and still it it growing. It is a continental tumor, and as the Potter committee punctures it the sickening flow of rottenness deepens, and the radical party cries out "Hold, 'tis enough!" But the Potter committe is not yet done with the radical party. There are other scoundrels besides Noys, Sherman and Matthews to be brought upon the stage. There are other crimes to be laid bare. The weight of infamy that radicalism is to be compelled to bear is to be increased, and when the work is done the radical party will rank first of all the curses that have fallen upon this or any other country. So far the Potter committee has been a success.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

PROBE IT TO THE CORE.

Whatever may be the result of the Potter investigation, thus much seems already to have been demonstrated—that the secret history of the late Presidential election in Louisiana, at least, is made up of consecutive chapters of intrigue, fraud, corruption, perjury, forgery and dishonesty of every conceivable kind that could be associated with the subject. It may be impossible to completely unravel this bewildering tangle of political villainy, but enough has been exposed at the start to convey a just impression of the extent and nature of the teaching that has been tampering with the virtue of the elective franchise. The ramifications of this tremendous conspiracy extend no doubt into quarters unexplored, and involve the reputations of men as yet unsuspected; but it is bad enough to preceive, at this stage of the proceedings, that the highest in the land are indentified with adventurers, knaves and howling swindeler, in a plot to defeat the purpose of the ballot-box, and so to destroy the first principle of our nationality. No honorable citizen of this Republic, in the presence of what has been revealed at the very threshold of investigation, can any longer maintain the theory that until now has been accepted by certain classes of easy going people, that it is unwise to trouble the country with the agitation of this exasperating theme. Now that we have got hold of the tail of the snake and know how enormous it is, it would be fatal folly to let the reptile glide into its hole to come forth another time, and fasten its fangs into the veins through which runs the life current of our political system. It will not make much difference, perhaps, whether the guilty parties are brought to judicial punishment or allowed to retire to that obscurity which to most of them will be punishment enough; whether the Hon. So and So and his pal in humble life be sent to the penitentiary or permitted to display their brazen fronts before the public. But it is to the last degree important that the thread of the labyrinthine villainy be followed so far as the intelligence of our representatives in Congress can trace it, in order that the people may be made aware of the immensity of this treason against the body and soul of their most precious franchise and may take measure to protect themselves and their country against a repetition of the crime. We all know now, if we never knew before, that there exists in our political atmosphere such impurity that the spirit of self-government cannot thrive in it. Now has come a good opportunity for the Hercules of our land, that is to say, the sovereign people, to begin the task of cleaning the Augean stables. Let public opinion push the investigation to the very bottom of the heap of corruption, the surface of which it has already laid bare. If our representatives need to be encouraged, to be spurred, to be inspired in their present mission of tearing the mask from the face of the hideous Mokanna of our politics, let the inspiration be given, although it should be necessary to call mass-meetings in every city to express unequivocally and trumpet-tongued the popular will. We have full faith in the purpose of the committee to disclose the truth but it is patient that there are difficulties in the way of thorough investigation, and a special energy and absoluteness of purpose ought to be brought to bear to surmount those difficulties, so that the entire fabric of the conspiracy may be exhibited to the world. If this be done, there will be hope of the purification of our political system; the disease that has enfeebled it will have been diagnosed, and the curative process can be applied without having to recur to the heroic treatment of violent revolution. This may be regarded as a crisis in our political history than which none more delicate, difficult and important has ever happened; and we have but to do our plain duty in the emergency to pass out of the ordeal strengthened and redeemed from the greatest danger that has ever threatened our republicanism.—New York Weekly News.

Will The Army Save Us From Fraud?

If the advocates of a large standing army will demonstrate that the military power, as they would have it, can and will save the country from such conspiracies as that which is now under investigation before a special committee of the House of Representatives, then, perhaps, the value of a large standing army may be recognized by the people. It is the poison of the Borgia, not the blow of the insurgent, that we have to guard against. The American masses have done, are doing, will do their duty to their land, and from them there is no peril to the tranquility, the safety or the honor of the Republic. There is no tendency on their part to intrigue, to corruption, to riot or to revolution. The proof is that they are orderly and self-posessed to-day in the presence of the greatest outrage that could be done against their greatest franchise. They are subordinate, dispassionate, undemonstrative, though intelligently watchful, while the existance of fraud is being made manifest to them at the seat of government. The proposition to maintain a large and costly army, to compel those exemplars of good citizenship to be good citizens, would be to the last degree insulting to them, if it were not to the last degree absurd. But, what can the soldiers—the professional soldiers—do to protect the Republic against corruption in high places, against combinations of unprincipled politicians, who plot stealthily against the arch principle of our form of government, and put their men into the presidency by a system of fraud more dangerous than open violence? Of what service are soldiers against such traitors, unless to escort them, after conviction of treason, to the prison or the scaffold? We admit the Republic's danger—its great danger—but it is not of a nature to be averted by a standing army. In this, as in all other emergencies, the good sense and patriotism of the people will prove the saving power. The influence of popular sentiment, now thoroughly awakened to a sense of the outrage upon republicanism, will hereafter combat the tendency to political trickery, and establish such safeguards around the ballot box and such super visions of the whole machinery of election as will insure a fair interpretation of the will of the people and obedience to it. We cannot preceive that a large standing army will be of any assistance in the fulfillment of this important mission of the people.—New York Weekly News.

First Words of the Phonograph.

Oil City Derrick.

"In all that has been written concerning the Edison phonograph," said Grandfather Lickshingle, yesterday, "the first words uttered by the machine have not been mentioned. Mr. Edison doubtless has a delicacy in giving them to reporters, but as it is a matter of national interest, and as I was the only other person present in his work shop at Munlo Park when the phonograph first gave utterance, I feel it my duty to speak up."

"Why, grandfather, when were you at Munlo Park? You have scarcely been out of your arm-chair in two years," said one of the children.

Without seeming to hear this, grandfather went on:

"You know Mr. Edison worked a long time at his machine, and met with many exasperating difficulties. He told me himself that he often felt like kicking the blamed thing into the street. But he didn't. He worked away at it night and day, and when anything went wrong restrained himself as well as he could."

"When he asked me into his shop to look at the machine he had no idea it was as nearly perfect as it proved to be. He put on a new tin-foil, tightened some of the screws and things, and explained to me how he expected it to work after a while. After monkeying around it for a few minutes, he took hold of the crank and gave it a whirl or two. It gave a screach like a Comanche and we both involuntarily felt of our scalps to see if they were all right.

"Mr. Edison was the first to recover himself, and remarked facetiously that he didn't know it was loaded.

"He tinkered a little more on the inside of the thing, greased the piston or something and started her up. The first turn of the crank brought out a wheezy sort of a tone:

"Confound the confound thing to confoundation and be confourd to it!"

This confused Mr. Edison somewhat, and I thought he wished he had not invited me in. I could seen quite plainly that he had rather had it said something else, but he was at the same time much elated that it should say anything at all that he continued to turn the crank and the machine continued to talk. It was terrible to hear it. For instance:

"You blamed old fraud of a thing, ain't you never going to talk? Yer worse than the Keely motor, and for two cents Id's throw you into the river.

"What does it mean?" I ventured to ask Mr. Edison.

"Blest if I can tell," he replied, and continued to turn the crank.

"If ye don't talk before the Fourth of July," yelled the machine in an angry desperate tone, "if you don't talk before the Fourth of July, I'll smash ye with an axe and sell ye for old junk. Now, listen ter me," and it rattled the words out as if someone was shaking it. "I've fooled with ye about as long I intend ter, an' the next thing ye know ye won't know nothin'.

Mr. Edison was completely overcome and leaned up against a work-bench for support.

"I took hold of the crank and turned it, and the machine yelled at the top of its voice

"Holy mother of Moses, ain't yer never goin' to say a word! Here I've spent over $75 on ye, and still yer dumer than a rotten oyster; I'll put on some fresh tin-foil, file off the dufunny a little and give ye one more chance! If ye don't talk then I'll kick the stuffin out ye, so help me'—

"Here," said grandfather, "Mr. Edison implored me to leave the machine alone, as its language was a disgrace to civilization."

SWEET SEVENTEEN.

BY [illegible] FREEMAN.

How light her fairy footsteps fall!
The garden gate she gently closes,
And wanders by the blossomed wall,
While June makes mirth among the roses.

The burnished braids that bind her head,
With careless ribbon loosely holden;
Her friend Louisa call them red,
Louisa's brother says they're golden.

Unschooled in the maturer arts
Of picking all her friends to pieces,
Nor skilled to chain her lovers' hearts
With witchery of Love's caprices!

Lips that would scorn the truth to hide,
A laugh that's silvery and hearty,
The angel of the poor—the pride
Of every jolly Christmas party!

To flirt with poor old Colonel Chance,
And wing his heart with glances haughty,
[illegible]
It's nice—but oh! it's very naughty!

Then eastwards, when her waltz is done,
For fear mamma should scent the treason;
Poor innocent! condemned to run
The gantlet of a city season!

She dreams all loves beneath the moon
Are equal parts of truth and honey;
Leave her alone—she'll learn too soon
That Love's another name for Money!

Where is the nameless grace of old,
The spotless soul, the pure compassion?
Alas! is all the virgin gold
Untarnished by the dust of Fashion?

And she, a city season's belle,
Of slaves and suitors she'll have plenty,
And marry, if her world goes well,
A rich old widower when she's twenty!

TWO YARDS OF JACONET, OR A HUSBAND.

BY JAMES GORDON BENNETT.

"I wish," said Mary Ann, "I had two yards of jaconet. I want it very much to complete this dress for the next birthday at Richmond. I want besides a pretty large length of pea-green ribbon. I want a feather—a white feather—to my last bonnet. I want—"

"Well, my dear," said Louisa, her companion, "well, my dear, it seems you have never enough. Pray how many more things do you want besides?"

"More!" returned Mary Ann, "why a hundred more, to be sure," said she, laughing; "but I'll name them all in one—I want a husband—a real, downright husband."

"Indeed!" said Louisa, "this is the first time I ever heard you talk of such an article. Can't you select one from among your many admirers?"

"A fig for my admirers! I'm tired—I'm sick, I'm disgusted with my admirers. All come and make silly compliments; one says, 'Miss B——, how pretty you look to-day;' another sickens me with his silly looks; another is so desperately in love with me that he can't talk; another is so desperately in love with himself that he talks forever. Oh! I wish I were married! I wish I had a husband; or at least two yards of jaconet to finish the dress for the Richmond campaign."

Mary Ann B—— was a gay, young, rattling creature who had lost her father and part of her heart at 14. She was now 17; possessed a fine figure, rather embonpoint; not tall, but very gracefully rounded off. Her profuse auburn ringlets clustered negligently round a pair of cheeks in which the pure red and white mingled so delicately that where the one began or the other ended no one could tell. Her eyes were dark-blue, but possessing a luster when lighted up with feeling or enthusiasm which defied any one to distinguish them from burning black. Her motions were light, airy and graceful. Her foot and ankle were most elegantly formed; and her two small white hands, with soft, tapering fingers, were as aristocratic as could be imagined by a Byron or an Ali Pasha. Since the death of her father, which was a period of about two years or more, she had had many admirers, several decided offers, and not a few who had hoped, but durst not venture upon the fatal question. She laughed at their offers, ridiculed her admirers, and protested she would never marry until she had brought at least a hundred to her feet. For several counties round up and down the James river she was quite a toast among the young planters.

In those days the White Sulphur, Blue Sulphur and Hot Sulphur Springs were not much frequented; but people of fashion in Lower Virginia, the wealthy planters, were just beginning to escape to the Blue Mountains during the autumnal months. In one of those excursions the party, of which Mary Ann made a lively member, was overtaken one afternoon in a sudden rain-storm at the entrance of one of the gorges of the mountains. The party was traveling in an open carriage, with a sort of top resembling that of a gig, to spread out when a shower broke over them with sudden violence. On the present occasion the leather top afforded to the ladies a very inadequate shelter from the torrent which fell down from the dark, heavy clouds above. The first house they approached was, therefore, truly welcomed. They dismounted, went in and found several young gentlemen surrounding the hickory fire which was crackling merrily on a large, wide hearth.

A young man of rather modest, easy, but unobtrusive manners rose at the approach of Mary Ann and offered her his chair. She accepted it, with a slight inclination of the head and a quiet glance at his general appearance. Nothing remarkable took place at this interview; but a few days after, when they had reached the foot of one of the mountains, which was appropriated as the place of gayety and fashion, the young gentleman was formally introduced to Mary Ann as Mr. C——, from Williamsburg, in Western Virginia. In a very short time he became the devoted admirer of Mary Ann—was extremely and delicately attentive, and, of course, gave rise to many surmises among the match-makers and match-breakers of the Springs. At the close of the season he put forth his pretensions in form. He offered himself formally to Mary Ann. As usual, she spent a whole night in thinking, crying, deliberating, grieving, wondering, and next morning sent him a flat refusal. So this affair, which is a specimen of about thirty or forty she had managed in this way, was considered closed beyond all hopes of revival. The parties never again met till the moment we have now reached threw them accidentally into each other's company.

Since the period just referred to Mary Ann had considerably altered in her feelings and her views. She had pursued the game of catching admirers, of leading them on to declare themselves, and of then rejecting, with tears and regrets in abundance, till she and the whole world of young men became mutually disgusted with each other. Yet she had many excellent qualities—was a fast and enduring friend; knew as well as any one the folly of her course of life; but her ambition—her love of conquest, her pride of talent, her desire of winning away the admirers of her female rivals, entirely clouded and obscured her more amiable qualities of head and heart.

"How long have you been in Williamsburg, Mary Ann?" asked her chere ami.

"Only three days, and I have only picked up three beaux. What a dull place this is. It is called the 'classic shade'—the 'academic groves of the Old Dominion,' and all that sort of thing. One of the professors entertained me a good two hours the other evening with the loves of Dido and Æneas. I wish I had a couple of yards of jaconet."

"Or a husband"——

"Or a husband, either. I don't care which; come, my love, let's go a-shopping in this classic town."

The two ladies immediately rose—it was about noonday—put on their bonnets, took their parasols and sallied forth.

"For a husband or jaconet, you say?"

"Two yards of jaconet, or a husband."

The town of Williamsburg, like every other little town in Virginia or even New York, does not contain many stores. A shopping expedition is, therefore, soon completed. The two ladies sauntered into this shop, then into that, sometimes making the poor fellow of a shopkeeper turn out his whole stock in trade, and rewarding his pains by the purchase of a sixpenny worth of tape. They had proceeded for an hour in this lounging, lazy style, when Louisa said: "Oh! Mary Ann, here is an old beau of yours in that store with the red gingham flapping at the door like a pirate's flag; come, let us go and plague him for 'auld lang syne,' as Mrs. McDonald, the Scotch lady of Norfolk, says."

"Certainly," said Mary Ann, "but which of my old admirers is it?"

"Have you got your list in your pocket?"

"Not at all; I have left it at my grandmother's at Richmond. What a pity!"

The two wild creatures, bounding like a couple of fawns over the forest glade, for they were reckless of the public opinion among the old dowagers and staid maidens of Williamsburg, entered the store and asked for a sight of gloves, muslins and ribbons. Mary Ann did not seem to pay much attention to the fine articles shown her. She ever and anon cast her eyes by stealth round and round the store, endeavoring to discover if she recognized any of the faces as that of an old acquaintance. She could see nothing to repay the effort. Not a face had she ever seen before. She summoned up to her recollection all her former admirers. They passed through her mind like the ghosts in "Macbeth;" for, notwithstanding her rejection of so many lovers, she ever retained a certain portion of regard for every poor fellow who had fallen a victim to her whim, beauty, witchery and caprice.

"This is an Arabian desert," said Mary Ann, sighing, to Louisa, as she split a pair of kid gloves in endeavoring to get them on.

"Oh! no," said a gay young shopman; "indeed, miss, they are the best French kid."

"Pray," said Louisa, in a low tone, "don't you see anything in the back room of the store?"

In a remote corner of the store there stood at the desk a plainly-dressed gentleman, leaning over the corner of a wooden railing, with his eyes firmly fixed upon the two ladies now so actively engaged in tossing over the counter all sorts of merchandise and light French goods.

"As I live," said Mary Ann, "there is my old Blue Ridge beau. Oh! how wet I was," whispered she, "drenched with a summer shower, when first I was thrown into his society. I believe the poor fellow loved me sincerely. Come, let me spend upon him at least $10 in jaconet; he spent $100 upon me in balls, dancing, colds, cough-drops and drives, and got nothing for his pains but a neat billet-doux declining his poor heart and soft hand. Poor fellow!"

With this sally the ladies bought several articles, scarcely caring whether they suited them or not. When they left the store Mary Ann fell into a reverie, was quite silent, which for her was unusual and singular. Louisa's spirits, on the contrary, gathered life and energy as those of her companion sank away. She talked, she laughed, she ridiculed her beaus, she rallied Mary Ann, and, looking into her for once melancholy face, said, "So, my love, you are caught at last."

"Caught," said Mary Ann; "indeed you are much mistaken. I do not think—that is to say, I fancy I should not like to marry my Blue Ridge beau. Oh! Louisa," said she after a pause, with a tear in her eye, "what a foolish creature I have been. Mr. Collingwood, for that is his name, I am sure, does not think of me; but I cannot remember attentions he once paid me without a feeling of regret."

"Why! now what's the matter with you? After refusing so many, are you going to throw yourself away on a shopkeeper? A descendant of one of the most ancient families in Virginia to marry a shopkeeper!"

"Alas! alas! Louisa, what is descent? what is fashion? what is all the life I have led? Do you see that little white house with green Venetian blinds across the street? I was one evening in that house, and saw enough to satisfy me that I have been pursuing pleasure, not happiness. Oh, if I only could feel as that young wife does!

"You laugh. I am sure I do not think of Mr. Collingwood; but there was a time when his soft, quiet, affectionate manner did touch one most sensitively."

"Have you got the gloves you bought?" asked Louisa.

Mary Ann looked. She had forgotten them on the counter or lost them.

"We must return, then," said Louisa.

"Never," said Mary Ann. "I never dare look at him. I am sure he despises me. Oh, if he only knew what I feel—what pangs pass through this heart—I'm sure he would not."

"Come, come," said Louisa; "we must return and get the gloves."

"Never."

"Oh! the jaconet or a husband, most assuredly. You remember your resolution when we set out?"

Mary Ann smiled, while her eye glistened with a tear. They returned home, however, and sent Cato, the colored servant, for the articles they had forgotten.

After this adventure it was observed that a visible change came over the manners and spirits of Mary Ann. Her gay, brilliant sallies of wit and ridicule were moderated amazingly. She became quite passive; singularly thoughtful for a girl of her unusual flow of spirits. When Louisa rallied her on the shopping excursion she replied, "Indeed, Louisa, I do not think I could marry Mr. Collingwood; besides, he has forgotten every feeling he may have entertained toward me." In a few days after this event a party was given one evening at a neighboring house. The family in which Mary Ann resided were all invited. The moment of reunion approached, and Mary Ann, dressed with great elegance but far less splendor than usual, found herself at the head of a cotillion, surrounded by several young gentlemen, students of William and Mary, professors, planters and merchants. They were pressing forward in every direction, talking and catching a word or a look from so celebrated a belle. Mary Ann, however, did not appear to enjoy the group that surrounded her.

She was shooting her dark-blue eyes easily and negligently towards the entrance, as every new face came forward, to see all the party. The music struck up, and, rallying her attention, she immediately stepped off on a dos-a-dos with that elegance and grace for which she was so particularly remarkable. At the close, as she stood up beside her partner, throwing a beautiful auburn ringlet back upon her white, round neck, her eye caught with sudden emotion a quiet, genteel-looking person at the other end of the room. It was Mr. Collingwood. She immediately dropped her eyes to the floor and looked very narrowly at her left foot as she moved it on the toe backwards and forwards, as it were, for want of thought or to divert her thoughts. In a few seconds she looked up in the same direction. Mr. Collingwood still stood in the same position, watching every motion she made and every look she cast around her. She blushed, felt embarrassed, and went altogether wrong in the cotillion.

"What in the world are you thinking of?" asked Louisa.

"I scarcely know myself," said Mary Ann.

In a few seconds the cotillion was brought to a close and Mary Ann's partner escorted her to a seat. Mr. Collingwood approached through the crowd and stood before her.

"How is Miss ——?" asked Mr. Collingwood with suppressed emotion.

Mary Ann muttered out a few words in reply. She dropped her glove. Mr. Collingwood picked it up.

"This is not the first time you have lost a glove," said he, with a smile.

She received it and cast a look upon him of unconceivable sweetness.

"Do you dance again, Miss ——?"

"I believe not; I am going home."

"Going home?" said he; "why the amusements are scarcely begun."

"They are ended with me," said she, "for the night. I wish my servant would fetch my cloak and bonnet."

"Oh, you can't be going home already."

"Indeed I am," said she.

"Well," said he, with a smile, "I know your positive temper of old. Allow me to get your cloak for you?"

"Certainly."

Mr. Collingwood left the room. Louisa and several other female friends gathered round her, persuading her on all sides not to leave the party ere it was begun. She would not remain. Mr. Collingwood appeared at the door. In the hall, for it was the fashion then and there to do so, Mr. Collingwood took her bonnet and put it on.

"Allow me," said he, "to tie the strings?" She nodded assent, and while tying the ribbons under her chin he could not help touching her soft cheek. He was in ecstasy—she was quiet and resigned. He took the cloak—he unfolded it—he stood in front of her—their eyes met—both blushed—he pulled the cloak around her shoulders—he folded it around and around her bosom. He trembled like a leaf; she trembled also. He pressed her warmly to his heart, whispering in her ear, "Oh, Mary Ann, if I may hope—yet indulge a hope?" For a moment they were left alone, her head sank upon his breast. She could not speak, but her heart was like to burst.

"Will I—dare I expect to be yet happy?" Their warm cheeks met; their lips realized it in one long, long, long respiration. They tore away from each other without another word—everything was perfectly understood between them.

At this moment Mrs. Jamieson, the good lady of the mansion, approached and insisted that Mary Ann should not go so early. "It is really shameful, my dear," said she, "to think of leaving us at this hour. When I go to Richmond, do I leave you thus abruptly? Why, Mr. Collingwood, can't you prevail upon her to stay a little longer?"

He shook his head. "All my rhetoric has been exhausted," said he, "and it has proved unavailing."

Mary Ann looked at him very archly.

"Well, now," continued the lady, "I insist upon your staying;" and she forthwith proceeded to take off her bonnet, untie her cloak, and sent the servant with them into the side apartment. Mary Ann was unresisting. She was again led into the room. Collingwood danced with her all the evening. He escorted her home in the beautiful moonlight, and every now and then he pressed the cloak around her, with which she appeared not by any means to find fault.

In about a month, Mary Ann became Mrs. Collingwood; and immediately, as the parson had finished this great business of the evening, Louisa, who was one of her maids, whispered in her ear, "Two yards of jaconet, or a husband." She smiled, and passed her arm around Louisa's waist. "Both, my love—both, my love. Jaconet and a husband—a husband and jaconet."—Atlantic Club Book, 1834.

"ONCE MORE TO THE BREACH."

Remarkable Performance of "Henry V."

A Colorado correspondent writes as follows to the Washington Star:

There has to-night occurred in Colorado Springs, Col., a memorable scene in theater performances. Mr. George Rignold has been advertised for a week past to appear at Colorado Springs in the play of "Henry V." To-night, a picture of disgust and horror, he sat on his kingly throne representing the princely character of "Harry, King Henry V." The stage on which he was to stride with majestic step was 18 by 20 feet; the hall he was to fill with the words of Shakspeare could contain at its utmost 400 people. At the first interval in his speech, the words "My God!" which he uttered, were not in the play; but they very fully expressed the agony with which he contemplated the performance of a grand farce. It was a relief when the first act, cut down as it was never mutilated before, closed. He had an opportunity for rest and recovery in the sublime performance of the orchestra, consisting of one fiddle and nothing more. Shakspeare, happy in all things, fortunately put "Rumor" in the act of Henry V., and through "Rumor," who, by the way, performed her difficult part as perfectly as if before a large, appreciative audience, gave us some idea of the transposition of the character. The play, advertised to begin at 8 o'clock, was delayed, by the necessity of each actor gliding into the dressing-room separately, that space might be had for the arrangement of his or her toilet, until 9 o'clock, and was then necessarily cut down as much as human ingenuity could accomplish. In the second appearance of Rignold the audience, himself, his company, and even, I verily believe, his gallant horse, "Crispin," waiting on the street for the time of, and room for its entrance, saw how perfectly out of place Shakspeare was in this closet, broke into a general laugh, laughed Rignold out of his disgust into a laugh, laughed his company into a laugh, and the audience laughed itself into an uproar of laughter. When Rignold, in one of the sublime speeches of Shakspeare, broke out and said: "Gentlemen, this is too ridiculous; you cannot expect the utterance of the words of Shakspeare on such a stage, and before such a house," there was a burst of applause, long continued, while the frame of Rignold shook with laughter. Oh! it was ridiculous, it was painful, it was disgusting! And when, about making the second charge in battle, he, forgetting the ceiling was extremely low, attempted to raise his flag, and found he could not place the pole upright, he looked with a laugh at the audience, at the ceiling, and forcing his countenance suitable to making the moving harangue to the desperate troops—pshaw! it was ridiculous.

Let me mention his entry into London, and I will close a letter that does not give the one-tenth of the most remarkable performance of Rignold's experience. Two men were enough to crowd the stage, and give the appearance of the inhabitants rushing out by the thousands to welcome back their victorious King. He came in on his horse, was able to make a few steps, and by judicious management contrived to turn the horse for his egress without sweeping all the inhabitants into the gutter.

The Inhabitants of Mars' Little Moons.

Probably the most convenient assumption we can make is that there may be creatures in general respect like ourselves on those moons of Mars, but that, owing to the extreme rarity of the atmosphere, their vital energy is so far reduced that they are not more active than we are, despite the feeble action of gravity in their world. The air must be exceedingly rare, most certainly, even if the quantity is proportioned to the volumes of these moons. On this assumption the quantity of air is less than the quantity of terrestrial as 1 is less than 400 times 400 times 400—that is, it amounts only to 1-64,000,000 part of the terrestrial air.

Being spread over a surface which is but 1-160,000 of the earth's, it follows that the quantity of air above each square mile of surface is 1-400 part only of the quantity over each square mile of our earth's surface. This would be little enough in all conscience; but this is not all. For the action of gravity being, according to our assumption, only 1-600 of terrestrial gravity, it follows that the atmospheric pressure, and, therefore, density, is further reduced in this degree, giving finally a density of equal only to 1-240,000 of the density of our own air.

Now, at the height of seven miles, where the atmospheric pressure is reduced to one-fourth that at the sea level, men of ordinary constitutions would perish in a few minutes, if not instantly. In Coxwell's ascent to nearly that height, Glaisher fainted, and Coxwell only just had strength enough left to draw the valve string with his teeth (his hands being already powerless). Yet at the height of seven miles the density of the air is 80,000 times greater than that which, according to our very reasonable assumption, prevails at the surface of the Martian moons.

We can very well believe, then, that in whatever way the inhabitants of these moons may be adapted, corporeally and constitutionally, for existence in their small homes, the rarity of the air there must tend to reduce their vital energy. So that we may well imagine that, instead of being able to leap to a height of half a mile or over a distance of two or three miles, they are not more active than we are on earth with 600 times greater weight, but far more effective respiration. We might, perhaps, go even farther than this, and assume that, in order to give the inhabitants of these moons locomotive powers proportioned in the same way to their own dimensions as ours are, they must be supposed very much smaller than we are.

We might imagine them in an atmosphere so exceedingly attenuated that creatures which could have vitality enough to move freely about must be no larger than flies or ants, and must have also some such provision as insects have for more effective inspiration. In this way we might find in the Martian moons a miniature of our own earth, not only in the proportions of these worlds themselves, but also in those of the creatures living upon them. But it would not be very interesting to consider mere miniatures of our earth, such as the moons of Mars would thus come to be regarded. Indeed, in that case, little more could be said than that all the relations presented by this earth were or might be represented in the Martian moons, but on a greatly reduced scale.—Prof. Proctor, in Belgravia.

A Dog's Suicide.

One of the most remarkable incidents going to show the affection of dumb animals for those who care for them occurred in this city a few days since. Our readers will remember the drowning last Sunday of the little 6-year-old boy, Danny. The child had a little dog who was his constant companion and playmate. When the accident occurred which resulted in the drowning of the boy the dog was with him, and by his strange conduct and uneasiness he attracted the attention of those present. While the boy was lying in the bottom of the stream the dog would run to the child's mother and then toward the place where the boy was supposed to be, and finally plunged in and swam around or over the spot where his little master lay. After the body had been placed in the coffin the dog manifested a strong desire to see the child, and when the lid of the coffin was raised he licked the dead face and seemed to feel intense grief. In a short time the dog went out to the railroad track and laid down upon the road as it had done many times before; but upon the approach of the train he laid himself upon the rail and deliberately permitted the train to pass over his body—being killed. The whole actions of the dog were such as to convince one that it was governed by reasoning powers, and is another illustration of the remarkable love or attachment that some animals have for their masters. The mother, at the time of the drowning, supposed the child was at home, and therefore neglected to obey the hint given by the dog that might have saved the boy's life.—Lincoln (Neb.) Journal.

Tom Paine's Creed.

Thomas Paine is generally held to have been an atheist, without the slightest veneration or regard for religion. To those who hold this belief it may be of interest to learn what his real opinions were on this subject. The following is his confession of faith: "I believe in one God and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life. I believe the equality of man, and I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow creatures happy. But some, perhaps, will say, Are we to have no word of God—no revelation? I answer, Yes; there is a word of God—there is a revelation. The word of God is the creation we behold; and it is in this word, which no human invention can counterfeit or alter, that God speaketh universally to man. It preaches to all nations and to all worlds; and this word of God reveals to man all that is necessary for man to know of God. Do we want to contemplate His power? We see it in the immensity of the creation. Do we want to contemplate His wisdom? We see it in the unchangeable order by which the incomprehensible whole is governed. Do we want to contemplate His munificence? We see it in the abundance with which He fills the earth. Do we want to contemplate His mercy? We see it in His not withholding that abundance even from the unthankful. In fine, do we want to know what God is? Search not the book called the Scriptures, which any human hand might make, but the scriptures called the creation."

A Malay Superstition.

When Malays are dangerously sick they imagine that if they can remove the evil spirits they are all right; so, with this object, they construct a miniature prahu, or war-boat, of wood, complete in every way, with mast, rigging, black flag, paddles, and a rudder. The boat is filled with various articles, a bag of rice at the stern, and a lamp made out of a cockle-shell at the prow; the body of the boat is stuffed with cups made of leaves, containing liquors of various sorts, entrails of fowls, sweetmeats of all kinds, tobacco, flowers and copper coins. The boat is supported by a slender square bamboo platform, surrounded with pendant grass, to the ends of which are tied all sorts of eatables, and at the corners the legs and wings of a chicken. About eighteen inches below the boat are figures of turtles, crocodiles and lizards, made of rice, resting on a plantain leaf, the whole being supported by four straight branches about seven feet high (the top leaves forming a canopy) stuck into a raft made of plantain trees. Slips of bamboo are stuck around the raft with partially-burned red rags tied to them. The raft is set afloat; and it is supposed that the evil spirits, enticed away by the food in the boat, leave the patient and attach themselves to the boat. Should any Malay touch the raft after it has been set afloat, he or she becomes afflicted with the disease from which the person for whose benefit the raft was set adrift suffered.

What Kills.

In the school, as in the world, far more rust out than wear out. Study is most tedious and wearisome to those who study least. Drones always have the hardest time. Grumblers make poor scholars, and their lessons are uniformly "hard" and "too long." The time and thought expended in shirking would be ample to master their tasks. Sloth, gormandizing, and worry kill their thousands where over-study harms one. The curse of Heaven rests on laziness and gluttony. By the very constitution of our being they are fitted to beget that torpor and despondency which chill the blood, deaden the nerves, enfeeble the muscles, and derange the whole vital machinery. Fretting, fidgeting, ennui, and anxiety are among the most common causes of disease. On the other hand, high aspiration and enthusiasm help digestion and respiration, and send an increased supply of vital energy to all parts of the body. Courage and work invigorate the whole system, and lift one into a purer atmosphere, above the reach of contagion. The lazy groan most over their "arduous duties," while earnest workers talk little about the exhausting labors of their profession. Of all creatures the sloth would seem to be the most worried and worn.

GOING AFTER THE COWS.

"Jennie! Jennie! Jennie!
Where in the world can Jennie be?
She crossed the meadow an hour ago—
What ails the girl that she lingers so?"

The sun goes down in the crimson west,
The tired day prepares for rest,
And the laggard moments slowly pass,
But bring no news of the truant lass.

"What ails the girl?" The sober cows,
Stopping along the lane to browse,
May look in vain from side to side,
And wait for the voice of their pretty guide.

For far behind, by the pasture gate,
Jennie and Jamie forget 'tis late—
Forget the cows, and the milking hour,
And everything else save Love's sweet power.

The lengthening shadows unheeded fall,
The whip-poor-will with his plaintive call,
The gathering dews, and the darkening sky—
All warn in vain as the minutes fly.

Twice and thrice does mother go
To the farm-house door as she hears the low
Of the cows as they trample up the lane,
And the ring of the cow-bells clear and plain.

But presently come the laggard feet
Of Jennie and Jamie. Oh! shyly sweet
Are the girl's blue eyes as she stands before
The mother who meets her at the door.

"Where did you go, my child?" "I?—oh,
Only after the cows, you know."
Then whispered Jamie, "Whatever you do,
Don't tell her that—I went after you."

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL child, being asked why God made the flowers of the field, replied, "Please ma'am, I suppose for patterns for artificial flowers."

"WHAT is the meaning of a backbiter?" asked a gentleman at a Sunday-school examination. This was a puzzler. It went down the class until it came to a simple urchin, who said: "Perhaps it is a flea."

A LITTLE girl of 4 or 5 years asked her mother, one day, if she had not seen Col. Porter. "No, my child," was the reply, "he died before you were born." "Well, but, mamma," she insisted, "if he went up before I came down, we must have met."

AS THEY were about to quaff, one of the party suddenly called out to another: "Hello, Dougherty! You drinking whisky? Sure, it was only yesterday ye towld me ye was a 'taytotler.'" "Well," said Mr. Dougherty, evidently somewhat disconcerted, "ye're right, Misther Daly. It's quite right ye are. I am a taytotler, it's true; but I—I—I'm not a bigoted wan!"

"WHAT man has done man can do," reads nice and is full of encouragement; but there are some things that no man ever could or will do. No man that ever lived—and we use the word in its scriptural sense—could go to church and sit through a tedious sermon with unflagging attention if there happened to be a restless boy in the next pew forward, with a cold in his head and a chronic snuffle.—Cincinnati Breakfast Table.

"LEANDER," said Mrs. Spilkins, the other morning, as the former was preparing to leave the house, "when commending my good qualities, why are you like a wool-grower?" "Something about sheep in it, ain't there?" queried Spilkins. "Just like you!" she replied. "The answer is: Because you are a she-praiser." "Knew it all the time," chuckled Leander, as he slammed the door and whistled for a passing street-car.

'Twas ev'ning—he was standing by a pond,
He was list'ning to Batrachian's carousers;
Opal-shaded was the firmament beyond,
Rather lighter the complexion of his trousers.
Perch-ed quiet on the margin was a boy.
He was playing with a specimen of granite,
Cogitating of the quantity of joy
It would give him for to spin it—so he span it.
There were divers coruscations of the water,
With a sort of erysip'las on the trousers,
And an urchin skipping for another quarter—
And the cusses—oh! the cusses! they were rousers.

Andrew Johnson's Monument.

The monument to ex-President Andrew Johnson, lately unveiled at Greenville, Tenn., bears the following inscription:

ANDREW JOHNSON,
Seventeenth President U. S. A.
Born, December 29, 1808.
Died, July 31, 1875.

"His faith in the people never wavered."

ELIZA JOHNSON.
Born, October 4, 1810. Died, January 15, 1876.
"In memory of our Father and Mother."

The monument was erected by three surviving children—Mrs. Patterson, Mrs. Stover and Andrew Johnson, Jr.—at the cost of between $7,000 and $8,000.

SABBATH READING.

A Vision.

Pale, blood-stained, who are these that are thronging the throne of God?
Their faces are ashen with anguish, their garments soiled from the sod;
Wide and wan as a sunless ocean, the multitude stands,
With silent lips, and with piteous eyes, and with praying hands.

There is none that speaks, and none that stirs in the numberless hosts,
Like the still white clouds in starless heavens—an army of ghosts;
Slain in the battle scene, with the curses of war in their mouth;
Some in wantonness slaughtered; some stricken of hunger or drouth.

Who will stand for them, who will plead for them, there at the throne?
Are they not all God's children, whom Christ has claimed for his own?
Sinners—but all are sinners, and who can tell their doom?
If there be room in hell, yet in heaven is there not room?

Like the motes of dust from a sunbeam, when a sudden wind has blown,
Like the stars from the presence of God, when a universe is o'erthrown,
They are gone from our gaze, they are gathered and garnered for bliss or pain,
Woman and warrior, Turk and Christian, slayer and slain.

Is there no sign, then, is there no wonder, is there no cry?
Are the dead as a wind that passes, are they gone as the waves go by?
Listen! is there no sound of a sobbing that shakes the air,
And the wail of an unseen multitude, waked from a mute despair!

Do we dream, or are dead men weeping, as they wept in the world below,
For the seeds of war untrodden, and the bitter harvest of woe,
And the guiltless herds that are marched, like the beasts to sacrifice,
That can save not them, nor their rulers, from the hell of falsehood and vice?

And they weep that they see no end, and they cry that the end should be!
Ah, God! send down Thine angel, that the rest die not as we!
As Thou didst send Thy Son, to die that sin might cease,
Send down one lowest of angels, only to breathe of Peace!

To breathe Thy peace in the counsels, where the rulers, unconcerned,
Stake for a perilous glory the honor that Peace has earned;
And the happy homes of a nation they stake for a statesman's pride;
Oh, send Thy Peace! oh, save them, for whose sakes the Savior died!

—The Spectator.

A Word by the Way.

Several years since two merchants had taken their seats in the morning train for a certain city. They were neighbors, dwelling in a contiguous suburb, and doing business in a large and populous town. Although their residences were near together, and they saw each other daily, they were not intimate. They had few sympathies in common. One had been for many years a professed disciple of Christ, loving God's house, and alive to all that pertained to the spread of the gospel. The other was a respectable and successful merchant, absorbed in business, and to all appearance indifferent to all beyond this life. On the morning in question these two neighbors happened to occupy the same seat in the railway carriage. They soon became earnestly engaged in conversation on business, its prospects, their own plans and successes.

The worldly merchant, the elder of the two, said they had been very successful for the year past, and could now say he had a competence. "I do not care," said he, "to be worth any more."

"Well," said his friend, "this life is all provided for. That is all right. But how about the life beyond?"

"Oh," was the reply, "I do not worry myself about that."

"But ought you not to trouble yourself about it?"

"No, I think not. I have no doubt that it will be right."

"But I would not thus trust without looking into the matter. The interests involved are momentous."

The train had reached the station, and the two merchants separated, each taking his way to his own place of business. A few months afterward the Christian merchant missed his neighbor from the morning train. On inquiry he learned that he was sick. Days and weeks passed, and he knew only that his neighbor was unable to be out. At length, as he was in his office in the city one day, he received a telegram that his neighbor was dying and was desirous to see him. He lost no time in hastening to his bedside. There, surprised and delighted, he heard from the lips of the dying man this announcement:

"I could not die without thanking you, sir, for what you said to me some months since in the railway train. It made an impression on me at the time, and since I have been shut up here it has come up to me again. I am dying, but I trust all beyond. My hope is in Christ."

Was not that a rich reward for one act of Christian fidelity? What opportunities for thus speaking a "word by the way" are constantly occurring, and how glorious would be the results were they improved!

Art and Religion.

Bear us witness, ye poets and actors, ye painters and sculptors, ye singers and players upon instruments, that your arts have not saved the most of you from becoming petty, selfish men and women. You are jealous of one another. You are greedy of praise and of the gold it brings. You know that there is nothing in your art that enlarges and liberalizes you, that restrains you from drunkenness and vices that shall not be named, that gives you sobriety and solidity of character, that enlarges your social sympathies, that naturally leads you into organizations for helping others outside of your own circle. Bear us witness, that you are not the men and women who are relied on for performing the duties of society. If all were like you—if all shirked the duties of social and civil life like you—if all were as much unfitted by their ideas and their employments as you are for carrying the great burdens of society, what do you suppose would become of the country, and what would become of the world?

Now, if there is anything in art that can take the place of religion, we should like to see it. If there is anything in culture that can take the place of religion, it has not yet revealed itself. Culture is centered in self. Self is the god and self is the model of all culture. Why should it not ultimate in selfishness? Culture assumes that what is present in a man needs only to be developed and harmonized to lift character to its highest point, and life to its highest issues. It carries no idea of self-surrender, which is the first fact in practical religion of any valuable sort, and the first fact in all good development. Greece and Rome had plenty of culture, and are still our teachers in art, but the beauty that looked upon them from every hill and gate and temple could not save them from their vices. By and by culture will learn how powerless it is to make a man that shall be worth the making, and what poor instruments science and art are for uprooting the selfishness that rules the world. It is slowly learning this, and men who have bowed low to her have been touched with that divine discontent which nothing but religion can allay.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner for July.

A Pure Heart.

What is a pure heart? It is a heart which finds its whole and only satisfaction in God, which relishes and desires nothing but God, whose thoughts and intents are ever occupied with God, to which all that is not of God is strange and jarring, which keeps itself as far as possible apart from all unworthy images and joys and griefs, and all outward cares and anxieties, and makes all these work together for good; for to the pure all things are pure, and to the gentle is nothing bitter.—Dr. John Tauler.

The Work of Congress.

During the session of Congress which has just closed there were introduced 6,629 bills and 243 joint resolutions. About 5,300 bills were introduced in the House alone, which is an average of nearly twenty to each member. Of these bills about 260 have been disposed of. In addition to the regular appropriation bills, the most important ones were: The act remonetizing silver, the act allowing criminals in the United States courts to testify in their own behalf, the act providing a new form of government for the District of Columbia, the Pacific Railroad Funding bill, the act forbidding the further retirement of legal-tender notes. These are really all the important public acts that Congress passed last session.

Some of the most important bills considered at this Congress are now lying on the Speaker's table, over 225 bills having passed the Senate which have not yet reached the House. The Senate has been very industrious, and has cleared up its calendar. The only important bills remaining on the Senate calendar undisposed of are as follows:

The bill to create the Territory of Lincoln out of the Black Hills, the bill to amend and revise the patent laws, the Texas Pacific Railroad bill, the Japanese Indemnity Fund bill, the bill regulating compensation for mail transportation and the classification of mail matter, and the bill to regulate the counting of electoral votes.

There are more than 500 bills on the House calendar which were left undisposed of. The most important of these are: The bill to restore to pension rolls those whose names were stricken off for disloyalty, bill to regulate the compensation of postmasters and prevent the illegal traffic in postage stamps, bill to transfer Indian Bureau to War Department, several postal savings bills, the bill to retire the circulation of national banks, to authorize national banks to exchange their reserve for bonds, Texas Pacific bill, Pro Rata bill, Pacific Railroad Funding bill, bill for the improvement of the Mississippi river and the Geneva Award bill.

The only important bills which have passed the House, but were not acted upon by the Senate, reached that body on the day of adjournment. These are the bill to increase the pay of letter carriers, the bill establishing post-routes and the "Arrears of Pensions" bill.

Three or four contested-election cases were left undisposed of by the House.—Washington Cor. New York Graphic.

Rain.

The first water—how much it means! Seven-tenths of man himself is water. Seven-tenths of the human race rained down but yesterday! It is much more probable that Cæsar will flow out of a bung-hole than that any part of his remains will ever stop one. Our life is indeed a vapor, a breath, a little moisture condensed upon the pane. We carry ourselves as in a vial. Cleave the flesh, and how quickly we spill out! Man begins as a fish, and he swims in a sea of vital fluids as long as his life lasts. His first food is milk; so is his last and all between. He can taste and assimilate and absorb nothing but liquids. The same is true throughout all organic nature. 'Tis water-power that makes every wheel move. Without this great solvent there is no life. I admire immensely this line of Walt Whitman:

> The slumbering and liquid trees.

The tree and its fruit are like a sponge which the rains have filled. Through them and through all living bodies there goes on the commerce of vital growth, tiny vessels, fleets and succession of fleets, laden with material bound for distant shores, to build up, and repair, and restore the waste of the physical frame.

Then the rain means relaxation; the tension in nature and in all her creatures is lessened. The trees drop their leaves, or let go their ripened fruit. The tree itself will fall in a still, damp day, when but yesterday it withstood a gale of wind. A moist south wind penetrates even the mind and makes its grasp less tenacious. It ought to take less to kill a man on a rainy day than on a clear. The direct support of the sun is withdrawn; life is under a cloud; a masculine mood gives place to something like a feminine. In this sense rain is the grief, the weeping of Nature, the relief of a burdened or agonized heart. But tears from Nature's eyelids are always remedial, and prepare the way for brighter, purer skies.—John Burroughs, in Scribner for July.

Honor to American Manufacturers—His Majesty Oscar II., King of Norway and Sweden, has sent to the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. the Grand Swedish Gold Medal in recognition of the superiority of their cabinet organs. The medal is surmounted by a crown and bears on one side the inscription "Litteris et Artibus," and on the other around the bust of the King, "Oscar II. Svec. Norv. Goth. Vand. Rex." This honor will be the more valued by the Company from the fact that His Majesty Oscar II. is known to be a musical connoisseur of highest attainments.

Since the beginning of the year the value of domestic exports from New York alone have been $152,185,266. This is $34,000,000 more than the same period last year, and $103,000,000 more than the same period in 1876.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

Next year the 1,800th anniversary of the destruction of Pompeii and Herculaneum is to be celebrated at Pompeii.

In Paris, year by year, there is a uniform increase in the prevalence of diphtheria, due, it is alleged, in great measure to a neglect to isolate cases of this disease.

Dr. Muirhead has at length succeeded in applying the duplex system to submarine telegraphic cables, notwithstanding the obvious difficulty of the task. He has doubled the sending power of a cable, at a cost far below what the cost of a new cable would involve.

Dr. Cassells, a distinguished aural surgeon of Glasgow, Scotland, lately read a paper describing numerous cases of ear disease traceable to sewer gas, which had poisoned the air of houses in which the patients resided. He believes this sort of poison to be a very frequent cause of deafness.

Speaking of the uses of pain, the Lancet observes that generally it may be set down as an axiom that the chief and most obvious service of pain to humanity is as a deterrent and warning sensation to ward off danger. Pain, however, has a secondary and educational value as regards the mind and temper, and some sorts of pain may be specially designed for this purpose. In this view, also, pain has a practical interest, because the development of mind is a process governed by natural laws of which science is perfectly competent to take heed.

There is a process of hatching shad eggs by machinery, in operation at Havre de Grace, Md., where over eight million shad were hatched last year. The eggs to be hatched are placed in sheet-iron cylinders, with wire-netting bottoms, and half submerged in the river. The cylinders are suspended from the shaft arms of levers, and given a slow up and down movement by means of shaftings carrying eccentrics acting on the long arms of the levers; the whole is set in motion by a ten-horse-power steam engine. The engine and other machinery are carried by a large scow anchored in the stream. The fish so hatched prove hardy, and bear transportation well, even as far as California.

Port wine marks: Several surgeons, says an English paper, have of late endeavored to remove this disfigurement from the human face, obliterating the mark without a scar. In these cases the mark was confined to the right half of the face, and the treatment consisted of scarification, by means of parallel incision, the entire thickness of the skin, made by a frozen scalpel, the skin being also frozen by the ether spray. The cuts were one-sixteenth of an inch apart, and, as soon as these were healed, a second set of parallel incisions were made, obliquely to the direction of the first set, and so on with a series of operations until complete. Perfect success was the result, as the port-wine mark gradually faded away, and was finally obliterated without leaving a scar. Instruments have since been prepared having sixteen parallel blades, which make the operation very simple to execute.

A new English idea is a bullet-proof thus described: The shield is of bullet-proof steel, swinging on the axletree of two light wheels, and containing four loop-holes. Its entire weight is about 150 pounds. Two front-rank men, laying their hands upon the axletree, push it before them, their rifles being placed in a rack in the shield. Then two rear-rank men follow closely, rifle in hand, being protected, as well as the front-rank men, from direct fire. When the "commence firing" is sounded, the two front-rank men take their rifles from the rack, and, in the old kneeling position, fire through two loop-holes in the middle of the shield. The rear-rank men fire through the upper loop-holes, and the whole two files being in the position of double-rank firing with "front-rank kneeling."

That Fatal Sixty.

A paragraph is "running through the newspapers," as the saying is, to the effect that "The Emperor of Russia, having completed his 60th year, is bound to become mad, as his predecessors on the throne have done so at that age." This declaration, not "founded on facts," may be worthy of contradiction, because, a short time hence, persons who read it, and belong to the numerous class who think that whatever appears in print must be true, will give full credence to this.

The present Czar, who completed his 60th year on the 29th of last April, is the only Russian sovereign, during over two centuries and a half, who attained the age said to be so fatal to his race. The Czar Michael, the first Romanoff who ruled in Russia, his reign beginning in 1613, died at the age 49; Alexis, his son and successor, at 48; Feodor, at 25; Ivan, at 33; Peter the Great, at 53; Catherine I., his widow and successor, born of humble parents in Livonia, at 45; Peter II., at 15; Anne, at 47; Ivan, at 24; Elizabeth, at 52; Peter III., at 34; Catherine II., at 67; Paul, at 47; Alexander I., at 48; and Nicholas, before he was 59. Here, of sixteen Russian sovereigns, from 1613 to 1878, only one, the present Czar, may be said to have reached the newspaper-fated age of 60. Catherine of Russia, who lived seven years longer, was a German, without one drop of Russian blood in her veins. Seeing that, in over 250 years of a reigning family, to whom the 60th year was to prove fatal, only one reached that age, it is clear that the popular belief was altogether wrong.—Philadelphia Press.

Graves of the Poets.

The departure of Bryant suggests a brief reference to the resting places of poetic genius. Joel Barlow, the author of the first American epic, died in Europe and was buried there. Mrs. Sigourney was buried in Hartford, of which city she was a lifelong ornament. Joseph Rodman Drake was buried a few miles out of this city in a private plot on the margin of Long Island sound. Halleck found an honored grave in Groton, Conn., the place of his nativity. When disabled by age from his duties as Astor's clerk, he returned thither, and there passed his last days. Robert C. Sands, once a New York poet of some note, is buried in St. Paul's churchyard. He was one of Bryant's editorial rivals—being in his day leading man on the Commercial Advertiser. Turning to British authorship, it may be added that Wordsworth found a grave at Rydal Mount, near which he passed his happiest days. Southey is buried at Keswick, where the best part of his life was spent in arduous literary labor. Shelley and Keats give distinction to the Protestant cemetery at Rome, while Scott rests at Dryburgh abbey, and Byron at the little parish church near Newstead abbey.—New York Cor. Troy Times.

Instinct in Birds.

No subject connected with the history of birds furnishes more interesting material for study than that of instinct. Young birds of different species show that they have very different degrees of instinctive knowledge. Some are able to take care of themselves, and do not need a mother to watch over them; others, on the contrary, are perfectly helpless, and need teaching before they can do anything for themselves, except breathe and swallow what is put into their mouths. The young chicken, a short time after it leaves the egg, knows how to take care of itself nearly as well as does the year-old bird. It can run after its mother, use its eyes, pick up food, and answer the call of the old hen; and it does all this without instruction. How different in all these respects from the young barn-swallow! This is blind, and unable to run, or even stand, knowing only enough to open its mouth when it hears the old bird return to the nest, and to swallow the food placed in his open bill. Far from knowing by instinct how to use its wings, as the young chick does its legs, it does not learn this until it is well grown, and had several lessons in flying; and, even then, it flies badly, and improves only after long practice. After it has learned to fly, it is still very helpless and baby-like, and very different from the active, bright-eyed, independent little chick of the barn-yard—and of all the Rasores, or scratching birds, such as the hen, the quail, the partridge, the pheasant and the turkey.

The scratching birds are not the only ones which can take care of themselves at an early age. This is true of the running birds, such as the ostrich; and the same is the case with many of the wading birds, such as the woodcock; and, among the swimming birds, there are several kinds that take full care of themselves soon after leaving the shell.

Far from standing in any need of instruction, young ducks take to the water by instinct, even when they have been brought up by a hen; and they know that they are perfectly safe upon it, although the anxious hen tries in every way to restrain them and to call them back.

There are many ways in which some of our young birds show their really wonderful instincts, but there is nothing more curious in this respect than the habits of the little chickens, which most of us have opportunities of noticing—if we choose to take the trouble. These little creatures, almost as soon as they are born, understand what their mother "clucks" to them; they know that they must hide when a hawk is about; they often scratch the ground for food before they see their mother or any other chicken do so; they are careful not to catch bees instead of flies, and they show their early smartness in many ways which are well worth watching.

But sometimes a brood of these youngsters find something that puzzles them, as when they meet with a hard-shelled beetle, who looks too big to eat and yet too small for a playmate.—Prof. W. K. Brooks, in St. Nicholas for July.

Italian Ladies.

The ladies of both Rome and Naples dress with exquisite taste, in plain colors, in full European and American costume. In the matter of bonnets, those of Naples, in the opinion of my lady companions, excel in richness and elegance those of Paris. The afternoon drive on the Corso at Naples was almost equal to that of the Champs Elysees in the display of ladies' toilets, as well as in the turnout of fine equipages. But little female beauty is, however, seen either at Naples or Rome, except in very young girls and children. There is no doubt that the Italian ladies lose the bloom and freshness of youth at a very early age after marriage. The young Italian girls who come in from the country in their picturesque costumes are, many of them, quite handsome, but their mothers, by whom they are usually accompanied, look old enough to be their grandmothers. This comes probably from the life of exposure which they live, working in the field, and it would almost seem that the greater portion of this work is performed by women.—Cor. Baltimore American.

Conundrums.

Why is dancing like milk? Because it strengthens the calves.

Why is an Englishman like a bee? Because he is ruled by a Queen.

What is the best way to curb a wild young man? To bridal him.

What kind of a ship has two mates and no Captain? Court ship.

Why is a discontented man like a watch-dog? Because he is a growler.

What is it that by losing an eye has nothing left but a nose? A noise.

What is that which makes everything visible, but is itself unseen? Light.

Why is a letter like a flock of sheep? Because it is penned and folded.

What class of women are most apt to give tone to society? The belles.

At what time is a cigar like an old maid? When there is no match for it.

What is the best government? That which teaches us to govern ourselves.

Why is a newly-born baby like a gale of wind? Because it begins with a squall.

Coffee was sneeringly called "Mohammedan gruel" when first introduced into Europe.

Wilhoft's Tonic is not a panacea—is not a cure for everything, but is a catholicon for malarious diseases, and day by day adds fresh laurels to its crown of glorious success. Engorged Livers and Spleens, along the shady banks of our lakes and rivers, are restored to their healthy and normal secretions. Health and vigor follow its use, and Chills have taken their departure from every household where Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic is kept and taken. Don't fail to try it. At this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS
Z REGULATOR

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR has been in use for half a century, and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time according to the directions. It is, without doubt, the greatest LIVER MEDICINE in the world; is perfectly harmless, being carefully compounded from rare roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of quinine and calomel, and has superseded these medicines in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Procure a bottle at once from your druggist. Do not delay. Give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION.
As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no Powders or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR unless in our Engraved Wrapper, with Trade-Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

Grant; the great General who planned the campaign against Vicksburg (?), that great statesman, (?) that consumate ass, is a candidate for a third term. He says "stranger things than that have happened."

* * *

The Valparaiso MESSENGER presents the name of Hon. J. H. Winterbotham of Laporte county to the Democracy of the 10th district, for the Congressional nomination. It will now be in order for the Michigan City Democracy to second the suggestion.

* * *

The eastern question is about settled for the present. The decisions of the European Congress are not satisfactory to Russia, she having gained nothing for her great loss of men and money. Greece wants to fight Turkey,—what a flow of turkey-greece there will be.

* * *

The Boonville (Ind.,) Enquirer unfurls the following Presidential banner for 1880: "For President, Hon. Thos. A. Hendricks, of Indiana. For Vice-President, General Winfield S. Hancock, of Pennsylvania." Would it not be well enough for Hoosiers to take care of Hoosiers, and allow outside candidates to take care of themselves lest the order might be reversed, a la St. Louis.

* * *

We hear the name of John B. Stoll, of the Ligonier Banner, mentioned in connection with the nomination for congress on the Democratic side in this (13th) district. If he should be nominated, the democratic party may depend upon a thorough canvass. We do not credit the report that he would accept the nomination even if tendered him. It shou'd be the object of the democrats to defeat, if possible, the republican nominee. It is also reported, and upon what we consider good authority, that Hon. John H. Baker will not be a candidate for renomination, preferring to retain his connection with his law business in which he has been very successful.—Warsaw Union.

Hon. J. H. Baker has been interviewed by Williams of the INDIANIAN, and expressed a willingness "to serve the people of the thirteenth district with whatever ability he possessed." Reub. has him planted for a third term.

* * *

If the Communists will display wisdom enough to adopt Senator Thurman's red bandanna as their gonfalon, we may all have a chance of following it to the White House, and to victory. It may not be amiss just here to inquire what kind of a handkerchief Governor Hendricks uses.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

GOV. HENDRICKS uses the kind of a rag that suits the Democracy of Indiana, —one with a national border of red, white and blue, and the word STATESMAN printed in large letters as a center piece; the reverse side embelished with a GREEN BACK, around the margin of which facsimiles of the standard gold and silver coins of America are grouped in matchless beauty. The flag of Hendricks and the Democracy of Indiana is proudly waving in the political winds of the west and south; the east too will be caught in the gale; the freemen of America will act as color-guards, and fraud and corruption will be swept out of existence by the approaching political hurricane.

13th District Conventions.

The Republicans of this District have called their convention to nominate a candidate for Congress, to meet at Kendallville, Aug. 14th, 1878. The Greenbackers have fixed the time for their convention for the same purpose, on July 17th, at the same place. The Democratic convention will probably be held at the same place, or at Goshen, about the 20th of August.

On the last page of this paper will be found the address of the National Greenback Committee of this Congressional District. We publish it, not that we think any good can be accomplished for the greenback cause through a third party movement, nor that we take any stock in what the Chicago Tribune or any other paper may say for political buncombe, concerning the reported disgraceful scenes in the closing of the last Congress; but, for the reason that the monetary system advocated by the greenback party is antagonistic to the bankrupting financial policy of the present administration, and is in harmony with the doctrines set forth in the platform of the Democracy of Indiana to a greater or less extent; and for the further reason, that we feel disposed to give the greenback party in this district a fair show, notwithstanding our very positive conviction that whatever beneficial results are attained will come through the efforts of the DEMOCRACY of the West and South.

"C. A. O. McClellan, of Waterloo, is mentioned favorably in connection with the Democratic congressional nomination in this district. Mr. McClellan is an unflinching Democrat, a lawyer of ability, and a gentleman of integrity and great personal popularity. If nominated he would make a brilliant canvass, and despite the odds against him we believe he would be elected."—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

We presume Mr. McClellan and his many friends in this county regard the above notice as highly complimentary, and the Democracy of DeKalb county think it worthily bestowed; but we venture the assertion that our friend McClellan has not the remotest idea of being a candidate for Congressional honors. True, from what we have known of the gentleman by reputation, and the very high terms in which he is spoken of by those who have been intimately associated with him in this and neighboring counties for years, it is safe to say that he is a man who has earned the confidence of the public by his devoted attention to his profession, by honorable and fair dealing with his fellow-men, by every thing that goes to make up a true citizen, and that no better man could be selected to represent this district in Congress if he would consent to make the race. The time has come when men of ability are in demand for such high and responsible positions, men who are in sympathy with the laboring masses of the country, men who have succeeded in life by their own endeavors, Mr. McClellan has these qualifications, and with them the ability to protect the interests of his constituents. We regret that his large legal practice and other business engagements are such that he would not feel justified in accepting a nomination and spending his time and money in making a thorough canvass of the district.

It is remarkable how much fire can be created in the northern heart for the small sum of $500 promised, and only $50 of that amount paid. During the political excitement in November, 1876, Lize Pinkston made herself famous in the estimation of the managers of the Presidential fraud and their followers throughout the north, by making all manner of sworn statements in the interest of the Republican party; and now comes this same "old Lize," together with her present husband (Pritchard) and several other witnesses, and swear to a statement that would fill a column, denying every alligation made in presence of the "visiting statesmen." "Lize" now swears that she was induced to appear before the Returning Board by two prominent Republicans—Brewster and Dinkgrave, that she was taken by Republicans to New Orleans, that she was told by Republicans what to say under oath, that she was able to walk and had walked up and down the Custom-house stairs on the very day of her examination, but was induced to lie down on a sofa and be carried into the room of the Returning Board in order to produce a greater impression; that she was paid $500 in cash for swearing "to suit," $50 of which she made use of, and the balance was left in the hands of her Republican friend Brewster, who has since refused to return it.

All these statements and many more were made under oath, in presence of witnesses, and obliterate every particle of evidence given by her before the "visiting statesmen." We take no stock in any such "flop-over" testimony, and look upon all recent developments by persons of this character as simply placing the Democratic party on an equal footing with the Republican party; for the man or woman that will sell his or her integrity, will give away their honor and do not deserve the confidence of any party, especially when reliable evidence from responsible sources has long since been secured fixing beyond a doubt in the minds of all honorable men, the undeniable fact that a fraud now fills the highest position in the gift of the American people.

Hon. W. D. Hill, of Defiance county, has been nominated for Congress by the Democracy of the 6th Ohio district.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at F. E. Davenport.

SATURDAY, JULY 13th, A. D. 1878.

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M., of said day, at the door of the Court House in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit:

The north east quarter of section twenty-four 24, township thirty three, 33, north of range fourteen, 14, east, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less in DeKalb county, Indiana. I will first offer for sale all that part of the north east quarter of section twenty four 24, township thirty three, 33, north of range fourteen, 14, east, lying north of the Baltimore, Ohio and Chicago Railroad, and if the proceeds of the sale of said tract be insufficient to pay said sum interest and cost, then I will expose to sale all that part of the north west quarter of the north east quarter of said section, lying south of the Baltimore and Ohio, and Chicago railroad, and if there still be a residue of said sum interest and cost remaining unpaid I will expose to sale the south half of said north east quarter of said section twenty-four, 24, and all that part of the north east quarter of the north east quarter of said section twenty four, 24, lying south of the Baltimore, Ohio and Chicago railroad.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

DARLING—ROOSE.

Attempt to Commit Rape.

We are reliably informed that Miss Abbie Roose while out gathering berries last Friday in company with her little brother, was accosted on the railroad between Altona and Garrett by W. Darling, who presented himself in a partly nude condition and insultingly demanded a sacrifice of the girl's virtue. The young lady not being inclined to yield to his demands, and having the necessary courage and an abundance of muscle, was successful in freeing herself from the hold of the wretch who was seeking her ruin, and made good her escape with honor to herself and her sex. Would that all young women were as brave as Abbie Roose.

LATER:—Since writing the above Darling has been lodged in jail to await a trial.

To-morrow, in all probability, Montreal, Canada, will be the scene of a bloody affray in an attempt to prevent the Orangemen from having their annual parade. Business has almost suspended, the troops have been called out and every precaution taken to prevent a ruction. Irish Catholic's from the States are congregating in large numbers, ten thousand Irishmen from America will probably take part in the affray.

Harvest is here, and now is the time for tramps to get what they don't want, —work; it is also in order now to give them what they need,—the contents of a shot gun, or a piece of bread spread with rat poison, as such constitutional dead beats and ever weary louts of the have-you-any-wood-to-saw profession would be better off lounging 'round in the golden streets of the "New Jerusalem," than "roaming around through this wide world" begging, stealing and murdering as they go.

The Indian war in the north west has commenced, several skirmishes have taken place resulting in victories for the red-skins. The few soldiers there are so much scattered that they are unable to accomplish much good. If the government desires to protect the people on the frontier and forever put a stop to Indian outrages, why not congregate the entire soldiery of the United States, General Sherman, red-tape loafers and all, make one grand charge and sweep the savage nuisances out of existence.

The Siamese twins, which so long held the first place among the wonderful freaks of nature, as applied to the human form, are entirely cast in the shade by a Canadian production now on exhibition at the N. Y. acquarium. It is called "a double-barreled baby," and consists of a pair of healthy female children (if they can be called a pair) with but one abdomen and with one leg each—or, a single body with two heads one leg being operated exclusively by one of the pair. They are described as being a blonde and brunette, and are named Rose and Marie. They are in all essentials two persons with one body, and perform the acts of crying, laughing, &c., independently of each other.—Exchange.

Edison is now hard at work upon a kickaphone, an instrument that for practicability entirely eclipses all of his other "phones." It is especially designed for newspaper offices. It enables an editor, without moving, to bounce every class of bores and people who want free advertising, down four flights of stairs and clear into oblivion. It is expected also to recognize at sight, men who never calculate to pay for their newspaper, commonly called subscription "dead beats," and give chase, kicking the miserable offender at every step, until bruised and bleeding he, by one grand swoop, is kicked off into Egyptian darkness, or more terrible to contemplate, landed in that indescribable void prepared in imagination for Andy Johnson, "Bingham's Hole in the Sky." Beware, delinquents! It beats the telephone.—LaGrange Register.

We hope the people of DeKalb are not the kind that deserve such fate.

The Ligonier Banner in noticing the Democratic candidates for county offices in this county, after naming all the candidates, says: "Of the above named gentlemen we are well acquainted with only two—Messrs. Shutt and Mays. The former is well fitted for the office of representative, being a man of extensive information, strong practical sense, and of the strictest integrity. Mr. Mays, for eight years editor of the Auburn "Courier," is an energetic, progressive, genial sort of a man; amply qualified for the office to which he aspires, and well calculated to prove an efficient, popular officer. We hope to have the pleasure of announcing the triumphant election of both."

A tribute to the memory of Mrs. Alling, written by a former school-mate and friend:

They have laid her down where the violets blow,
And wept o'er her grave life's bitter tears,
Too joyous a being for age to know,
Too frail for the weight of many years.

When life's brightest visions were turning to dust,
And youth's fondest hopes fleing one by one,
She looked aloft with child-like trust,
And softly murmered "thy will be done."

She bade us look up in our dark despair,
To "that home where the many mansions be,"
But we saw not the angels that met her there,
The gates of the city we could not see.

We saw not the angel that met her there,
Nor heard the dip of the mistic oar,
Or the patter of feet on the golden stair,
When she joyously gained the farther shore.

But we know that our loved one has gone before,
That heaven, though viewless, is not so far,
And I hope when we gain the other shore
We may find the gates of heaven ajar.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

[Columbia City Post.]

Mr. Theodore Reed.

On Monday last, according to arrangements made several months ago, our well-known fellow-townsman, Mr. Theodore Reed, assumed the position as editor and publisher of the Auburn "Courier," the official organ of the DeKalb county Democracy. As soon as necessary arrangements can be made, he will remove his family to Auburn, the intention being to make that place his permanent home in the future.

THE POST regrets to make the announcement that so useful a citizen of Columbia City should choose another field of labor. Associated as we have been for many years in politics and business, we know much of Mr. Reed—of the many sterling qualities of heart and soul which make him a gentleman among the highest peers. While a mere boy, called to administer the responsible affairs in the Auditor's office in the declining days of Mr. S. H. Wunderlich and at his death appointed to the place, and afterward elected by an immense majority, he was ever found the painstaking, accommodating and efficient officer which has made him so popular with the people of Whitley. Whether as Town or School Trustee, President of the Agricultural Society, or the many other minor positions filled by him in societies, he was always found true to the trusts imposed. His place among us will not be easily filled.

Ambitious to excel, he worked more for the public than for his own private gain. As a citizen, he has spent all that he made for the improvement of the town, aiding in every public enterprize. His character for honesty and moral worth stand unimpeached, having neither spot or blemish upon it. In politics, a Democrat of the strictest school. He has rendered valuable service to the party by his zealous principle and unselfish zeal to forward its success.

THE POST can most cheerfully recommend him to the Democracy of DeKalb as a gentleman who will deserve their utmost confidence and respect. They will never regret extending it to the fullest extent. Under his control, the "Courier" will take front rank as a Democratic journal. THE POST asks that they will extend to him a generous patronage for the services which he will render.

[Pierceton Free Press.]

The Auburn "Courier," we understand, will soon pass out of the hands of its founder and very able editor, Tom. C. Mays, and be conducted by Theodore Reed, of Columbia City. Mr. Reed is one of Whitley's best men, and will, without doubt, make the "Courier" a welcome messenger of local news. Success, say we, friend Theo.

Ligonier Banner.

Bro. Stall, of the Ligonier Banner, gives us a send-off in this wise: Mr. Reed becomes a resident of Auburn and will devote his undivided attention to the "Courier." Being a good writer and an accomplished gentleman, we extend to him a cordial welcome to the corps editorial.

[Kendallville Standard.]

The Kendallville "Standard" notices our connection with the "Courier" as follows: We cordially welcome Mr. Reed to the corps editorial, and extend the hand of fellowship and brotherly love, and promise to go for him lively.

Tom. C Mays has sold the Auburn "Courier" to a gentleman in Columbia City, who will take charge of the paper next week. We understand that the new editor is an experienced journalist, and a gentleman. May he be successful.

Incorporated town are not authorized by law to require retail liquor dealers to pay license, as will be seen by the following recent decision of the supreme court of this State.

No. 5,872. William Walter vs. the town of Columbia City. Whitley C. C. Reversed. Hawk, J.

Held, That towns in this State have no authority to require a license from liquor dealers to retail unless authorized by some special law, the general statute giving them no such power. (Cowley vs. the town of Rushville, at this term.)

Held, That cities have no power under the general law to regulate and license the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of such cities.

Judgment reversed.

Old Settlers' Meeting.

A very good representation of the old settlers of DeKalb county were present on the Fourth at Auburn, and after the oration in the grove in the afternoon, they held a meeting to make arrangements for the future. The meeting was called to order by T. D. Gross, and on motion of John McClellan, Jas. R. Cosper was called to the chair and T. D. Gross was made Secretary.

The following resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED, That when this meeting adjourn, it will adjourn to meet at Auburn, on September 19, 1878, and that all who were citizens of the county prior to Jan. 1, 1846, are cordially invited to attend and participate in the meeting. On motion a committee of two from each township was appointed, to ascertain the number of old settlers in their respective townships, and notify and induce them to attend the next meeting, and perform such other duties as in their judgment would be for the best interests of the meeting.

The following were appointed:

Peter Simmons and J. A. Miller, Butler-tp.; A. D. Goetschius and Henry Brown, Jackson-tp.; B. F. Blair and John Plattner, Newville tp.; Samuel Wasson and J. Rhodes, Concord-tp.; C. R. Wanemaker and C. L. Thomas, Stafford-tp.; Geo. Egnew and Nathan Mathews, Wilmington-tp.; T. D. Gross and M. Waterman, Union-tp.; O. C. Clark and Wm. Embra, Keyser-tp.; G. Showers and Thos. Dally, Richland tp.; W. Childs and P. Gushwa, Fairfield-tp.; R. J. Daniels and Jerry Hemstreet, Smithfield tp.; John N. Clark and John Hammond, Franklin-tp.; Wm. Emerson and John Stearns, Troy-tp.

On motion of Dr. Ford, all the papers of DeKalb county were requested to publish these proceedings.

Adjourned.

J. R. COSPER, Chairman.
T. D. GROSS, Secretary.

HUNTSVILLE, KAN. July 1, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER, Dear Sir:—I hasten these few minutes while waiting for my team to feed, to pen a few items from this section of the country.

One week ago to-day at about 4 p. m., Miss Barbary Withroder was struck by lightning, killing her instantly—marks on the side of her neck, down across her breast, were plainly to be seen. She had her arms full of stocks to carry into the house when struck, as she was preparing to bake bread and get supper. The harvesters were all out in the harvest field, and she being alone at the house, was not found for two hours after being struck. She was keeping house for Mr. John Guller, one mile west of us.

Harvesting is about over here. The heavy rains came very near spoiling some wheat that had been headed and shocked previous to the rains. Spring crops look fine, corn tasseling out, oats will be ready to cut in a few days.

A railroad is now in contemplation that will run in a south-westerly direction from Sterling, which will pass near our place.

Shaffer and Stahl, O. K.—weather beautiful.

Mr. John Culbertson and wife paid us a visit last week. John is running a threshing machine and expects to come into our settlement as soon as farmers are ready. He says there is more threshing here than one machine can do.

The wheat market opened at 60 cents and dropped to 45 cents. Eggs and butter are selling at 12½ cents.

A letter from Geo. Picker a few days ago reports a great deal of rain down there; said they could not run a machine for harvesting, east of the Valley river.

The COURIER is a welcome visitor every week.

T. B. T.

Imagination works wonders. How disgusting it is to see young men when away from home mingling with crowds of people undertake to put on drunken airs; see them waltz around some corner to a pump, take a drink of water and come back winking as though they had seen a bottle, presently they hunch a friend and go again, take another sup of water which produces the desired effect upon their imagination, and they come back reeling in imitation of some old toper, thus being able to attract the attention of bystanders and create an impression derogatory the character of the actor, and disgraceful in the estimation of true gentlemen and ladies. Young men who are ambitious in this direction will have cause to regret their boyish desires for drunken popularity when they arrive at more mature years.

TOWN TALK.

The Star sells a fine unlaundried, all-linen bosom and cuff shirt for 75c that sells all over the town for $1.00.

Other clothing men keep pacing up and down in front of the Star Clothing House, and wonder "how" the thing is done.

"They can't sell at such and such a price. It's mere talk," etc. Still our people get convinced on visiting the Star.

Brother clothiers engage men to buy up our cheap suits for them; still they say we are not offering bargains!

We again assert that we shall not sell our goods to merchants; our customers shall derive all the advantages of low prices.

Our sales in two days were $2,300.00.

All our citizens who study economy, quality and style, should inspect the stock of Sam, Pete & Max's.

An extra force of salesmen in attendance at the Star Clothing House.

As we have stores in all the principal cities in the west, we have faculties for buying that small dealers do not possess.

8 oz. Duck Overall for 40c at the Star Clothing House. They are selling at 75c elsewhere.

A German friend of ours who has the misfortune to be in the same business as we are in, stood in front of the Star Clothing House, threw up both hands, and exclaimed, "Mine Got, vat a crowd of beoples!"

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE annual college boat-race between Harvard and Yale, rowed at New London, Ct., was won by Harvard with ease.

A MOST extraordinary confession has been made by Harley G. Brown, the man who by placing obstructions on the track wrecked an express train near Claymont, Del., and caused the death of four persons. Brown admits that he placed the obstructions on the track, not to wreck the train, but to signal it to stop, and thus make it appear that he had averted a fearful catastrophe, hoping in this way to secure from the Railroad Company a grateful recognition of his services in the shape of a position on the road.

TWO MEN entered the office of Grant & Aulls, Philadelphia brokers, and, while one drew the attention of the clerk to the quotations of stocks, the other seized a package containing twelve United States $1,000 bonds. The robbery was not discovered until both had escaped.

THE WEST.

HON. SIDNEY BREESE, who has for many years been one of the Judges of the Illinois Supreme Court, and who, some thirty years ago, served a term in the United States Senate, died at Pinckneyville, Perry county, Illinois, of heart disease, on the 27th of June. He was 78 years of age, was a native of the State of New York, and became a resident of Illinois in 1818, being admitted to the bar in 1820....Latest intelligence from Oregon is that the Klamath braves are getting restless and eager to join in the war. They have already commenced murdering the settlers and stealing stock....The following is the list of the killed and wounded in Bernard's fight with the Indians at Curry Creek, Idaho: Killed—Theodore J. Schultz and W. S. Marriott, of F. Company; H. Gransinger, of A Company. Wounded—J. George Foster, of D Company; George C. Hanson, of G Company—all of the First Cavalry. A citizen scout named Myers was killed. The Indian camp, with tons of property, was destroyed by the troops, and much ammunition captured.

A MURDEROUS climax has been reached in the quarrel of the two factions claiming control of the city administration of East St. Louis, Ill. A party under Mayor Bowman made an attack on the quarters of the metropolitan police of the other faction, and were repulsed by a lively fire of musketry from the station. When the Bowman party approached, they demanded admittance. This they were refused, and ordered to leave the place at once. An effort was made as if to enter the building by force, when the Metropolitans commenced firing into the crowd from the windows of the upper story. The attacking party also fired, and, in all, sixteen shots were discharged. Two men were killed outright and several wounded. The besiegers gathered up their wounded and beat a hasty retreat.

A CINCINNATI telegram says: "The movement against the use of agricultural machinery is reaching such proportions in Ohio and Indiana as to seriously alarm the farmers. Scores of reaping machines have already been destroyed, and every day brings reports of fresh depredations. On other machines notices were posted threatening their destruction if their owners do not lay them aside and employ men to cut their grain. Many farmers are yielding and discarding their machines."....A dispatch from Hat Creek, Wyoming, says a coach from Deadwood, with six passengers, was attacked by road agents, sixty-five miles south of Deadwood. Only two road agents came in view, and, after placing the passengers in line and robbing four of them, they advanced to Daniel Finn, who drew his revolver, shooting one robber in the region of the groin. Finn was about to shoot again, when he was shot by an accomplice of the robber, who was hid in ambush. The ball entered at the left side of the nose, and, passing through the mouth, came out in front of the right ear, inflicting a painful, but not serious, wound. The robbers then retreated, firing several shots, wounding two other passengers slightly....Messrs. Victor F. Lawson & Co., proprietors of the Chicago Daily News, have effected the purchase of the Chicago Evening Post, with its Associated Press franchise, presses, type, good-will, subscription lists, etc., paying therefor $16,000 in cash. THE SOUTH.

THERE were two hangings in Texas on Friday, June 28. Pablo Paras, a Mexican, was executed at Corpus Christi for the murder of Dr. Newman in 1870, and George Solomon, a negro, was executed at Fairfield for the murder of his wife and step-daughter in June, 1877.

EX-GOV. S. B. PACKARD was before the Potter sub-committee, at New Orleans, the other day, and repeated his story of his election as Governor, and how, as he claims, he was euchred out of the office, by the Wayne McVeagh commission. Packard said his title to the office of Governor of Louisiana was as good as that of Hayes to the Presidency, and he considered them both good. He stated that if the President had acknowledged him as Governor he would have been able to maintain himself with ease.

THE fine steamer Capital City, plying on the Mississippi river between Vicksburg and St. Louis, was burned at Memphis on the 2d inst. A grain elevator caught fire from the burning vessel, and was also destroyed. Two passengers on the Capital City lost their lives in the flames. The property loss is estimated at $250,000.

THE great race at Louisville, Ky., on the Fourth of July, between the Kentucky horse Ten Broeck, and the California mare Mollie McCarthy, to witness which thousands of people gathered from every quarter of the country, resulted in a walk over for Ten Broeck, the California mare, much to the disgust of her backers from the Pacific coast, being distanced in the first heat. The race was for a stake of $20,000.

GENERAL.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says that secret-service agents are making large captures of counterfeit silver coin, and vast quantities of fraudulent coin have already accumulated in the treasury. Inspection shows that they are cast in molds made of plaster of Paris. Some of the new coins discovered are so excellent in color and weight that it is difficult, even by the acid test, to distinguish them from the genuine coin. The only means by which they are detected is by weight. It costs about 40 per cent. of the current value of the genuine coin to manufacture the spurious. They are said to be largely circulated from Chicago, Indianapolis, and St. Louis....There was an important conference at the Executive Mansion in Washington a few days ago, participated in by the President, Secretaries Evarts and McCrary, and Gens. Sherman and Ord. The matter under consideration was the condition of things on the Mexican border. The situation is regarded as very serious, and, although nothing definite was decided upon, the subject will no doubt receive renewed attention at an early meeting of the Cabinet.

THE steamer France sailed from New York for London the other day with the largest shipment of live cattle ever sent out from that port in a single steamer. She took out 500 head.

IN view of the urgent demand for troops for service on the plains, orders have been issued to the various recruiting officers to hasten, as far as practical, enlistments, in order to bring up the numerical force of the army to 25,000 men, the maximum number authorized by law.

A SAD accident befell a picnic party near Pittsburgh, Pa., on the Fourth of July. A storm came up and blew down a tree upon a wagon in which a number of persons had taken refuge. Seven of them were killed, and several wounded....Dr. James C. Ayer, the well-known patent-medicine man, has just died at his home in Lowell, Mass. He leaves an estate valued at $20,000,000....The celebration of the centenary of the massacre of Wyoming, which occurred July 3, 1778, came off at Wilkesbarre, Pa., on the 3d and 4th insts., with President Hayes in attendance to lend interest to the occasion....Samuel J. Tilden sailed for Europe on the 4th inst.

POLITICAL.

ARMSTRONG, who was nominated by the Greenbackers for Governor of Pennsylvania, has withdrawn from the field.

PRESIDENT HAYES was interviewed at Wilkesbarre, Pa., whither he went to attend the Wyoming centennary. He expressed himself, regarding the Potter investigation, that the whole affair, so far, was a farce—an example, indeed, of much cry and little wool; or, more correctly, no wool at all. If they had accomplished anything, it was the reaffirming by Congress of his title, which was, probably, what they did not start out to do. He thought certain Republicans, some of whom he named, originated the affair, and were conducting its operations under cover. Secretary Sherman was also interviewed, and said he believed the story told by Weber to the committee was concocted within the last ten days. He thought such a story would deceive no one acquainted with the darkness of Louisiana politics. Mr. Sherman said if he had the most distant recollection of having written the so-called "Sherman letter" he would acknowledge it promptly, for there is much in it that he would have said had he been writing at that time, but he had no recollection whatever of having written a letter to Anderson and Weber at any time.

WASHINGTON.

EX-GOV. NOYES, of Ohio, who returned from his post as Minister to Paris to testify before the Potter committee, has had a hearing. He stated that he was in attendance upon the Canvassing Board in Florida during the last Presidential election. He did not go at the request, or with the knowledge of, Gov. Hayes, and while there did not receive either telegrams, letters or communications of any sort from Gov. Hayes. He took a legal part in the proceedings of the canvass, arguing cases before the Board of Canvassers, etc. He undertook to find out the facts relating to the alleged frauds in Alachua county, Archer precinct No. 2, and, owing to parties swearing one way and immediately thereupon directly opposite, he lost all confidence in them, but, finally, from diligent inquiry, and the consistent testimony of some forty or fifty Republicans that they had voted the Republican ticket, he reached the honest conclusion that the count as returned was correct. The witness pronounced the statement made by Gen. Cocke before the Florida sub-committee, to the effect that he (witness), Cowgill, Gov. Stearns, and McLin were locked together in the room of the Secretary of State before the meeting of the board, an unqualified falsehood. After the vote on Florida had been cast McLin came to me greatly depressed and said he did not know what would become of him; that he had so excited the hostility of the Democrats that he could not longer live in Florida in peace; that he was poor and sick and almost in despair. I said to him: "Mr. McLin, you have done your duty honestly and fairly, as I think, and I shall take great pleasure in saying so to Gov. Hayes if he shall be declared President of the United States, and I will take pleasure also in recommending you for some position where you can take care of yourself and family." Gov. Noyes then submitted in evidence two letters written to him by McLin in a very friendly spirit, in which he pictured very elaborately the frauds practiced by the Democrats and the delight which he experienced upon learning the success of the Republican party, and embracing in the last letter the request that the witness should aid him in securing the position of District Judge of Florida....L. G. Dennis was called before the committee. He testified that Alachua precinct, where he (Dennis) lived, was assigned to Noyes. In an interview between Noyes and Dennis the former told the latter that he was going to put him on the witness-stand. Dennis replied that he had better not, as it would be equivalent to his giving away the case, and Dennis was not put on the stand....A Mr. Glasscock, the keeper of an eating-house, where Mrs. Jenks boarded last winter, was examined. He testified that he had repeated talks with Mrs. Jenks, and saw her the day she had her first interview with Secretary Sherman last winter. Mrs. Jenks was very angry then. She said Sherman had insulted her, and that she had a letter in her reach which would make him rue the day he had crossed her. Mr. Glasscock asked her what letter it was, and Mrs. Jenks said it was a guarantee given by him to Weber and Anderson.

THE State of Indiana has put in a claim of $600,000 against the Government. The most of it is for interest on her war debt, which was paid by the General Government.

WILLIAM E. CHANDLER was again before the Potter Committee on the 29th ult., on which occasion Ben Butler more fully outlined the intention of laying the foundation for impeaching the President by attempting to prove that the inauguration of Hayes was the result of a bargain. Butler's starting point was the interview which Chandler had with Stanley Matthews ten days before the inauguration. Matthews urged Chandler to use his influence to prevent President Grant from recognizing the Packard Government, as it was the intention of Hayes to recognize the Nicholls and the Hampton Governments. This, Chandler said, was the first intimation of dishonor and the dishonorable course that was afterward followed by the administration. Matthews said he had examined the question, and did not think that Hayes' title and Packard's title were on the same footing, "as the Returning Board counted the Presidential electors, while the Legislature determined the election of Governor." Chandler urged that such a course would give a Republican administration and a Democratic Senate, but Stanley Matthews replied that it had been or would be arranged that the Republican Senators would be elected. Chandler furnished a long list of political workers from Florida that had been appointed to positions on his recommendation....T. D. Dennis, of Florida, was examined, and, in answer to questions, told of his interview with the President, who said he "was one of the few men that this administration could take care of," and asked him what he wanted. Dennis was appointed to a place in the Department of Architecture; drew pay for several months without doing any work; got tired of this, resigned, and was appointed in the secret service; didn't think the President knew anything of these appointments; thought the President had very little influence with the administration, or he would have secured him (witness) a good appointment....Gen. Tom Anderson, of the Louisiana Returning Board, was examined. He denied having anything to do with forging the names of any of the electors to electoral returns....Mrs. Capt. Jenks was recalled, but nothing of importance was elicited. Being asked whether she had offered to pay anybody for Sherman's letter, she said, "How could I, for, search the world from zone to zone, I could not call one spot of ground my own." In response to an inquiry as to what her occupation is, she said, "I am a general genius, but now 'Othello's occupation is gone.' The Republicans are dead in Louisiana."

MRS. CAPT. JENKS was again before the Potter committee on the 1st inst., and admitted, rather reluctantly, that her brother, Mr. Murdock, has been provided with an appointment in the New Orleans Custom House since the present investigation was begun....Boulds Baker was put on the stand, but absolutely refused to testify or answer any questions. He is the man who telegraphed to Tom Young, of Ohio, urging the appointment of Postmaster General Key as a member of Mr. Hayes' Cabinet.

EMILE L. WEBER, a brother of D. A. Weber, Anderson's fellow Supervisor of Elections, was summoned before the Potter Committee on the 2d inst., and read a statement setting forth that "he had no personal knowledge that Democratic intimidation had existed in the parishes of East and West Feliciana. His brother and Anderson had informed him that the two parishes had gone fairly Democratic. Great influence was brought to bear upon his brother to make his protest, and he had been approached very frequently to use his influence with his brother to effect the signing of the protest. He saw Andreson sign his protest, and saw the blanks therein after Anderson had left. Weber had, in conversation with Secretary Sherman, explained to him that his brother thought his parish had gone Democratic, and he was disposed to take back his protest, whereupon Sherman assured him that his brother would be cared for and requested that he send his brother to him. His brother, on the day he received it, showed him Sherman's letter of assurance, and said he had received it direct from Sherman. Weber was familiar with the handwriting of Sherman, and was satisfied that the letter was written by that gentleman. The Sherman letter was the subject of great mortification to the Weber family, and for this reason it was destroyed in 1877. Mrs. Jenks was in no way connected with the authorship of the Sherman letter. In regard to the agreement between James E. Anderson and D. A. Weber, I here state that I personally know that such an agreement was entered into, and was substantially the same as has been presented. My brother was murdered March 7. In the issue of the paper of which he was editor previous to his death he threatened to publish certain letters and a statement emanating from the State Auditor's office, and that is supposed to have supplied the immediate cause of his death." Mr. Cox, of the committee, produced a letter written by the witness to a cousin in St. Louis, in March, 1877, in which he described with much feeling the murder of his brother, and charged the Democrats with the crime. Weber protested against the reading of this letter, asserting that the statements contained therein were false, and that it was written with the expectation that it would be published at the time, thereby creating a feeling in the North in favor of the Packard Government.

E. L. WEBER was again before the Potter Committee on the 3d inst., and testified, in regard to the alleged frauds in Louisiana, that it was arranged before election by Kellogg, Thomas C. Anderson, and Packard to secure affidavits of intimidation in the parishes of East and West Feliciana for the purpose of throwing out those parishes. He was assured by Kellogg and others that if he would use his influence with his brother, having him make a protest, he (witness) would be returned to the Senate. He was defeated for the State Senate by about 1,200 majority, and was returned by the Returning Board as elected by about 600 majority. "Packard told me a few days before the election that, if he and Hayes did not get any votes in East and West Feliciana, he was going to be Governor and Hayes was going to be President. He told me this in the presence of Mr. Armistead, Mr. Duncan and others, whom I do not now remember. He said the best way to dispose of the Democratic majority was to throw out the vote of the county; that was better than making a Republican canvass, and I know of my personal knowledge that Kellogg employed L. B. Jenks to keep James E. Anderson away from the parish, and to prevent his holding an election there as Supervisor." Witness stated that some of the visiting statesmen had interviews with Eliza Pinkston in the Custom House before she was brought before the Returning Board. He thought one of those who interviewed her was Senator Sherman. He was of the opinion that the Eliza Pinkston outrage was a put-up job. Witness said Mrs. Jenks came to his house and stated that she knew of the existence of the Sherman letter, and was in search of it, and would pay well for it. Witness said that since he came to Washington to testify he had been approached by friends of Secretary Sherman on two or three occasions and told if he would give evidence contradictory of Anderson's story he (witness) would be well provided for. Witness said he had already been used as a tool, and he didn't propose to be so used again....The committee adjourned till Wednesday, July 10.

FOREIGN.

THE gold medal of the French Geographical Society was presented to Henry M. Stanley, the explorer, in Paris, the other day, in the presence of a brilliant assemblage....A splendidly-contested match took place in London, on June 28, between Capt. Bogardus, the famous American pigeon-shot, and Pennel, the no less well-known Englishman. It resulted in a victory for Bogardus, who killed seventy birds out of 100. Pennel killed sixty-eight.

ADVICES from Havana state that the campaign of the Spaniards against the Cubans, without any battles, cost the former 80,000 men, and the island is a vast cemetery. Five steamers are reported on the way from Spain to carry home troops. Martinez Campos had begun the reduction of Government expenses on the island by giving up one-half of his own salary as Captain General.

THE inauguration of the statute of the republic in Paris on the 30 ult. was the occasion of an immense popular demonstration. The attendance of people from outside the city is stated to be hundreds of thousands, and the national festival in honor of the Exhibition was an event of vast interest and consequence.

The Brain a Phonograph.

Students of De Quincey who have been delighted and instructed by his brilliant paper on "The Palimpsest of the Human Brain," would do well to read again that most suggestive essay in connection with speculations just advanced by Dr. C. William Siemens, bearing upon physiological research. The discovery of the microphone and its two elder sisters, the telephone and the phonograph, the doctor thinks, will probably be regarded as one of the greatest achievements of the present century, and the phenomena presented by them may reveal the secrets of animate organization. He proceeds to trace an analogy between the action of the brain in the exercise of memory and of the phonograph in reproducing the impressions it received. Briefly his statement of the case is this: The impressions received through the senses are communicated to the corpuscular bodies imbedded in the gray substance of the brain; these corpuscular bodies, in which the sensitive nerves terminate, are connected by delicate filaments with the nervous system of volition, on which they react, and, that the mind may have the power of dealing with impressions received in the past, there must be some material which permanently receives these impressions. He then asks whether the gray substance of the brain be not like a store-house, containing the accumulated treasures of our knowledge and experience, to be called into use by the directing power of the mind, in turning on, as it were, one phonographic barrel after another. On this theory there may be given an explanation of dreams, hallucinations, etc., in states or conditions where the control of the will is weakened and the imprints of the past in the brain becomes confused and enter into strange combinations. That the appearance of things around us may find a permanent lodgment through some form of impression in the gray matter of the brain, as well as sounds, has lately been shown by Dr. Willoughby Smith. He substituted crystalline selenium for carbon in the microphone, and when a ray of sunlight fell on the selenium a noise like that of a steam hammer was heard.—New York Times.

Telegraphic Eccentricities.

One of the chief eccentricities of the telegraphic wire is frequently to refuse to do its duty altogether, and, pile on the battery power as you may, probably not a vestige of current reaches the distant end. Before the transfer of the telegraphs to the Government, it was no uncommon thing for the companies occupying the roads and canals to have half a dozen repeaters or automatic clerks between London and the North, in order to get their traffic through. Practically, in fair weather, there is no limit to the distance the current will travel; but in bad fogs and wintry weather the loss of current at the supporting poles is so considerable that the greatest difficulty is sometimes experienced in keeping up the communication with distant centers. Spiders are the bane of the telegraph; they choke up the cups of the insulators with their webs and nests, and, in foggy weather, render them conductors rather than insulators.

The tendency of the action of the atmospheric electricity during thunder storms, on the telegraph, is generally to demagnetise the instruments, thereby causing the needles to move in a contrary direction; or, in the case of a Morse instrument, to cause the paper slip to record dots only instead of the proper code of dots and dashes. It also sometimes causes the total or partial destruction of the apparatus, and, as a consequence, scares the employes present. Lightning, in its eagerness to get to earth, has been known to blow the telegraph apparatus to pieces, fusing the wires that form the electro-magnets and charring the wood-work. Where the earth connection of the wire has been made to a metal gas-pipe, an occurrence of this description has been found to melt the pipe and fire the gas; while on more than one such occasion the flame of the gas has in its turn melted a contiguous water-pipe, and thus saved the people from very serious damage, if not from total destruction. It may be added that those earth connections which are attached to water and gas mains are considered the most reliable.—English paper.

Source of Infectious Diseases.

All of the infectious diseases undoubtedly possess an original habitat, where it is probable they are now as always capable of spontaneous origin in their primitive form, whatever that may be. The difficulty of tracing disease-types through various localities and among different peoples of the globe have, up to this time, prevented a precise knowledge upon the point, which time may yet bring us. It seems tolerably certain, however, that the several acute infectious diseases named below have the nativities here attributed to them:

The Cholera—Has its home in India.

The Small-Pox—In the East. Known in China nearly 1,200 years before Christ.

The Plague—An Oriental disease. Has a distinct geographical range.

The Typhus Fever—Ireland is its birthplace.

The Typhoid and Relapsing Fevers—Have fixed centers in Ireland, Galicia, Upper Silesia and some provinces of Northern Italy.

The Military Fever—Is endemic in a few provinces of France, Germany and Italy.

Scarlatina—Probably native to Arabia.

Epidemic Dysentery—Home in the tropics.

The Dengue—In Southern latitudes, with sharp geographical limits.

The Yellow Fever—Distinctly traced to the Antilles.

The Chabalongo—Chili.

The Verruga—Peru.

Certain it seems that no general influence of exposure or bad hygienic surroundings will establish the typical disease away from its local habitat, except through the penalties of heredity.—Logan's Physics of the Infectious Diseases.

Whales in England.

A vessel recently arrived at Liverpool with the extraordinary freight of three living whales, brought from the coast of Labrador, and intended for public aquariums. They were each about fourteen feet long, eight feet girth, and weighing half a ton. On the voyage they were placed in long wooden boxes, reposing upon a bed of sea-weed, and being flushed with water from a bucket every few minutes. The flushing had the curious effect of peeling off strips of their skin, so that the coat will be entirely shed by the time they get into their permanent tanks. No food was given them on the voyage. When they were being removed ashore two of them, it is said, emitted a very peculiar kind of scream.

Dividing a Second into a Million Parts.

Scientific investigation at the present time is able to cite among its achievements a machine capable of dividing a second into a million parts—to an instrument where the inaccuracy of the thousandth part of a second would be a greater comparative error than the loss of an hour a day by an ordinary watch. Such, in fact, is the chronoscope for measuring the velocity of a projectile within the bore of a gun. This instrument consists of six brass disks, each thirty-six inches in circumference, and about one-sixth of an inch thick, these being firmly secured to a spindle or axle, geared to a train of wheelwork, the whole being driven by a weight somewhat similar to a clock weight. Each wheel travels five times as fast as the one immediately preceding it, so that a very rapid motion of rotation is imparted to the disks, the rate of speed being measured by a clock or stop-watch attached to one of the slower-moving wheels. When the instrument is in full spin, the disks are revolving at the rate of about twenty-eight times in one second, and as they are thirty-six inches in circumference, an inch of disk corresponds to about the thousandth of an inch to the millionth of a second, read off by means of a graduated scale, vernier and magnifier, to the thousandth of an inch. The passage of the shot in the bore of the gun is recorded on the edge of each disk by a tiny electric spark derived from a Ruhmkorff coil. A brass discharger is fixed in an ebonite plate, and opposite each disk wires pass from this through an electric battery and coil to the gun, where they communicate with the interior of the bore by means of screw plugs in the side of the gun. The shot cannot pass out of the bore without cutting the wires thus communicating with the inside, and as each wire is cut, a spark is emitted from a discharger, and the edge of the corresponding disk receives a mark on some prepared paper with which it is covered.

Pass it Around.

Gossip goes the round of the city as lemonade stands do in the summer.

If you wish to be asked out every night learn to manufacture it; it is very easy; take equal parts of the flour of malice and essence of impudence, with several peppercorns of improbability to spice it; some candied lemon peel of moral reflections to make it light of digestion.

If you can also chop up any real Paschal lamb of innocence in very fine pieces, so that it is minced and hashed and unrecognizable forever; serve it with the vinegar of malignity and the fresh mint of novelty and you will henceforward be the very crème of gossip. Run in and out the best houses with your concoctions and there will be no end to your popularity. You will be as refreshing to the thirst of the dwellers therein as are the lemonade-sellers to the throats of the populace.

An Alligator's Meal.

On the 31st ult., while some of the hands were going to their work in the field of Col. McLeod, adjoining town, they discovered a very large alligator making its way to Hamburg lake. Col. McLeod fired both barrels of a shot-gun, loaded with buckshot, into his neck. Then a field hoe was brought up, but the first blow shivered the stout pine helve. An ax was then brought, with which he was killed. An examination showed that it had feasted upon a hog's head, a turtle, and about a peck of blackberries. Though but fifteen feet in length, it was the largest ever killed in this part of Florida in the lakes or fresh-water streams. The buckshot did not penetrate the skin. No one that we have met ever knew before that alligators were fond of blackberries, and how one can manage to pick the berries is still a mystery.—Lake City (Fla.) Reporter.

Americanisms.

Among the best-known Americanisms, unused and scarcely understood in England are locomotive for "engine," railroad for "railway," horse-cars for "tramway," depot for "station," switch for "shunt," baggage for "luggage," store for "shop," bureau for "chest of drawers," clever for "good-natured," boards for "deals," calico for "prints," corn for "maize," dry goods for drapers' articles or "haberdashery," fall for "autumn," dress for "gown," fix for "repair," guess for "think," hardware for "ironmongery," hold on for "stop," homely for "ugly," loafer for "lounger," mad for "angry," mail for "post," pantaloons for "trousers," vest for "jacket," quite for "very," rooster for "cock," sick for "ill," sleigh for "sledge," stoop for "porch," suspenders for "braces," venison for "deer meat," and woods for "a wood."

Pigs With Solid Hoofs, and Pigs that Are Not Pigs.

In Texas there are pigs whose hoofs are not divided like those of ordinary pigs, but are each in one solid piece.

If this is true, it is a strange thing; but here's something that seems even stranger still:

The Guinea-pig is not a pig, and there are no Guinea-pigs in Guinea. However, there are plenty in Guiana, and, as the names of these places are very much alike, perhaps people got mixed in calling them. The places are far enough apart, though; but this you can see by your maps.

At any rate, the Guinea-pig is a sort of cousin of the squirrel and rabbit, and is fond of potato and apple peelings, carrot-tops, parsley, and cabbage; but he likes best the leaves from the tea-pot.—"Jack-in-the-Pulpit," in St. Nicholas for July.

PAINLESS DEATH.

The Deep-Sea Soundings of the Dark Abyss.

Perhaps one of the most interesting chapters in Dr. Clarke's new book is that which treats of the visions of the dying. The phenomenon of death is only little understood. The mystery which shrouds death is not greater than that which shrouds birth, or thought, or volition; yet religion and various other things have all conspired to misinterpret its attendant phenomena. "One of the most common errors," says Dr. Clarke, "is the idea that pain and dying are inseparable companions. The truth is they rarely go together. Occasionally, the act of dissolution is a painful one, but this is an exception to the general rule. The rule is that unconsciousness, not pain, attends the final act. Convulsive twitchings, livid features, gurgling in the throat, and similar ghastly symptoms, which mark the last moment, are only exhibitions of unconscious automatic action. The testimony of the dying, so long as they are able to give any testimony, is that their sufferings do not increase as the termination of life approaches, but, on the contrary, grow less. The following incident illustrates the truth of this remark, and, so far as a single instance is of value, confirms what has been said as to the painlessness of dissolution. A medical friend, whom I attended professionally in his last illness, was aware of its incurable character. Supported by an intelligent faith in God and immortality, he prepared himself with admirable courage and unfaltering trust for the final change. In consequence of continual and severe pain, he was obliged, during the last few months of his life, to take opium daily. He sent for me one night soon after midnight. A brief examination was sufficient to show that the end was near.

"Do these symptoms mean perforation?" asked Dr. ——.

"They do," was the reply.

"Then I have reached the end of the chapter," he quietly added; "how long shall I probably last?"

"That you know," I said, "as well as anyone; perhaps twenty-four hours or thirty-six hours."

Scarcely heeding the reply, he continued:

"I am ready; but promise me this; that I shall not suffer pain if you can prevent it."

"The promise was given, of course, and I agreed to see him every hour or two as long as he lived. This being done, I said to him: "One thing remains; how shall I communicate with you when, at the very close, the time comes that you cannot indicate whether you suffer or not?"

"After a little talk, the following signals were agreed upon: He was to indicate a negative answer, or no, by raising the forefinger; and affirmative answer, or yes, by raising the forefinger and the one next it also. One finger was no; two fingers, yes. Having arranged this matter, he took rather more than his habitual dose of opium, and was soon comparatively quiet. The pain did not return. For twelve or fifteen hours he appeared much as usual; conversed with his family and friends, and was cheerful and serene. Then as nature's anesthetic began to act, he became dull and heavy. In answer to repeated inquiries as to pain, he constantly replied in the negative. At length he answered less readily. For an hour or so before death he answered only by the signal of his fingers which had been agreed upon, and by that signal he replied quickly and intelligently. Fifteen minutes before dissolution I asked him, 'Do you suffer pain?' He instantly made the negative signal by raising the forefinger. After this he made no sign, but slept peacefully to the end."

DR. HUILLET, late of Pondicherry, undertakes to show that vaccination was known to a certain Dahnwantori, who flourished several thousand years before Hippocrates. Dr. Huillet arrived at this conclusion from the contents of certain Hindoo manuscripts preserved at Pondicherry, in which are described the effects produced by inoculating the human subject with the matter taken from a man or a cow. The secondary disease is described as identical in appearance with its source, with this difference, that it is quite harmless.

Facts and Considerations

For All the People to Deliberate and Act Upon.

RIVERSIDE, Ill., July 1, 1878.

In a recent conversation with a prominent journalist, and a gentleman occupying a position of great influence in the city of Chicago, he made the assertion that our national greenback currency was unconstitutional.

I have given it careful research and consideration, and herewith present a few facts and reflections drawn from general information and reference to historic colonial causes of the formation of our Government, the object for, and the ways and means by, which it was established; its constitutional provisions for development, preservation and perpetuity.

The judicial constructions and explanations of the powers of the legislative department, under its provisions, are found in the United States Supreme Court reports and financial authorities, among which are those of Spaulding, Colwell and W. A. Berkie, of Grand Rapids, Mich. The latter is invaluable as a concise compilation of financial history—especially that of our own country—with valuable statistics, and should be in every public and private library. As this subject is second to no other in its influence on the general welfare and prosperity of all, it demands close investigation and thorough consideration.

Our national treasury notes, made full legal-tender money for all public and private dues, are not only constitutional, but the most convenient and substantial that, as a nation, we can possibly acquire—based as they are upon all the realty, wealth and industries of the nation. When its merits are familiar to all, it will form one of the strongest bonds of common unity between the various sections of our country, for the preservation of which every citizen will be bound by the most indissoluble ties of self-interest; to protect and preserve, one of the most potent influences for promoting the industries of our country, and the general welfare and happiness of the people. Among the many potent colonial grievances of the founders of our Government I find prominent the abolition by the Crown of colonial laws making their bills of credit legal-tender money for the payment of all public and private debts—a right they had exercised from 1690, until abrogated by the Crown in the New England colonies in 1751 and against all others in 1763. Dr. Franklin, by diplomacy, obtained permission in 1773 to make them receivable for taxes and debts due the colonies that issued them. He stated to the British Board of Trade that when paper money was first issued in Pennsylvania, it gave new life to business, promoted the settlement of new lands, greatly increased the inhabitants, and increased the exportation to England more than ten-fold.

I understand it to be a high maxim of judicial wisdom that the intent of the act is the life essence of all obligations, and that the letters of a contract are as dependent upon the intent or spirit that gave vitality to those letters as the physical form of man is dependent on the spirit pervading its tissues, to give it life and force in the performance of its functions.

In 1690 Massachusetts issued £7,000 in 10-shilling notes legal tender to the treasury. They were ever at par with gold, and faithfully performed all the functions of money.

In 1755 the colony of Virginia issued a paper money, based on a specific tax, which never depreciated a farthing below the commodities of gold or silver.

After the close of the Revolution, the colony of North Carolina issued a large amount of legal-tender paper money. Its legal-tender clause was, of course, abrogated by the adoption of the United States constitution, but it was receivable for all debts due the State—and some 400,000 or 500,000 of those dollars remained in circulation over twenty years—at par with gold and silver.

Thomas Jefferson said, in his letters to Mr. Eppes, vol. 6. of his works: "Treasury bills bottomed on taxes—bearing or not bearing interest—as may be found necessary, thrown into circulation, will take the place of so much gold and silver. Bank paper must be suppressed and the circulation restored to the nation, where it belongs." Franklin said: "Any other well-founded credit is as much an equivalent as gold and silver. Paper money, well founded, has great advantages over gold and silver."

Sec. 8 of our national constitution empowers Congress:

"To levy and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

"To borrow money on the credit of the United States.

"To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

"To coin money and regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures. . . .

"To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officers thereof."

In the decision of the legal-tender cases the United States court says that "the acts of Congress known as the Legal-Tender acts are constitutional when applied to contracts made before their passage. They are also valid as applied to contracts made since"—11 Wallace, 682, and 12 Wallace, 457—which has twice been affirmed.—13 Wallace, 604, and 15 Wallace, 195.

In confirmation of that decision, Justice Strong said—12 Wall., 457—that "the Judiciary should presume, until the contrary is shown, that there has been no transgression by Congress. . . . Such has always been the rule"—4 Binney, 123. "It must be remembered that for weighty reasons it has been assumed as a principle in construing constitutions by the Supreme Court of the United States, by this court, and by every other court of reputation in the United States, that an act of the Legislature is not to be declared void unless the violation of the constitution is so manifest as to leave no reasonable doubt."

In the case of Fletcher vs. Peck—6 Crouch, 87—Chief Justice Marshall, who was intimate with the framers of our constitution, said: "It is not on slight implication and vague conjecture that the Legislature is to be pronounced to have transcended its powers and its acts to be considered void—the opposition between the constitution and the law should be such that the Judge feels a strong conviction of their incompatibility with each other."

In 1st Wheaton, 326, he said: "The constitution unavoidably deals in general language. It did not suit the purpose of the people, in framing this great charter of our liberties, to provide for minute specifications of its power, or to declare the means by which those powers should be carried into execution."

In 4th Wheaton, 405, that "a constitution, to contain an accurate detail of all the subdivisions of which its great powers will admit, and of all the means by which it may be carried into execution, would partake of the prolixity of a political code, and would scarcely be embraced by the human mind. It would probably never be understood by the public. Its nature, therefore, requires that only its great outlines should be marked; its import, objects designated, and the minor ingredients which compose those objects be deduced from the nature of those objects themselves."

In 6th Wheaton, 414—that

"America has chosen to be, in many respects, and to many persons, a nation, and for all these purposes her Government is complete; for all these objects it is supreme; it can, then, in effecting these objects, control all individuals or Governments within the American territory. . . . A constitution is framed for ages to come, and is designed to approach immortality as near as mortality can approach it. It is exposed to storms and tempests, and its framers must be unwise statesmen, indeed, if they have not provided it, as far as its nature will permit, with all the means of self-preservation from the perils it is sure to encounter. . . . When the law is not prohibited and is really calculated to effect any of the objects intrusted to the Government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department, and to tread on legislative ground. This court disclaims all pretense to such power."

And in 4th Wheaton, 421, he said:

"Let the end be legitimate; let it be within the scope of the constitution, and all the means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, and which are not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the constitution, are constitutional."

Section 3,588 of the Legal Tender act says: "United States notes shall be lawful money, and a legal tender in payment for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt."

It passed both houses of Congress, was approved by President Lincoln, with the sanction of his Cabinet, and was baptized in the blood of our soldiers, in our army and navy, furnished them food, raiment, supplies and munitions, provided for their families, educated their children, and saved the integrity of our nation, crowned our soldiers with laurels of victory, provided them with ample capital, on their return to peaceful vocations, to prosperously engage in congenial pursuits.

It has been unqualifiedly confirmed and twice reaffirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States and by the Supreme Courts of fifteen States, all but one that have passed upon it. Adopted by the people, and acceptably and profitably used for fifteen years: giving unparalleled prosperity to the productive industries of our country, until arch traitors to our prosperity in high positions of trust and honor, who, yielding (some through avarice, others in stupidity) to insidious allurements of scheming emissaries of moneyed autocrats, wantonly extirpated a large portion of it, and all the dollars of our daddies—causing bankruptcy, desolation and despair—until vast and rapidly increasing numbers are freely imbibing the ancestral spirit of their forefathers—which has now assumed an intensity that will not yield nor compromise—the just and inalienable rights of the people.

The constitutional obligation of Congress is as imperative to provide for their "general welfare," as it is to "provide for their defense;" as imperative as to "levy and collect taxes," duties, imposts, and excises, and to pay the debts of the nation, and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." The people will resent the abrogation of their right to make their treasury notes legal tender, and receivable for all domestic obligations, both public and private, with the full force of their supreme power at the ballot box, with as much force and tenacity as their fathers did the abrogation of like colonial laws, with the cartridge box.

They have partaken of the fruits thereof, and know that they are nutritious and good to promote their general welfare, prosperity, and happiness.

At the time of the formation of our constitution there existed but a confederation of various colonies, with representatives, entertaining conflicting views as to what power or privileges should be entertained by the several States, and what delegated to the General Government. It was a Hamiltonian aim to virtually form a kingdom, making the Presidential tenure of office for life; the Jeffersonian, to form a republic, with a limited tenure of office. There were numerous other grave differences, and it was the manifestation of great wisdom by the leading spirits of conciliation that they adopted but few constitutional barriers, and those pertaining only to fundamental principles, leaving to the people in future days the right to adjust and regulate other potent matters as the dictates of experience might suggest, having provided the means for an expression, of their requirements through their legislative representatives, and recreant indeed to their trusts are those representatives and executive chiefs who heed not the expressed will of their constituents.

The first declaration of principles expressed by the founders of our Government were that the "inalienable rights of the people were life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their powers from the consent of the governed."

The first expressed provisions of our constitution defining the powers of Congress are "to levy and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" (i. e. the people who constitute the body politic of the United States).

Hence the constitution expressly stipulates that Congress shall provide for the general welfare of the people, as well as for their defense: as well as for "levying and collecting taxes, duties, imposts, and excise, and to make laws necessary and proper therefor." It expressly provides that the people of individual States shall make nothing but gold and silver legal-tender money, but wisely omitted to bar the General Government of the United States from adopting such measures as the exigencies of the case or the general welfare of the people may require.

It is remunerative labor, not gold, silver, or bonds, that promotes the general welfare and happiness of mankind, and enables them, without deprivation or distress, "to pay taxes, duties, imposts and excises: to pay public and private debts; to provide ample sustenance and comfortable homes for families, schools for children, libraries and public halls for entertainment, and churches for all. Exchange of commodities is an essential attribute of civilization, a power that gives life and motion to its physical forces, its industries and commercial relations, so indispensible to the general welfare and happiness of mankind.

Money is an attribute of exchange: an equivalent used as a balance wheel to regulate and promote exchange of commodities; a measure of value of commodities; a barometer of confidence among men. When the amount of money in circulation meets the wants of trade, each has confidence in the ability of others to get what they need, but when it is contracted below the demands of business, and financial experts know that it does not exist, then bankers who have issued three demand currency dollars for each one of legal tender they possess—or profess to—lose their confidence in the ability (not integrity) of their customers, and suddenly withdraw their usual discounts, depriving business men of means to pay their debts; confidence fails; business men fail; banks fail to pay their three demand dollars with one legal tender; corporations fail; industry fails of means to pay; financial disaster and human deprivation and distress ensue.

Money represents ideal values; its standard is regulated by ideal conceptions of the people using it, or the power using it must have the force to cause its acceptance. Uncivilized tribes use shells, beads, etc. Heathen nations use metallic coins. As civilization advanced coin was found inadequate to meet the wants of commercial exchange, and, to meet the ideal conceptions of that age, a currency was founded on a coin basis—issuing three or more dollars for one of coin—which has for centuries been the basis of bank circulation—very truly characterized by Sir Robert Peel as "a relic of feudal days;" they are mute vassals of despotic, feudal lords, who hold their air castles by the confidence they can gain with some, and the power they hold over others of their serfs. They are inadequate to meet the legitimate requirements of freemen in progressive republics deriving their powers from the consent of the governed, and the developing genius of the age—constitutionally "promoting the progress of science and useful arts."

We have a population of 45,000,000 people, possessing about $40,000,000,000 of realty and personal wealth, and a legitimate annual industrial production of about $6,000,000,000—with an indebtedness, including national, State, municipal, corporate, and individual, of about $10,000,000,000, bearing an interest of about 6 per cent. per annum, amounting to $600,000,000 annually, with an annual current national expense of about $150,000,000 per annum, besides interest on national bonds, and the current expenses of States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals—all dependent on our circulating medium, the volume of which is inadequate to meet the imperative demands for the payment of interest, maturing obligations, and give remunerative value to our immense and rapidly-increasing productions, and properly facilitate their commercial exchange, and maintain and provide for the proper distribution of sustenance for all the people and facilities for compensative employment, requisites upon which the stability of our Government is largely dependent, and the general welfare of the people imperatively demands.

The discovery and application of steam, electricity, chemical combinations and labor-saving machinery have increased the volume and power of production and the facilities of commerce far beyond the feudal capacity of a currency based on a metallic standard to provide for the imperative needs of commerce and the general welfare of the industries of the people, as is clearly demonstrated by the financial condition of all countries in the world adhering to that standard. Under it business and the prosperity of the people will ever be (as they ever have been) subject to violent fluctuations, as the greed of their lords shall dictate or the fear of their vassals may produce. Such ever has been, and ever will be, the case as long as their issue is three or more times greater than the standard, redeemable on call.

In all civilized nations money is ever the product of statute law. All commodities or substances used as money are dependant on the legislation of Congress, Parliament or a decree of a monarch for legal-tender power, which has ever been granted as an aid of industrial productions and their commercial exchange, or of national defense or aggression. It is the most effective power used by individuals, corporations or nations for the promotion of industrial production, commerce and general prosperity. Upon the power of our national-treasury notes were we dependant during our late war; to them were we indebted for our country's prosperity at its close, and to their contraction and attempted abrogation are we indebted for the universal stagnation of business and the consequent deprivation and misery engendered thereby, which has created and is diffusing an intensity of feeling that has never been equaled save when the just rights of the people and the stability of our Government have been, as now, in peril. Vast and increasing numbers of the constituents of our Government are, for want of employment, unable to pay their taxes. Individuals, corporations and municipalities are unable to pay their obligations. Yet the administrators of our Government, under the guise and in the name of fairness and honor, despotically endeavor to govern and control the will of our people, that our limited circulating medium should be converted into millions more of interest-bearing bonds and its place supplied by feudalistic promises, of despotic lords enthroned in national banks, that they may compel their vassals to not only pay the interest on those bonds, but such tribute as their greed may dictate within the limits of laws made by their friendly patrons.

Continental money is often referred to as an illustration of the value of national issues; but such advocates fail to state that the Continental Congress—that issued them—possessed no power to make them legal tender or receivable for taxes. As that eminent jurist, Judge Story, says, "They only possessed the power of recommendation." They could not even get the consent of all the colonies to levy an impost duty of 5 per cent. on importations and prize goods. Yet that money enabled those patriots to successfully prosecute a war with one of the strongest nations of Europe.

The best historic illustration of the power of money founded on the credit of a nation is that of the republic of Venice, known as the credits of the Bank of Venice, founded and sustained on the realty, wealth and industria commerce of that republic (similar to our greenbacks or treasury notes made a full legal tender). It consisted of using the evidences of debt of that republic as money instead of coin, or a promise to pay coin that, in fact, did not exist (as some of our golden statesmen(?) advocate, and feudalistic financiers practice. It was the bulwark of their power in time of war; the promoter of their commerce and prosperity in time of peace, which was unparalleled by any nation in that age of the world—using a metallic standard—and existed for over 600 years, good in all their channels of commerce at home and abroad, and, because of its convenience and safety, maintained a premium of 20 per cent. over gold and silver for over two centuries, and was increased in volume from time to time as the needs of her industries and commerce required, rendering the Government indissoluble from internal causes and its people renowned as the peer of all nations for their industrial and commercial prosperity, and the cultivation of art, science and intellectual attainments. It continued its advancement until Napoleon crushed it in the gratification of his monarchical ambition. History fails to record one word of complaint from its patrons, one word of detraction from any source.

The palatial edifices of Venice, her canals, bridges and commercial harbor exist to-day, monuments of her industries, fostered and stimulated by the wise financial policy of that republic.

The mendicants that now infest the streets of Venice, the brigands that infest adjacent mountain retreats, are the legitimate offspring of its abrogation and consequent destruction of those industries, and our tramps are the offspring of the contraction of our circulating currency.

Labor sustains a similar relation to a proper monetary circulation that the respiratory organs of the human system do to the circulation of the blood.

Abnormally check the respiratory organs, and disease and disorganization inevitably result; abnormally curtail the employment of labor, and financial stagnation, distress and commercial disaster must ensue, retarding the advancement of civilization. Money placed in a Government bond is as useless to industry as a strong man placed in solitary confinement for debt.

It is a moral and physical impossibility to keep the industries and commercial relations of this country in a prosperous and substantial condition, such as will give remunerative employment to the people, by a monetary system based on a pure metallic standard. On such a standard it ever has been, and ever will be, subject to violent periodic fluctuations, because the standard is inadequate to supply the imperative requirements of production, preservation and commercial interchange.

The Bank of England, founded on a metallic base, backed by the full power of that kingdom, has been compelled to suspend specie payments eight times since 1788, and only saved many other times by a liberal supply of exchequer bills. It was suspended at one time for near a quarter of a century. England's noblest statesman, William Pitt, at first opposed its suspension, but on observing its results characterized the event as like finding a mountain of gold. It was a sad event for the great mass of the people that it ever resumed specie payment. England was never more prosperous than during that period; 8,000,000 acres of wild lands were made productive; the exportation of cotton goods alone increased from £7,000,000 in 1801 to £27,000,000 in 1822; the revenues increased from £20,000,000 to £50,000,000 per annum for eighteen years, and the people were able and willing to pay them without deprivation and distress. But to enable the bank to resume specie payments they adopted the despotic practice (imitated by McCulloch and Sherman) of contracting that most essential element of prosperity, the circulating medium, indispensable to the productive and commercial industries of the people, reducing three-fourths of the land-holders and nine-tenths of the artisans, mechanics and laborers to a comparative vassalage, and transforming productive lands to hunting grounds, for the gratification of a hereditary titled aristocracy and a banditti of moneyed autocrats, who were prominent instigators, aiders and abettors of our late rebellion, corruptors and hood-winkers of the leaders thereof as well as of our financial agents, who procured, by insidious frauds, many hundreds of millions of our Government bonds at 30 to 60 cents on the dollar when our Government was in peril promoted by their agencies with means and ways as fertile and potent as those of penitent Uncle Daniel or crafty Gould, of Wall street fame.

President Lincoln, with intuitive wisdom in his message Dec. 2, '61, said, in reference to "the first principles of popular government, the rights of the people" and the relations of capital and labor, that "Monarchy itself is sometimes hinted at as a possible refuge from the power of the people. In my present position I would scarcely be justified were I to omit raising a warning voice against this approach of returning despotism. . . . There is one point to which I ask brief attention. It is the effort to place capital on an equal footing with, if not above, labor in the structure of the Government. . . . Capital is only the fruit of labor, and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is superior to capital and deserves much the higher consideration. . . . No men living are more worthy to be trusted than those who toil up from poverty, none less inclined to take or touch aught which they have not honestly earned. Let them beware of surrendering a political power which they already possess, and which, if surrendered, will surely be used to close the door of advancement to such as they, and to fix new disabilities and burdens upon them, till all of liberty shall be lost. . . .

"There are already among us those who, if the Union be preserved, will live to see it contain 250,000,000. The struggle of to-day is not altogether for to-day; it is for a vast future also.

At that session of Congress, March 17, 1862, an act was passed making $60,000,000 of demand treasury notes, previously provided for, full legal-tender money—a true national currency—which has ever been at par with gold and silver. The necessities of the country were then imperative for more men, equipments and supplies, and we had within our own country all the materials required, but the Government was destitute of means to pay for them, its current expenses near $2,000,000 per day, and even brief delay portended disaster and direful consequences. In that emergency Hon. Thaddeus Stevens presented to the House a bill "To provide means to defray the expenses of the Government," providing for the issue of $900,000,000 more full legal-tender notes, convertible at the pleasure of the holder, which, as he expressed it, "produced a howl among the money changers as hideous as that sent up by their Jewish cousins when they were kicked out of the temple." The bill passed the House, but when it came before the Senate it there met the subtle influence of Belmont and his satellites, Secretary Sherman and prominent bankers of New England, New York and Philadelphia. Through their corrupt influence it was shorn of its highest attribute—its full legal-tender power—and rendered subservient to their schemes, ever subject to such depreciation as their greed chose from time to time to inflict. A conference committee of both houses was chosen to harmonize their differences. Senator Sherman, of Ohio, was a member of the Senate committee, and Hon. Thaddeus Stevens Chairman of the House committee. At the close of the final conference, that noble old commoner returned to the House with his hat and cane in his hand—with warm tears of humanity coursing down his venerable checks; meeting Judge Kelley, of Pennsylvania, in the rotunda, he said, "Yes, we had to yield; the Senate was stubborn. We did not yield until we found that the country must be lost or the banks gratified, and we have sought to save the country in spite of the cupidity of its wealthier citizens." Prophetic were some of his expressions in the discussion of that bill; he said: "When, a few years hence, the people shall have been brought to bankruptcy by their unregulated enterprise, I shall have the satisfaction to know that I attempted to prevent it." Sherman's policy has inflicted severe penalties on energy and enterprise, and paid a high premium on bold, audacious robbery of the people who sustained the integrity of our nation by moneyed autocrats, who have no sympathy with or respect for the principles of our Government, or the welfare of the people who protect and support it.

It was a maxim with President Lincoln that our Government was formed by, of and for the people. They preserved it from ruin solely with the aid of our national currency. It paid our armies and navy, and for their equipments and supplies.

While there was even a shadow of uncertainty of the preservation of our Union our currency and bonds were taken almost exclusively by laborers, mechanics, farmers, and manufacturers; patriots who regarded the principles of self-government of more value than silver or gold, their duty to preserve the Union more sacred than life.

Sherman's policy enabled the money power to wield its subtle influence to depreciate our national currency and securities preparatory to buying them at an enormous discount.

Prior to 1864, the purchasers of our bonds were principally men of small means, patriots, determined to save the country at all hazards. When all reasonable doubts of their value had been removed by the success of our armies in the Southwest, and Gen. Grant had been given full command of the field, then capitalists laid their plans for gathering the fruits of victory. They had secured and fortified their stronghold, and weakened the people's power by making their currency only a partial legal tender, which enabled them to cause gold to fluctuate without an honest cause in May, 1864, from 168 to 190, in June from 189 to 251, in July from 222 to 285. The motive was to create a fear of the value of our currency and bonds, in the minds of the honest patriots who had taken them in the darker days of our country's peril, and thus enable capitalists to secure them at 35 to 60 cents on the dollar. Then they were sought, for the formation of national banks, and the investment of Rothschilds' funds.

Our patriots had taken them at par for equipments and supplies for our army and navy; soldiers and sailors had taken them at par for perilous services; invalids, widows and orphans had taken them at par for pensionary compensation, for loss of health, husbands, and fathers—privations, and bereavements that gold or silver, money or bonds, can never recompense.

How was it with capitalized bondholders and bankers? The following statements illustrate their agonized emoluments. The official reports of 1,955 national banks, Sept. 1, 1873, show an aggregate capital of $448,100,591.

Currency furnished free at the expense of tax-payers	$333,969,279
Their real capital only	134,132,673
Surplus earnings	118,119,648
Net earnings from March to September, 1873	38,122,000
Earnings on real capital	51 per cent. per annum.
On real capital, and surplus earnings added	26 per cent. per annum.

In 1869 their reports show a profit on real capital of 55 per cent. per annum; on real capital and surplus of 31 per cent. per annum. We have paid those banks as interest on untaxed bonds held as security for currency furnished at the expense of tax-payers $232,837,556, of which $224,278,271 was paid in gold and $8,559,285 in currency. But their days of prosperity waned as the fatal day of resumption approached. They made frantic efforts to avoid, and be relieved of, their taxes; and their solicitor, Secretary Sherman, asks Congress to authorize them to hold untaxed, interest-bearing bonds as reserve funds.

It is not the legitimate business of banks to issue a circulating medium. It ever has been and ever will be a source of jeopardy to them and their customers when financial storms arise.

Jefferson struck the key-note when he said treasury notes bottomed on taxes will take the place of so much gold and silver. Bank notes must be suppressed, and the circulation restored to the nation, where it belongs.

Since 1862 taxpayers have paid untaxed bondholders for interest $1,538,279,452, and to them and Syndicate bankers as commissions, usurious discounts and premiums, over $500,000,000; so that they have cost us over $2,000,000,000, exceeding the present amount of our national debt, while the Rothschilds, among the largest holders of our bonds, are reputed to have invested $100,000,000 in English land the past year.

All historic evidences of the prime attributes of money confirm its essential uses to the promotion of industries and the measure of value of labor products and of confidence among business men. And its volume must be commensurate with the volume of those productions to render them remunerative, and to give confidence in commercial intercourse, any commodity used as money, while so used, cannot perform any other legitimate functions, and, as its use is perpetual, a possibility of its possessing other equal functions is a source of jeopardy to those relying upon it; and its legitimate mode of redemption is only in the payment of taxes, duties, imposts and excises. Its power should ever be exercised in promoting the common defense of the Government and the general welfare of the people thereof. The only prosperous people of our country to-day are national bondholders, Syndicate bankers, merchants and jobbers who have a right bower or brace of thieves inside some of Secretary Sherman's custom-house rings, railroad robbers and managers of a subsidized press. You say money is plenty and cheap. How is it with the great mass of the people, who are compelled to mortgage their household goods to procure even the bare necessities of life. In Chicago their rates are 5 to 10 per cent. per month. The Boston Herald (a hard-money paper) says the rate there is 5 per cent. per month. Over 200,000 chattel mortgages have been recorded in Cook county, Ill., since the panic of '73, besides millions pledged in warehouses and pawnshops in all our large cities. It is no wonder that moneyed men are afraid of Communism.

. . . To a large and rapidly increasing number it is as patent as the rising of the sun that every true principle of fairness, honor, justice, equity and humanity demands that we should establish our national finances on the realty, wealth and industries of our nation, and make the volume adequate to our industrial production and commerce in time of peace and our necessities in time of war, without requiring any violent change of base, or pampering to the greed of a relentless and unscrupulous money power to meet emergencies.

It will promote the advancement of civilization, render our Government indissoluble from internal causes, enable the people, without deprivation and distress, to pay their taxes, duties, imposts and excises, furnish remunerative employment for all, and constitutionally provide for their common defense and general welfare.

The march of civilization is ever onward and upward; impeding obstacles may, for a while, obstruct its currents, but its cumulative force is omnipotent and indestructable, and will, in due time, annihilate all obstacles, and a science of political economy will be inaugurated that will equitably bestow the natural riches of the universe upon all the people thereof, as they qualify themselves to obtain and utilize them.

That sage of inspiration, "Junius," said that "the ruin or prosperity of a state depends so much on the administration of a Government that, to be acquainted with a Ministry, we need only to observe the condition of the people."

The financial condition of the people, their industrial corporations and municipalities, speak voluminously in condemnation of the financial administration of our Government; and now is the day, now is the hour, for the people, by, of and for whom our Government was formed, to sound the alarm—from the rostrum—from house and hill tops—and call all the hardy machinists, busy operatives, sturdy miners, active train men, yeomanry, and all the unemployed, and organize them for prosperity—for ourselves and posterity—in national-currency clubs. We should

Sound the bugles, through the land,
To sturdy men, strong of hand,
Beat the drums and fill the bands,
Tune the fife and call the rolls,
And firmly march to the polls.

We should rally around our old flag, and national-currency banners in battalions, to save our country's industries and our liberties.

A pure republican Government that takes the husband from his family, the sustaining son from his aged parents, widowed mother or dependent sister, with its irresistible arm, and compels them to endure all the vicissitudes of war, confiscating their property and lives when necessary for its preservation, will in time of peace protect their lives and property, hold the money power subservient to their industries, and provide them with a national currency founded on their industrial wealth, which will ever be good as gold to them, ample in time of peace, and as unlimited as their blood in time of war, and provide through their postal agents for saving the earnings of its laboring people, invalid soldiers, widows and orphans. Politicians who fail to promote those interests must take back seats. Very truly, B. F. SHOTWELL.

OHIO DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

Harmony and Enthusiasm—Ohio a Permanent and Reliable Democratic State.

The Ohio State Democratic Convention, says a Columbus correspondent, was a very large one, having 630 delegates in attendance. Every county was fully represented, and unusual harmony and much enthusiasm prevailed from first to last. The ticket nominated cannot fail to be a popular one.

The convention was singularly orderly, and yet was enthusiastic on the slightest provocation. The speech of Gen. Ward, permanent Chairman, and a few words by Senator Thurman and Gov. Bishop were full of hope. Thurman commended the ticket, and declared that he was satisfied that the work done would tend to make Ohio a permanent and reliable Democratic State. He promised to devote his personal attention to the campaign.

During Gen. Ward's speech he said:

"Let us congratulate ourselves that we have been gaining ground for our entire policy. We have driven back the haughty moneyed power that sought to subdue the nation. Silver has been remonetized. The greenbacks have been preserved. Contraction has been stopped, and ere long the people's dollar, the people's money, will be received for public dues and be equal with gold. Now, my fellow-citizens, I may really congratulate you upon your past success and look hopefully with you upon the future. We elected our President two years ago, but our victory was snatched from us by the stealthy hand of fraud. But the same hands that snatched away our victory poured into the cup of the Republican party the slow poison which is proving its destruction. Two years from now we will elect our candidate by a majority so apparent and by such a triumph that no Returning Boards will dare to steal away our victory. Be then of good cheer."

The above extract will probably, as well as anything else, show the tenor of the convention. It was aggressive and confident from first to last.

The following platform was adopted:

The Democratic party of Ohio in convention assembled hereby reaffirm the following clauses in the platform of the convention of July 25, 1877, indorsed by a majority of more than 22,000 last fall by the people of Ohio. We renew its pledges of devotion to the Union and the constitution with its amendments. It declares as essential to the preservation of the Government a faithful adherence to the following principles: Home rule; supremacy of the civil over the military power; separation of church and state; equality of all citizens before the law; liberty of all individual action, unvexed by sumptuary laws; absolute acquiescence in the lawfully-expressed will of the majority; opposition to all subsidies; preservation of the public lands to the use of actual settlers, and the maintenance and protection of the common-school system.

Resolved, That the investigation of the frauds committed at the last Presidential election in Florida or Louisiana ought to have been made by the Electoral Commission; its refusal to do so was a violation of the spirit of the law under which it was organized, and a gross insult to the people of the United States, and whilst the decision as made by the Forty-fourth Congress of the question as to who should be declared President of the United States for the present Presidential term was, in our judgment, final, that decision ought not to preclude an authentic investigation and exposure of all frauds connected with that election, and the due accountability of all who were guilty connected with them.

Resolved, That the commercial and industrial stagnation that has long prevailed throughout the country, and the consequent widespread want and suffering, is due directly to the pernicious financial legislation of the Republican party, which we hereby arraign for its acts, and charge.

1. That at a time when the country was weighed down with debt, created on the basis of the full volume of paper, added to both the precious metals as money, it enacted a sweeping change in the measure of value, wholly in the interest of moneyed capital, by demonetizing silver, and directing the destruction of legal-tender paper, and thereby wrongfully added, in effect, hundreds of millions to the burden of debt and taxes upon the people.

2. By pursuing its merciless policy of contracting the paper currency and hoarding gold, it has increased continually the value of many securities that partake of the enhancement of money, and decreased the value of all other property, and especially of capital designed for productive use, and required for the employment of labor, thus repressing, instead of fostering, industry, compelling idleness instead of sustaining trade and commerce, and now this party in Ohio puts forward in its platform the declaration that the financial question has been settled. We deny this declaration, and, while we congratulate the country that the downward course to bankruptcy and ruin involved in the Republican policy has been partially averted by the Democratic measures passed at the late session of Congress, restoring the debt-paying power to the silver dollar, made a law in spite of the President's veto, and stopping the further destruction of greenbacks, we demand as further acts of justice, as well as measures of relief, the repeal of the Resumption act and the lawful liberation of the coin hoarded in the treasury, the removal of all restrictions to the coinage of silver as a money metal the same as gold, as it was before its fraudulent demonetization, the gradual substitution of United States legal-tender paper for national-bank notes and its permanent re-establishment as the sole paper money of the country made receivable for all dues to the Government and of equal tender with coin, the amount of such issues to be so regulated by legislation or organic law as to give the people assurance of stability in the volume of currency and consequent stability of value; no further increase in the bonded debt, and no further sale of bonds for the purchase of coin for resumption purposes, but a gradual extinction of the public debt and rigid economy in the reduction of expenditures in all branches of the public service, and tariff for revenue only.

Resolved, That the interest of the industrial wealth-producing classes is the paramount interest of the people of the United States. Those whose labor and enterprise produce wealth should be secure in its enjoyment. Our warmest sympathy is extended to the laboring classes who have been thrown out of employment by the ruinous financial policy and unjust legislation of the Republican party, and we pledge the Democratic party to a reversal of that policy and a restoration of all the rights they are entitled to upon its ascendency to power.

Resolved, That there can be no legitimate employment of organized force in this country, except to execute law and to maintain public peace; that no violence should be countenanced to obtain redress for any alleged grievance, but should be repressed at any cost till relief can be secured by legal methods.

We congratulate the country upon the adoption of the constitutional and pacific policy of local self-government in the States of the South, so long advocated by the Democratic party, and which has brought peace and harmony to that section of the Union.

ELIZA PINKSTON.

A Republican Idol Destroys Herself—Eliza Confesses that She Was Paid for Her Lying Testimony.

Everybody remembers how all the Republican papers in the land fired the Northern heart with Eliza Pinkston's tale of outrage and murder. The dead Pinkstone and the dying Eliza, victims of Democratic savagery, afforded all the proof needed of the terrible state of terrorism in Louisiana. The New York Herald has just reunearthed Eliza Pinkston and obtained from her a sworn statement of the whole affair. Her affidavit is as follows:

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, COUNTY OF MADISON.

Eliza Pritchard, a woman of color, being duly sworn, deposes that her name has been Eliza Pinkston; that she has since married Wayman Pritchard, and is now residing at Canton, Miss.; that as Eliza Pinkston she did appear as a witness before the Louisiana board at New Orleans, La., in November, 1876, and at such gave testimony that her former husband, Henry Pinkston, had been killed and she herself seriously wounded by certain Democrats of the parish of Ouachita, on account of the Republican politics of herself and husband. Deponent further deposes that she was induced to give said testimony by certain Republicans, namely, O. H. Brewster and Dinkgrave, by promises of reward, and she was, in fact, paid therefor the sum of $500, which she received, and, after taking therefrom the sum of $50, she allowed the remainder to remain with Brewster on deposit, but has failed to obtain said amount from Brewster, although she has frequently demanded the same. Deponent alleges that, at the time of giving said testimony, she was in a weak and prostrate condition, induced by suffering from wounds and by having her fears played upon by intimations that the Democrats were intent on murdering her; that she was readily induced by these persons of superior intelligence to give her testimony a coloring so as to show that her husband, Pinkston, was killed and herself wounded on account of political opinions, when the facts were that her husband Pinkston never took any part in politics, and had in no way given any offense to any person on account of politics; but deponent believes and did believe then that said murder was in no wise connected with politics; that she did not then nor does she now know who were the persons engaged in said murder and wounding, but there is every reason to think it was a colored man who had twice fought with her husband, and had been by him worsted. Deponent further deposes that she was brought from her then home in Ouachita parish to New Orleans, and was instructed to testify and lay all the blame of said killing and assault upon the Democrats, and that she was further instructed and induced to pretend that her wounds were more serious than they were, and that she could not walk, when, in fact, she had walked each day considerable distances, and ascended long flights of stairs, such as the Custom-House stairs in New Orleans, without assistance, and, on the day she was carried in the room of the Returning Board on a lounge or sofa, she was conveyed in a carriage, but was able to walk and did walk a part of the way up the stairs to the room in which the Returning Board was sitting; but she was induced to allow herself to be carried in on said sofa in order to produce the impression that she was worn out and couldn't walk. Deponent further deposes that previous to giving her testimony before said Returning Board she was visited by John Sherman and others of the visiting statesmen, and introduced to them as such, and that she walked before them, and they had ample opportunity to see what her condition was, and that she could walk about. Deponent further deposes that during the time she was in New Orleans attending the said Returning Board she was constantly given money by different Republicans, and was promised a support for life, which last has not been given as promised. Deponent makes this affidavit without fear from any cause, and without any promise of reward or other consideration than a desire to have the whole truth known, in the interest of truth. ELIZA PINKSTON (now PRITCHARD).

Her present husband makes an affidavit confirming her statement as the one told him before her marriage, and has always maintained, and Mr. Mosely Pritchard's landlord and employer and Mr. R. H. Hoffman witnessed, Mrs. Pritchard's statement before a Justice of the Peace.

ADDRESS

To the Members of the National Greenback Labor Party of the 13th Congressional District of Indiana.

KENDALLVILLE, June 24, '78.

The time of the assembling of the Congressional Convention having been postponed until July 17th, we have concluded, after consultation, that a word or two of explanation and a few suggestions from us at this time would not be out of place. We had hoped for an earlier convention, feeling that there was no time to lose, and beleiving that the friends of the great cause would more earnestly engage in the noble work of redeeming the District after the nomination than before; but many true friends and co-workers thought the 13th of June too early and advanced plausible reasons for such belief. Therefore, in compliance with their suggestion the time was changed, and we are now happy to believe from letters and information otherwise received from various parts of the District, that all are well satisfied with the change. This being so, it must be well, for "in union there is strength."

But we feel that the fact cannot be too soon nor too forcibly impressed upon the mind of every friend of humanity and good government that the space of time between now and the day of election is comparatively short, when we seriously consider how much is involved in the contest. It is a great misfortune that our suffering people could not at this time be relieved by the wise and humane policy of our party. Delay is not only wicked but dangerous. Congress has taken one or two steps in the right direction through fear of our party and the people, but those few and feeble measures to be executed by miserable wretches having no feeling in common with the suffering millions will likely afford but little if any relief. The good Peter Cooper and other philanthropists—leaders of the National Greenback party—recently appealed to Congress not to adjourn until the passage of a measure which would give the people relief. As might have been expected, the appeal was in vain. Congress is quick to respond to the demands of the capitalists, bondholder and monopolist, but turns a deaf ear to almost every demand and want of the masses of the people. Having thus forfeited the confidence of their constituents, and indeed disregarded the most sacred rights of the people, it seems that they could not even adjourn without sinking themselves still lower and disgracing the nation whose interests, rights and honor it is their peculiar province to defend and protect under any and all circumstances. If the Chicago Daily Tribune of June 22nd is to be believed, the closing hours of the House presented a scene unparalelled in the history of the world—the members about all intoxicated except one colored member from South Carolina, Mr. Rainey. The Tribune says: "But for him the sundry civil bill would have been lost. He the only sober man took charge of affairs, while the others swilled down whiskey. He kept the inebriated clerks at work, compelled them to finish up things and then took charge of them himself."

Is it any wonder that this great Nation, like the miscreants who make her laws, is on the downward road to destruction? We have no heart to comment further on this disgraceful affair. But for the sake of decency as well as humanity we ask how much longer must this state of things continue? What other indignities must be heaped upon a patient and long suffering people before they can be aroused to a sense of their true condition? They cannot afford to let another election pass without asserting their rights and vindicating their honor. Their only hope is the National Greenback Labor Party. Its success seems now only a question of time, and that time will be very short if we do our whole duty. Its rapid increas is astonishing to its most devoted friends and it is found strongest in those localities where the people are best posted on questions of finance. This fact should induce every friend of the cause to lose no time, but go to work at once and circulate among the people good documents. See that every School District has at least a few copies of a work entitled "The Money Question," by William A. Burkey, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, price, $1.00; also "American Labor," by Marvin Warren, of Fairbury, Nebraska, price 50 cents; and in addition give our local newspapers friendly to the cause a wide circulation. And every one who can possibly afford it should have the Indianapolis Sun, price $1.00 a year, and that large and reliable Greenback family newspaper, The Advocate, 160 Fulton-St., N. Y., price only 25 cents a year in clubs of four or more.

In this connection we would like to say much were it not for fear of infringing upon the valuable space of those friendly publishers in this Congressional District who may do us the favor to give this article an insertion. We will simply add in conclusion: Be active, vigilant. Remember that the success of the National Greenback Labor Party depends on agitation and education. This our enemies are trying to prevent, as that is their last and only hope. See that every voter reads the National Greenback platform adopted by the late Greenback Convention at Indianapolis. It has the ring of true metal. In the language of another "it rings like the old bell that over one hundred years ago proclaimed our liberty."

"THE BASTE ISN'T A CAT."

A Lively Scene in a Rochester Irishman's Shanty.

"Paul Dean" in Danbury News.

On the evening following the day that the baloon went up from Falls Field, Mat Maloney, on returning to his slab mansion, was met at the door by Biddy in a high state of excitement, with the earnest exclamation:

"O, Mat, there is a strange cat in the room!"

"Put her out thin and don't be botherin' me about yer cat," replied Mat in rather a heedless tone.

"I've been striving to do that same thing this two hours," replied Biddy. "She's behind the big chest now, and would ye help me to chase her, will ye?"

"To be sure I will," says Mat. "Bad luck to her. Will ye show her to me and I'll soon teach her to have some respect for me house, the thate of the world!"

Mat hated all cats, and vowed he would kill her, even if she had seven lives; and seeing no way of egress from the hiding place but one, he at once laid his plans for capture, and earnestly called out:

"Biddy, Biddy! have ye ever a malebag in the house?"

"Sorry a one have I," said Biddy. "Didn't ye leave it behind ye when ye was going to bring me the chips."

"Sure and I did that same," replied Mat meekly; "but haven't ye somethin' in the house I could tie up like a bag?"

"Indade and I have jist the same," says Biddy. "Me Sunday petticoat—ye can draw the strings, can't ye?"

"Illegant, illegant, me darling," said Mat, and together they prepared for the capture.

Looking behind the chest they saw two eyes like balls of fire. Mat pronounced it to be the very evil one himself, and exclaimed:

"Will ye be out o' that, and bad luck to ye for a vagabond. Bedad, if ye was as bad as ye look to be, ye'd repent the day ye entered me door without axin the leave of a true sun of the church, shure. I say, Biddy, have you any hot water in the house?"

"And that's what I have plinty," says Biddy.

"Then be after showering the full of a quart or two behind the chist," commanded Mat.

"Hold clost," cried Biddy, "and here goes," and swash went the water and out jumped the cat into Mat's elegant trap.

"Ough, but I have ye," exclaimed Mat, and drawing the folds of the garment closer he cast it over his shoulder. "Now, Biddy, will ye catch the stick and lay in till you bate the birth out of the baste," and Mat bent over so as to give Biddy a better chance.

Biddy went at the "baste" with a will, but after two or three sharp strokes stopped suddenly, exclaiming:

"O, Mat, what smell is that? Ough Mat! Mat! et takes me breath entirely. Ough! I can't stand the power of et! Sure you, the real devil it must be, nothin' less in the sack."

"Thin bate the old heathen," exclaimed Mat; "lather him up well, for I am fainting with the power of him, too."

"Put him off from ye," wildly exclaimed Biddy, and Mat threw down the sack.

"O, Biddy," says he, "the baste isn't a cat at all, at all, but an auld pole cat. O, lave the house or ye will be kilt entirely. Oh muther ration how he smells!"

"O, Mat," gasped Biddy, "open the door; bad luck to the day we left auld Ireland to be smothered like this. Bad luck to the free air of America that we can't draw our birth in. Och! och! och! and they both bolted out the door for fresh air.

Hawkeye Shots.

"I want the dining-room walls," the North Hill man said to the calciminer, "tinted blue; not a very decided blue, but a tint blue enough to show that it is blue; just the color of milk," he suddenly added, as the clamor of the milkman's bell in the street gave him an inspirations.

"A little disfigured," remarked the coxswain of the Burlington barge, when the boys took their places for the first quadrille Thursday night, "but still in the ring." Later in the evening he explained to an inquiring landsman that "if the coxswain had pulled a little harder on them ropes the barge would have won the race." The explanation was accepted.

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

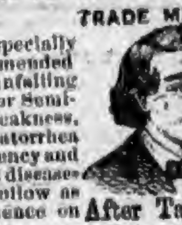
GRAY'S SPECIFIC MEDICINE

TRADE MARK. TRADE MARK.



Before Taking After Taking

Is especially recommended as an unfailing cure for Seminal Weakness, Spermatorrhea Impotency and all diseases that follow as a sequence on Self Abuse; as Loss of Memory; Universal Lassitude, Pain in the Back, Dimness of Vision, Premature Old Age, and many other diseases that lead to Insanity, Consumption and a premature grave, all of which as a rule, are first caused by deviating from the path of nature and over indulgence. The Specific Medicine is the result of a life study and many years of experience in treating these special diseases.

Full particulars in our pamphlets, which we desire to send free by mail to every one.

The Specific Medicine is sold by all druggists at $1 per package or 6 packages for $5, will be sent by mail on receipt of the money by addressing THE GRAY MEDICINE CO. No. 10 Mechanic's Block, Detroit, Mich.

Sold in Auburn by E. E. Davenport, and by all druggists everywhere.

The Business Outlook.

[Philadelphia Ledger.]

There is a very general inquiry the country over, and, indeed, abroad as well as at home, for good and reliable investment securities. The most superficial of the stock markets can not fail to be convinced of the fact that at the present time investors are bringing instalments of their idle capital to market for employment in unquestionable sound securities, although they still cling to the idea that some impending disaster may give them the opportunity for which they have so long waited, of buying in a panic at greatly reduced prices. It may be well to point out a feature which is well known to those whose daily business it is to watch markets, that the investing public is invaribly moved by impulse. The contagation of extreme caution spreads rapidly when each individual unconsciously allows his thoughts to be moulded by an irresponsible adviser. On the other hand, capitalists as a body are as easily moved in a contrary direction, and frequently they are lifted from the depths of despondency to the height of exuberance with a rapidity which is simply magical. Those who are prudent enough to pursue a milder course can not fail to be amply rewarded upon the return of confidence. Investors must by this time be convinced that profits can not be made upon any speculative principle, but that mature judgment and calculating investigation is absolutely necessary in the selection of securities.

WORK AND WAGES.

The condition of working people in Europe is really deploreable; still it has been said in this coutry that American laborers must expect to be reduced to European prices. It might as well be said that we must expect to have a change of government, so that working people here, as in king cursed Europe, shall have no voice in public affairs. The theory proclaimed in America has been that working people are not to be set aside in matters pertaining to their well being. This outrage the radical party has been guilty of, and the effort to reduce American labor to the level of European prices has not only been successful, but it has, in thousands of instances, deprived working men of employment at any price. Since it has been the purpose of the radical party to increas the gains of Shylocks and the burdens of labor, and being American working people to the European level, it may be interesting to know what the level is. "In Germany the pay for agricultural labor varies greatly, according to the proximity to or remoteness from manufacturing centers, and ranges from 56 cents a day in the neighborhood of Bremen to 21 cents a day in the Lower Rhine valley, and as low as 18 cents in parts of Silesia. At Bremen, Crefield and Dusseldorf carpenters, coppersmiths, plumber, machinists and wagonsmiths earn from 51 to 75 cents daily; saddlers and shoemakers from 47 to 52 cents daily; bakers and brewers, with board and lodging, from $1.42 to 2.14 weekly, and without board from 60 cents a day to $4.28 a week; farm hands are paid from $107 to 215 yearly, with maintainance; railway laborers from 36 to 83 cents per day, and as high as 95 cents daily for piece work on tunnels; silk weavers can earn from $2.15 to 2.85 a week per loom; factory women, $2.16, and children $1 a week. Business and wages are very low. The cost of the necessaries of life has increased some fifty per cent in thirteen years, although now it is but little higher than five years ago. A man and wife, with two or three children, can live in two or three rooms in a poor and comfortless manner for $275 a year, and to support such an establishment all the members have to work ten or twelve hours daily. For a family of six persons the cost is about $7 a week—an amount that few families can earn, as the depression of trade and the reduction of time allows few to do a full week's work, although wages are nominally a trifle higher than five years ago."

Just what is to be gained by reducing the working people to starvation prices has never yet been set forth, and though in Europe poverty may aid in keeping the people in subjection, such a state of things is not desirable in the United States. Work for all at remunerative wages is the democratic theory, and if judicious legislation can aid in bringing in an era of prosperity, the people may be assured that it will be had as soon as the democratic party obtains full control of the government.

NOVEL AERONAUTICS.

A Lady Aeronaut to Explode her Balloon at a Height of 4,000 Feet

(Philadelphia Times.)

Perhaps the most remarkable of the special attractions to be offered hereabouts on the Fourth of July will be a "new departure,' in aeronautic feats, exhibited at Hammonton Park, New Jersey, on the Camden and Atlantic Railroad. Miss Clarissa Wimbley, of this city, who was a pupil of the unfortunate Donaldson, and is a niece of Proffessor Wise, proposes to make two ascensions from the Park, and in the second of which, when at the height of 4,000 feet, cause the balloon to explode and form itself into a parachute that will enable her to decend in safety.

This exploit, so seldom attempted, while seemingly rash, will be done to demonstrate the feasibility of constructing balloons that would insure comparative safety for their passengers in the event of the air-ship being caused to explode by a rarefied atmosphere, a collission or any other mishap. The balloon to be used by Miss Wimbley is, when inflated, 65 feet high and 45 feet wide, containing 20,000 cubic feet of gas, and cable of carying two men. Fastened by a rope to a train, and elevated 100 feet above the track, the balloon, carrying Miss Wimbley, will be drawn from Camden, the place of its inflatation, to Hammonton, a distance of thirty miles. The young lady has made many ascensions, and recently at Elmira, New York, a crowd of 20,000 persons gazed at her perilous performances in mid-air.

The Sentence of Death Pronounced Upon the Redeemer.

The following is a copy of the most memorable judicial sentence which has ever been pronounced in the annals of the world:

Sentence pronounced by Pontius Pilate Intendant of the Lower Province of Lower Galilee, that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death by the cross. In the seventeenth year of the reign of the Emperor Tiberius, and on the 24th day of the month of March, in the most holy city of Jerusalem, during the pontificate of Annas and Caiaphas, Pontius Pilate, Intendant of the province of Lower Galilee, sitting to judgment in the presidential seat of the Prætor, sentences Jesus of Nazareth to death on a cross, between robbers, as the numerous and notorious testimonies of the people prove:

1. Jesus is a misleader.
2. He has excited the people to sedition.
3. He is an enemy to the laws.
4. He calls himself the Son of God.
5. He calls himself falsely the King of Isreal.
6. He went into the temple followed by a multitude carrying palms in their hands.

Orders from the first centurion, Quirrilis Conelius, to bring him to the place of execution.

Forbids all persons, rich or poor, to prevent the execution of Jesus.

The witnesses who have signed the execution of Jesus are—

1. Daniel Robani Parisco.
2. John Zorbabel.
3. Rapheal Robani.
4. Capet.

Jesus to be taken out of Jerusalem through the gates of Tournes.

This sentence is engraved on a plate of brass in the Hebrew language, and on its sides are the following words: "A similar plate has been sent to each tribe."

It was discovered in the year 1380, in the kingdom of Naples, in a search made for Roman antiquities, and remained there until it was found by the commissioner of arts in the French army in Italy. Up to the time of the campaign in Italy, it was preserved in the sacristy of the Carthusians, near Naples, where it was kept in a box of ebony. Since then the relic has been in the chapel of Casserta. The Certhusians obtained by their petitions permission to keep the plate, which was an acknowledgment of the sacrifices which they made for the French army. The French translation was made literally by the members of the commission of arts. Demon had a fac simile of the plate engraved, which was bought by Lord Howard, on the sale of his cabinet, for 2,800f. Theres seem to be no historical doubts as to the authenticity of this. The reasons of the sentence correspond exactly with those in the Gospel.

Lawless Resumption.

Cincinnati Enquirer.

It is plain that John Sherman will do any thing, with law or without law, to accomplish his resumption scheme. He has said that he will ignore the laws relating to the sinking fund; that he will sell five per cent. bonds, if necessary; that he will pay no attention to the recent law forbidding the further contraction of the greenbacks; that he will construe all laws as subordinate to the Resumption Act; that he will only permit in circulation such an amount of greenbacks as he can maintain at par, though the law commands him to keep $350,000,000 in legal tender notes in circulation; that, in short, the Resumption Act "can be, ought to be, and shall be executed." He was anxious to be allowed to sell four per cent. Government bonds for greenbacks, in order to facilitate his resumption plan. He confessed that he would regard these bonds as sold for resumption purposes; that he would hold the greenbacks so obtained to that end. This is the reasoning of the Shermanizer. The Resumption Act declares that to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required, he is authorized to use any surplus revenue, from time to time, in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell and dispose of, at not less than par in coin," &c., certain bonds to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect, and to use the proceeds thereof for the purposes aforesaid."

Sherman framed this act and passed it under the gag-law, and it is one of the most sweeping of all statutes. He will, he declares, regard every greenback dollar in the Treasury as "surplus revenue," that he may "use" for resumption purposes by keeping it there and thus making it impossible to present it for redemption. The law passed a few weeks ago commanding that the greenbacks then in circulation should be kept in circulation; that as rapidly as they came into the Treasury the Secretary should put them out again is of no consequence to Sherman. The greenback is the only money Sherman is compelled by law to pay out. He can exercise his preference as to all other kinds of money, but as to holding and hoarding greenbacks the law leaves no choice. He is ordered to pay out and reissue, and to keep out the greenbacks; and he announces that he will permit so many of them to remain out as he can maintain at par with gold, that he can redeem in coin on demand, and no more. He sees no law but the Resumption Law, and says that he will see no other. The latest statute is of no avail. He will only execute the one he likes. If this method can secure resumption, it will be a lawless resumption, in defiance of the will of the people, as it will also be to their ruin.

Falling into Line.

[Daviess County Democrat.]

The Democracy of the west are falling rapidly into line, and many of those who have wearied of waiting and been tempted to abandon the party in despair of ever securing the financial legislation which the country so urgently needs, are now becoming satisfied that the speediest and only way for monetary relief is through their old political organization. Outside experiments upon new independent lines are dangerous uncertainties. By dividing a political force that would otherwise prove irresistible, they involve too many chances of defeat to be safely tolerated, and it is one of the most cheering signs of the times that the Democratic party has at last consolidated its strength upon the vital question of the day.

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

For Christ's Sake.

[New Haven Exchange.]

Francis Murphy, the temperance revivalist, mentioned his willingness to go to New Haven for $150 per week and the best board, for Christ's sake. The text of his letter was published, and some over-sanguine friend, doubting that he had penned it, asked him. This is his response: "I did write that New Haven letter. I generally get $200, but they are poor down that way. Yours in Jesus, Francis Murphy.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE Treasurer of South Hadley, Mass., stole $19,000, and has been sentenced to imprisonment for five years.

THE residence of Gov. Van Zandt, of Rhode Island, at Newport, was robbed a few nights ago of jewelry valued at $35,000.

NORWICH, Ct., is greatly excited over that the local physicians pronounce an outbreak of genuine Asiatic cholera. Several deaths have occurred from the disease.... John J. Burchell, an extensive New York builder, has failed for $1,500,000.

THE WEST.

ADVICES from the scene of the Indian war in the far West report a disastrous three days' fight between Col. Grover's command and a body of Bannocks. The whites were completely surrounded by the hostiles and utterly demoralized. Eleven of their number were killed and a number wounded.

THE Governor of Iowa has been in receipt of dispatches from various points in the State notifying him that companies of tramps had taken possession of railroad trains and were dangerous to the towns. Some of them were from Mayors and Sheriffs, asking authority to call out the militia. The Governor, in response to these repeated calls, has issued a proclamation calling upon the local authorities throughout the State to be diligent in preserving the peace, and instructing them how to proceed in case of real or apprehended danger from the numerous bands of tramps traversing the State.

A DISPATCH from Portland, Ore., reports a sanguinary engagement between a party of white volunteers and a band of hostile Indians at Willow Springs, Ore., resulting in a disastrous defeat to the volunteers. It was a second Custer massacre. The Indians completely surrounded the whites, fifty strong, and shot and scalped them without mercy. Only seven of the ill-fated little army escaped to tell the story of the horrible massacre. A battle is also reported between the friendly Umatilla Indians and 400 hostile Snakes, the latter being defeated with the loss of thirty braves.

MILWAUKEE was visited by a destructive fire last week. The extensive tobacco manufactory of B. Leidersdorf & Co. was burned, involving a loss of $100,000.

GEN. HOWARD has met the hostile Indians, or a portion of them, in battle, and, if the dispatches are to be relied on, inflicted a disastrous defeat upon the red-skinned rascals. The meager account of the affair telegraphed from San Francisco states that he found the Indians in force on a height near the head of Butte creek. Gen. Howard advanced his forces, consisting of seven companies of cavalry, two of artillery, and a few volunteers and scouts, in two columns. The Indians were strongly posted on a rocky crest. The troops deployed and advanced handsomely under a heavy fire. The ascent is described as steeper than that at Missionary Ridge, but not a man broke the ranks, though several saddles were emptied and many horses killed. The enemy was driven from this position to another height in the rear, of greater elevation, and crowned with natural defenses of lava rocks. In twenty minutes this position was also stormed from different sides at once, and a rapid pursuit commenced of the flying Indians, who abandoned horses, provisions, ammunition, and camp material. The hostiles made for the thick timber crowning the Blue Ridge, and made another stand, but were again dislodged and pursued four or five miles further in the mountains. The rough country and great exhaustion of the men and horses caused a cessation of the pursuit. In this engagement five enlisted men were wounded and about twenty horses killed. The loss of the enemy could not be ascertained.

OREGON dispatches report that the Bannock Indians who were thrashed by Gen. Howard have recovered and are moving Eastward.

THE SOUTH.

DICK DAWSON, colored, was hanged at Thomaston, Ga., on the 5th inst., for the murder of Frank Cunningham, his brother-in-law. Dawson, in his statement, said he thought Cunningham had bewitched him, and he would die if he didn't kill him. Dawson died shrieking and crying.

ANOTHER stage robbery is reported from Texas. The thieves gobbled all the registered letters in the pouches, but did not disturb the remainder of the mail.

WASHINGTON.

THERE is an impression in Washington, especially among persons supposed to be in the confidence of Secretary Sherman, that the resumption of specie payments will be attempted some months ahead of the date fixed in the Resumption act. The Secretary is said to be desirous that this question shall be practically disposed of before Congress meets.

THE Associated Press agent telegraphs from Washington that "Secretary Sherman says he has not decided to announce the resumption of specie payments in advance of the 1st of January next, the time fixed by law. He says, however, that resumption may come before that time by natural causes, or when the premium on specie shall disappear; that we are now approaching that point, and that it is the duty of the Government to employ all legitimate means to produce such results."

DURING the first four months of the operation of the Silver law there were coined 8,793,368 standard silver dollars. On July 1 the treasury had on hand $7,109,399, there being outstanding only $1,683,964.

THE total issues of postage stamps, stamped envelopes and postal-cards during the fiscal year ending June 30 was $28,567,184, an increase over the previous fiscal year of $2,041,348. This is an unprecedented increase, but it is due in a great measure to the extravagant efforts of country Postmasters to dispose of stamps before the change in the method of compensation under the new law.

HON. R. W. THOMPSON, the Secretary of the Navy, has set out on a voyage of official inspection of the navy yards, naval and life-saving stations, etc., on the North Atlantic coast, expecting to be absent several weeks. Attorney General Devens has been designated by the President to act as Secretary of the Navy during the absence of Secretary Thompson.

THE PRESIDENT has removed Gen. Arthur and Hon. A. B. Cornell, Collector and Naval Officer of New York, and appointed Gen. E. A. Merritt and Col. W. S. Burt to the vacant positions. The announcement of the changes caused considerable excitement in political circles in New York and Washington.

EX-GOV. KELLOGG, of Louisiana, appeared before the Potter investigating committee on the 11th inst., and was examined by Gen. Butler. He testified that the election in Louisiana in 1876 was entirely legal. The witness gave a detailed statement as to the composition of the respective houses of the Legislature, and, after reciting the law of Louisiana at considerable length, he stated that Gov. Packard was legally inaugurated on the 8th of January, 1877, at which time there was a Republican quorum in both houses. Gen. Butler produced tables compiled from the Returning Board's figures, which showed that, after the board had thrown out sufficient Democratic parishes to elect the General Assembly, it was found there were still two Hayes electors defeated, whereupon the Returning Board threw out parishes and precincts until they had succeeded in securing a majority of the Hayes electors. The witness stated that, assuming that the figures be the correct findings of the Returning Board, it left the General Assembly Republican in both branches, and still left two Hayes electors in the minority. Mr. Butler—Whereupon the board proceeded to give the screw another twist? Witness—That is not my testimony. Q.—How much on the returns, as returned by the Returning Board, did the lowest Hayes elector run behind Packard? A.—These tables show a majority for Governor of [illegible], while two Republican electors (Levissee and Joseph) were in the minority. The Tilden electors had a majority, I believe, on the face of the return of the votes cast in the different parishes originally, and so did Nichols.... E. L. Weber was recalled and questioned by Mr. Cox in regard to the Sherman letter. Witness said he found it in a box sent from his brother at Bayou Sara to his father-in-law's warehouse in Donaldsonville. He found the letter after Mrs. Jenks' visit; tore it up at once because it exposed my brother's wrong-doing. My brother told me there were no grounds for protesting the parish. Witness admitted he had been indicted, forfeited his bond, and afterwards, at the suggestion of the District Attorney, made a false affidavit in order to have the bond restored. In answer to the question relating to his indictment, witness, turning to Mr. Cox, said excitedly: "You Republicans could use my brother who is dead; to-day you could use us on the stand to swear to any kind of a lie that you wanted in order to support and sustain you; to-day that you can't use me as your tool, you propose to ruin me." Gov. Cox disclaimed any such notion as that imputed to him by witness, and said he wanted to give witness an opportunity to vindicate himself.

GENERAL.

THE next semi-annual meeting of the National Agricultural Congress—for reading and discussion of papers, etc.—will be held at New Haven, Conn., Aug. 27, 1878.

POLITICAL.

THE Democrats of Arkansas have nominated Gov. William R. Miller for re-election to the Gubernatorial chair.....The Alabama Republicans held their State Convention at Montgomery last week. It was resolved to place no State ticket in the field this year. A resolution indorsing President Hayes' administration was voted down.

THE Republicans of the St. Paul (Minn.) district have nominated Gen. W. D. Washburn for Congress.

THE Missouri Democratic Convention was held at Jefferson City July 10. The following ticket was nominated: Judge of the Supreme Court, Elijah Norton; Register of Lands, J. E. McHenry; State Superintendent of Public Schools, R. D. Shannon; Railway Commissioner, A. M. Sevier. The three first named are present incumbents. The platform denounces the national banking system as oppressive and burdensome, deprecates the contraction of the currency, and demands the unconditional repeal of the Resumption act.

THE Democrats of Michigan met in State Convention at Lansing on Wednesday, July 10, and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, Hon. O. M. Barnes, of Lansing; for Lieutenant Governor, A. P. Swineford, of Marquette; Secretary of State, George H. Murdock, of Berrien Springs; for State Treasurer, Alexander McFarlin, of Flint; for Commissioner of the State Land Office, George Lord, of Bay City; for Auditor General, W. T. B. Schemerhorn, of Hudson; for Superintendent of Public Instruction, Prof. Truesdel, of Pontiac; for Attorney General, Maj. Allen B. Morse, of Ionia; Member of the Board of Education, Edwin F. Uhl, of Grand Rapids. The platform arraigns the Republican party for corruption in office, indorses the investigation of the electoral frauds, declares that gold and silver is the money of the constitution, that all paper money should be convertible into coin at the will of the holder, and opposes any further forcible reduction of the currency.

GEN. FERDINAND LATROBE has been elected Mayor of Baltimore by the following vote: Latrobe, 14,018; Richard Henry Smith (Greenbacker), 1,399. Latrobe's majority, 12,619. The Republicans had no candidate in the field.

FOREIGN.

A DUEL with swords was fought the other day on the French-Belgian frontier, between Lorres Cacedo, Minister to Belgium from San Salvador, and M. Medina, Minister from Guatemala, resulting in the slight wounding in the shoulder of the San Salvadoran representative ..The suspicion that the St. Petersburg authorities had captured and concealed Vera Sassulich, the nihilist woman who attempted to murder the Chief of Police, proves to have been unfounded. She has turned up in Switzerland.

THE two American crews that crossed the water to take part in the annual Henley regatta on the river Thames have more than justified the expectations of their friends. The Columbia College lads carried off the visitor's challenge cup by winning the first victory ever achieved by an American crew in British waters. The Shoe-wae-cae-mette crew, of Monroe, Mich., made a creditable showing, though they carried off no prize. They won the first heat in the race for the Steward's cup. In the final heat one of the oarsmen of the Michigan crew, while making a gallant struggle for the lead, was seized with sudden illness, which destroyed all hopes of success. Altogether Americans have cause to be more than satisfied with the result.

THE municipal authorities of Geneva, Switzerland, are uneasy at the presence of Vera Sassulitch, and they have intimated to her that her early departure would be agreeable to them.

THE important announcement is made by cable that Queen Victoria and the Sultan of Turkey have made a compact in which the former undertakes to maintain the Asiatic dominions of the latter in all their integrity, and protect them against invasion from every quarter. As the first step in this protectorate, England is to occupy Cyprus immediately. The demands of the protectorate are simple: Asiatic Turkey is divided into fifteen provinces; the Governor of each is to be appointed by the Sultan, with the approval of the Queen; perfect religious toleration is to be secured, and the contentment of the people is to be promoted by methods designed to make the burden of taxation lightly felt. Certain special provisions are inserted in the treaty concerning Jerusalem and the holy places and the existing rights of the Greek and Latin churches. These are to be scrupulously preserved, but immunities and privileges of great value are to be secured to the Hebrew inhabitants of the Holy City and its adjoining precincts.

LATE advices from China report that rain has at last fallen in the famine-stricken provinces, and faint hopes are entertained that the prolonged drought, with its miseries, may soon end.

THE new Anglo-Turkish treaty is the theme of general comment in Europe. There seems to be very little opposition manifested on the part of any of the treaty powers. Even Russia, through her Chancellor, is reported as being satisfied with the arrangement—the declaration being made that the Czar has no ambition to satisfy in the direction of Asia, and especially has no desire to interfere with British communication with her Indian possessions via Southern Armenia and the Euphrates valley.

KING ALPHONSO has created Gen Martinez Campos Commander-in-Chief of the Spanish forces in Cuba, Knight of the Golden Fleece, and elevated Gen. Jovellar to the rank of Captain-General of the army.... Hoedel was arraigned at Berlin, the other day, for attempting the life of the Emperor. He pleaded not guilty, maintaining that he only intended to commit suicide. Thirty witnesses, however, testified he aimed at the Emperor. He was sentenced to be beheaded. His demeanor was insolent and defiant. He continued to smile even after the sentence had been pronounced.

THE Emperor William's physicians have issued another long statement in regard to his condition. They ascribe his Majesty's relatively slow progress toward recovery to the great loss of blood and appetite, to the shock to his system, and to mental depression. His attainable degree of strength is not yet regained. His power of locomotion is small. His hands are helpless, and he can only eat with assistance. The physicians, however, are confident of his recovery by the influence of time and exercise.... The French newspapers are disgusted with the Anglo-Turkish alliance, which, they contend, is detrimental to the interests and dignity of the Mediterranean powers, and particularly offensive to France.

A Poverty-Stricken Man in Luck.

It was during the war that a well-known business man of this city kept gossip going, and his money, too, in the whirl and excitement of a fast life. He had large army contracts, and from them his resources came. The money, easily obtained, was in truth thrown away. He had barrels of it. Estimates as to his means were not infrequently placed at $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. He had all the attributes of a prodigal—in fast horses, fast women, an unquenchable thirst for wines, and the desire to be talked about as a man about town. He was as generous as he was reckless, and fair-weather friends swarmed about him. They helped themselves to his funds and sang his glories as long as he had a dollar to spend. In the height of his folly he thought of what was to come—the inevitable death. What men said about him living puffed up his vanity, but what they would say about him dead must depend upon the splendor with which he could go out of the world. Over his grave he wanted to have the most imposing monument in Spring Grove. To prepare for this possession he, one day, extracted from his Government bonds $25,000, and put them in an envelope, which, being sealed and indorsed "proposals," he placed in his safe. In his round of dissipation the monument and everything connected with death slipped from his memory. The natural sequence of his mode of living—distressing poverty—came upon him. His family barely had enough to keep soul and body together. His horses, diamonds, fine house, business and friends passed away. In the wreck he mourned his folly and worked at whatever he could get to do.

Among the things left to him were barrels and boxes filled with valueless paper. Years went on without improvement in his affairs, until last Monday evening. While overhauling the contents of one of the barrels, a package indorsed "proposals" spurred his curiosity somewhat. He broke the seals, tore off the wrapper, and, to his astonished gaze, $25,000 in bonds were revealed. They were the monument fund, long forgotten, and now resurrected when a dollar to him was as big as a three-sheet poster.—Cincinnati Times.

The Growing Crops.

Crop reports from various sections of Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa are coming in, and, as a general thing, the outlook is good. Corn is a little bashful as yet, but warm weather will start it. Wheat generally looks well; chintz bugs have arrived with their families at various places. They also look well, or will before the wheat is ripe. Rust and blight have made their appearance, but not to any alarming extent. Rye looks well, especially when manufactured, but it is not expected that the product will be large, owing to the Moffett bell-punch intrusion. Barley is in excellent condition, but, when cultivated, will look better, and sell for 5 cents a glass. The farmers did not scatter a great deal of this vegetable this season, and for that reason it is expected that some commission men will establish a "corner" on it before it is hatched. It will command a better price than wheat before fall, then up goes beer again. Potatoes look well, and are not troubled a great deal by the bugs, since most of the bugs are interested in the manufacture of Paris green for Southern Minnesota trade. The potato crop will be large, but the variety small owing to dull times and scarcity of money. There are no small potatoes here that we know of. Oats are in good condition, but the yield will be light, and not more than enough for home consumption. There have been a large quantity of wild oats sown the past season, but returns have not yet arrived, and the question is, "what will the harvest be?" There has been but a moderate ice crop this season; it would have been larger but for the destructive raid made on it by grasshoppers early in the spring. All in all there will be more than an average crop of everything, including babies, and the prospects for fall trade are good.—Peck's Sun.

Pineapples.

A large portion of the area of the Bahama islands is devoted to the cultivation of pineapples. As many as 1,500,000 of the fruit have been collected from a single acre at one crop. The pineapples of New Providence are superior to any other variety, and often attain an enormous size. One, grown in Pembrokeshire, weighing 10¼ pounds, and measuring 10¼ inches in height, exclusive of the stalk and crown, and 22 inches in circumference, was served up at the coronation banquet of George IV., and since then the improved modes of cultivation have greatly increased the size and quality of the fruit. There is an enormous demand for the Bahama pineapples both in Europe and America, and a new industry has lately sprung up in the island in preserving the fruit in tins. One factory in Nassau alone exports annually 1,000,000 tins, valued at $80,000.

AN examination of the phonograph record has recently been made in England with interesting results. Each vowel sound is found to have its characteristic record—that for long E, for example, resembling two Indian clubs with their handles together. The long and short sounds of the same vowels have a similar record, differing only as theory would lead one to expect.

JENKS-ANDERSON.

Humors of the Potter Investigation.

PHILADELPHIA, March 25, 1878.

MY DEAR MRS. JENKS: I have been in Washington for some days, and hence have not answered your last amusing letter.

Evidently your visit to Washington caused you to lose your temper. I don't know when I laughed so heartily as I did after reading your letter. Bless your innocent soul, you shouldn't get mad. It don't do a particle of good, and spoils the complexion of women. They do say that Sherman fooled you badly; that you gave him that letter on promises to pay, and that after getting it he told you to whistle for your dingbats.

Now I can imagine a mysterious woman of Louisiana, chock-full of damning proofs of conspiracies, etc., and who traveled hundreds of miles for the purpose of straightening things generally, winking and for "dingbats." Jewhillikins! I don't wonder you got mad. Sherman is a sly old coon, who knows the soft side of the gentler sex, and, with visions of sinecures, etc., in prospective, I am not surprised at the old sinner's success.

And so you are coming up, fortified. You have no idea how my hopes revived when I learned your decision. Come, by all means. Send a barrel of dynamite by express, and fortify yourself with a return ticket.

You ought to hear M—— tell how you tried to bulldoze him out of a pass.

It's as good as a circus.

I inclose you an article from a Chicago paper, which you can hand down to your posterity as an heirloom or use—all the same. Very truly yours,

JAMES E. ANDERSON.

MARCH 14.

MR. ANDERSON: Your favor of the 8th is at hand. Permit me to advise you to keep cool. Pray have no fears for me. I know how disinterested they are. I am not afraid, being armed and well prepared. Really I was not aware I ever assumed to be a shining light to guide benighted beings like you, though I should do so, for really you have not good sense. You talk far too much. * * * AGNES D. JENKS.

THE "NORTH AMERICAN," PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 10, 1878.

MY DEAR MRS. JENKS: Your last two letters may not have been funny, as you say, still I laughed heartily over them nevertheless. And so you were not mad? How strange, considering that you d——d Hayes, Sherman and Co., and wished them all to the devil. I naturally concluded you were mad. And so you would not take filthy greenbacks from my friends? Well, that's good. Why, I distinctly understood you to name $500 as the sum needed to pay off that mortgage, and, after receiving it, you would return to New Orleans and forward documents that would carry consternation generally to the administration. What in Satan's name did you expect to gain by lying in the manner you did? For you did lie most damnably. Why, at the very time you were in W—— trying to sell that document, another party was there who had it in his possession, and he declares you never saw it; that he does not know you, and never heard of you until you gained notoriety by attempting to bulldoze S——n. No wonder the old coon got mad. He knew all about it, and knew you knew nothing. I was not aware of the actual state of things until the day I saw you last, and only the production of the paper itself could convince me that you had the hardihood to come on such a fool's errand. There is a building just outside of Jackson to which I think you had better be sent. And so you want to know how M—— came to speak of the pass "for many reasons." Well, if you will state your reasons, and they are good ones, I may give you the information. However, I think you had better retire to the shades of private life and meddle no more with politics. I would recommend a shower bath daily. It sometimes cures it in a mild form. Very truly yours, J. E. A.

NEW ORLEANS, April 15, 1878.

MR. ANDERSON: Permit me to congratulate you on the discovery of your El Doradoic letter, which has so long existed as a bright spot in your imagination. Did you exclaim: "Is that the letter which I see before me?" Or, "Ah, there are thousands of them if you only knew where to find them?" Like the Irishman, "It's many a foine letthers you might got if they had been given to you," but, alas! "there's the rub." Nay, I am not mad, and really have the highest admiration for the administration. I regret to perceive, my dear sir, like many of your brother lunatics I have chanced to meet, you deem others mad and only yourself sane—a common case. But, forbear. There is a place in Baton Rouge I deem a suitable residence for you. I imagine the regulation costume thereof would become your bright, blonde beauty, and, in the solemn gloom of that grand old pile, you might meditate on the fleeting uncertainty of letters political. Many thanks for your kind and disinterested advice, though I am unable to avail myself of it, from the fact that I so much admire the science of politics that I feel I must bask in their sunshine for a time at least. I think a slight shadow of reason might return to you if you would take a trip though the hills of East Feliciana parish, and let the bulldozers get hold of you once more. I imagine your ultimate cure under their tender treatment would be certain, and thereby confer great benefit on your friends. Your ideas seem very much mixed, judging from the wild manner in which you intermingle my private affairs with political matters. Pardon me, I am too good a Republican to think of my own interests when I feel that the very life of the republic, and the well-being of my own party, are at stake. Behold in me a true patriot.

N. B.—I would suggest that you keep that man with the document in sight. Stick closer to him than a brother. "Grapple him to your soul with hooks of steel." Let your understanding with him be specific enough. Should you get the document, let no man grab it from you, but "hold the fort" with much dignitude. Hoping you may, in time, recover from your mental indisposition, and regain your usual intellectibility, I am, with much sympathy, yours,

A. D. JENKS.

Patti and Caux Not Legally Married.

The latest phase of Adelina Patti's difficulties with her ex-husband, the Marquis of Caux, is odd enough, but likely to be more satisfactory to the singer than the Marquis. It is that they never were legally married at all. The ceremony was performed in a Roman Catholic church in Clapham, a London suburb, by a priest who certifies that the priest of the lady's parish in Paris had delegated authority to him to celebrate it. The French Court of Appeal has pronounced the marriage null and void. The code Napoleon does not consider lawful a marriage contracted in a foreign country between French or French and foreign parties except it has been celebrated in the forms of the country, which this was not. It was not done in accordance with the rites and ceremonies of the Roman church, for the canonical law gave the English priest no right over the foreign parties espoused. Moreover, the French priest could not delegate that power under either French civil or Roman canonical law. Consequently, there was no proper marriage. If no marriage, then there can be no divorce, and it follows that the diva Patti is released from the decree giving the spendthrift Caux half her jewels and earnings. One feels glad to know, notwithstanding Patti is a very reprehensible young woman, that she won't have to support Caux any longer.

When Should Wheat Be Cut?

The Hon. Norton S. Townshend, of Ohio State University, Columbus, is engaged in a series of interesting experiments with the ripening wheat for the purpose of ascertaining by microscopic examination at what stage of ripening it should be cut. It is regarded by farmers in many localities as the most profitable course to harvest the grain so early that none of it will shell out in the operation. It is found that whiter flour is produced when this is done; but it is also found that the flour does not "rise" as well as that which is made from the matured grain. A succession of microscopic examinations, conducted through the period between the attainment of full size by the kernel and the perfect ripening of the grain, is expected to yield valuable economical information as to these points.—Ohio State Journal.

Curiosities of Popular and Electoral Votes.

The report of the House of Representatives committee in favor of an amendment to the constitution to provide for the election of President by the people, through the instrumentality of electoral votes in the several States, to be divided among the candidates according to the number of popular votes received by them respectively, contains an interesting table which shows the distribution upon this plan of the votes cast at the election of 1876.

The whole electoral vote was 369, and the whole popular vote was 8,433,263. Although Tilden received a majority of the latter—whether the votes of Louisiana and Florida are included or excluded—Hayes secured a majority of the former. A like thing has happened before—notably in 1860, when Lincoln was elected by the Electoral College by a majority of 57, although in the popular canvass he was in a minority of 944,149. It was, among other purposes, to put an end to this electoral inconsistency that the committee reported the amendment.

Cooper received a popular vote of 81,737—more than the whole vote of any one of nine States of the Union; but he was not heard of in the Electoral College because his votes were not so concentrated as to be effectual. According to the proposed plan he would have had three electoral votes and a fraction of a vote; but he would not have secured an entire electoral vote in any State—coming the nearest to one in Illinois, which would have given him .658 of a vote.

In the State of New York the whole popular vote was 1,013,148, of which Tilden received 32,742 more than Hayes. Under the existing system Tilden secured all the 35 electoral votes of the State. Under the proposed system Tilden would have secured 18 and a fraction and Hayes would have secured 16 and a fraction. So in Pennsylvania Hayes, with a majority of 17,964, secured the 29 electoral votes of the State, while according to the amendment Tilden would have received 14 and a fraction, and Hayes would have received 14 and a larger fraction. In Ohio, where Hayes ran ahead of Tilden 7,516 votes and secured the 22 electoral votes, under the new plan Tilden would have received 10 votes and more than eight-tenths of a vote and Hayes would have received 11 votes and less than one-tenth of a vote—that is to say, the difference between them would have been .252, or about one quarter of one vote.

The whole table shows curiously that the effect of the Electoral College system is to suppress the popular voice, although the system has been so modified in practice that now, contrary to the intention of the framers of the constitution, the people and not the electors really name the President.—New York Evening Post.

American Ingenuity at the Exposition.

The Paris Exhibition is the interpreter of the thought, and the orator of the text. Now take some of the work of the hand of American labor as you see, and study it in the Paris Exhibition, and trace it over the earth. In all the gorgeous sections of the more pretentious ancient nations there is not one that does not partly pay unconscious tribute to American ingenuity. The agricultural implements of England are many of them modeled after American originals. The watchmakers of Geneva admit the successful competition of the New England chronometer. The printed cottons of Manchester yield to the superiority of Massachusetts fabrics, often sold over British counters to foreign customers. The jewelry of Italy is woven out of the finest fibers of the gold of Nevada. The delicate processes of French refining and metallurgy are conducted with the quicksilver of California. Singer sewing machines are for sale in all the cities of Europe; Fairbanks' scales are used in the distant capitals of the Orient. American pianos and parlor organs are bought by the humble foreigners, and even by those in good circumstances, who cannot afford the costly instruments of Paris and London, and even trained experts prefer the American pianos to the best product of the great piano-makers of Germany. The cutlers of Sheffield admit the finish of the cheaper and better work of Hamilton Disston, and the accuracy of the fine edged tools of Sellers & Co., Philadelphia.—J. W. Forney, in Philadelphia Press.

Gen. Sherman's Son Becomes a Jesuit.

The Ave Maria, a Roman Catholic journal, says: "From a private letter to one of the friends of the family we learn that Mr. Thomas Ewing Sherman, eldest son of Gen. Sherman, Commander-in-Chief of the United States armies, sailed from New York on the 5th inst. for England, with the intention of entering the Novitiate of the Society of Jesus. Mr. Sherman, now entering on the 22d year of his age, is a young man of scholarly attainments, and has taken his present resolve only after mature consideration and with the consent of his parents. Having asked his father's permission, the latter informed him that, as much as he disliked the separation, he could not refuse his request. He had always shown himself a dutiful, affectionate son, and his happiness could not fail to supersede any selfish or human impulse in the hearts of his parents. Mr. Sherman began his studies early in boyhood at Notre Dame, Ind.; when his family removed to Washington he entered the Jesuit University at Georgetown, D. C., where he graduated with honor; then went to Yale College for a course of law, which he finished at the University of St. Louis, Mo. He has chosen England in preference to the home branches of the society, as he is likely to meet with less distraction in his chosen career among strangers than here among his friends and the companions of his youth."

A WHOLE FAMILY IMMOLATED.

Four Children Burned to Death and One Impaled—Their Father Fatally Burne in Trying to Save Them.

[From the St. Louis Republican.]

About three miles east of Ricker's Prairie, Mo., lived John Leonard, with his wife, married daughter, and five younger children. The house was a substantial log structure, with an attic overhead, and a summer kitchen on the south side, the roof being so made as to connect the house with the kitchen, which stood the width of a hallway distant from the main house. A pair of stairs in this hallway led up to the attic, from which there was no other egress. Friday night the five children went to sleep in the attic, the older people sleeping in the room below. During the night, from some unexplained cause, the kitchen caught fire, and, before the danger was discovered, the staircase leading to the attic was in flames. The people on the first floor had little difficulty in escaping, for, though the only door was exposed to the intense heat, there was a window from which they easily gained places of safety. But, for the children in the attic, there seemed to be no hope. The oldest was a boy 16 years old, and, when the alarm reached him, his youth and inexperience were not proof against the excitement of such an occasion. The solid walls of logs imprisoned the children, and the fierce flames raged and roared at the doorway. There was a window in the north end of the attic, barely large enough for a person to crawl through, and, it would seem that, with proper management, this might have become the means of saving all. But the father, in his frantic efforts to reach the attic by the stairs, had got his clothing on fire, and been so badly burned that he was entirely disabled. There was no one to direct or manage for the children, and, finally, the oldest boy, having torn the sash from the window, threw himself out, leaving the four children to their miserable fate. Their four corpses were found the next morning charred to cinders.

But, as though this was not enough of horror, still another tragedy has to be chronicled in connection with the affair. When the boy jumped from the window he had only a short twelve feet to fall, and might easily have expected to get off with a few bruises; but, as it happened, a picket fence ran along under the window, about two feet distant from the house. The palings were of hard wood, split thin, and sharpened to long, tapering points. In his terror, the boy had blindly cast himself upon this bristling fence. The sharp points pierced his unprotected sides, and impaled him. The mother and sister lifted him from his fixed position, but life had forsaken him. The father's injuries are so severe that there is little expectation of his recovery. The calamity is one of the most extraordinary and appalling that it is possible to conceive as happening to a family living in a small, low building. In the city, in lofty tenements, there is often danger that families will be cut off, but it is almost an unparalleled occurrence under circumstances like this.

The Negro Created Before Adam.

Prof. Alexander Winchell, of Syracuse University, has reprinted in pamphlet form, with the title Adamites and Pre-Adamites, an essay originally published by him in the Northern Christian Advocate, designed to show that the negro race was in existence on this globe long before the time of Adam. He favors, also, reforming the popularly received chronology, and would place the creation described in Genesis 10,500 years before the birth of Abraham, or 14,378 years before the present era. At the same time he would bring down the stone and lake-dwelling ages to within a period of not more than 6,000 years ago. In this way, he thinks, the Biblical record can be made to agree with the established facts of modern ethnological, philological and geological research. Some special interest attaches to his views, because the publication of them has led to his dismissal from the Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tenn., where, in addition to his Syracuse professorship, he held the chair of historical geology and zoology. In spite of his earnest protestation of orthodoxy, the President of the university insisted that he was an evolutionist, and an enemy of "the plan of redemption," and he had to go.

THE GREAT PERIL!

The Monster Monopoly.

Centralized power is the never-failing enemy of civil liberty. There now exists in the United States an association wilder in its scope, stronger in its resources, and more thoroughly hedged in its respectability than ever before was organized in human society. It is known as the National Bank Association. I propose to analyze its power and make known its purposes. This one association is composed of 2,300 corporations and more than 1,000 private bankers.

The corporations have a fixed capital of $500,000,000, and control a subsidiary fund of $1,500,000,000 of money, making, with their deposits and the funds of the private bankers identified with it, a central colossus of moneyed power wielding the influence of $2,000,000,000 of concentrated capital, centralized under one supreme central head, favoring the most boundless and uncontrolled monopoly that ever united to master the destinies of a free and independent people. Its object is two-fold:

1. To prolong the existence of the national banks into an endless monopoly of banking privileges.

2. To control the money and the currency of the nation by defeating all legislation tending to lessen the power or diminish the monopoly of the national banks.

To understand its purposes it is essential to understand the history of its growth, the extent of its profits and the power it can exercise for good or evil.

When the United States Government was battling with rebels; when our very existence was trembling on the verge of exhausted coin; when banking resources gave out; when public confidence had weakened into suspicion; and when desolating war was demanding millions daily to sustain our armies in the field, there seemed but one resource left; it was an appeal for financial aid to the capitalists of the nation. Capital, always selfish, knew the situation and comprehended its power. While the bold, manly and generous youth of the country were rushing to the battle-fields, capital hid itself behind the selfishness of human greed to dicker and bargain for usury as the price of yielding to our necessities. In this hour of national combat the national-banking system had its birth. The Government was forced into becoming the fawning-borrower-slave to the lender. Capital. Then it was that money dictated a system of monopolies, privileges and profits such as no Shylock had ever before conceived.

Then, when it had fashioned its law, when it had consummated its conditions, and panoplied its usury into Congressional monopolies lender like, it yet held back, creating suspicions, magnifying the power of gold, and depreciating the national credit, till it forced coin to more than double its value. Then, United States bonds having been fixed as the basis, and gold as the standard of their value, capital commenced to purchase the bonds. The Blank bill passed March 23, 1863. To get at just what the bankers paid for their bonds, we must establish the price of gold at the periods when the Bonds were sold by the Government and purchased by the bankers. The price of gold from April 1, 1863, to January 1, 1864, varied from 130 to 160, averaging 145.

From Jan. 1, 1866, to Jan. 1, 1867, 131 banks were organized, with a capital of $22,316,162. The price of gold averaged 142, making a profit to the bankers of....................................	6,694,546.90

Making the aggregate of profit.........	$167,325,777.20

Showing the absolute profit made on the investment to have been more than four times the capital of the Bank of the United States, when it controlled the Senate, Congress, and the money of the Union, and more than $17,000,000, more than the entire capital of the Bank of England, which controls the finances of the British empire.

Not contented with this enormous bounty, the United States was forced to obligate the people to exempt all of the bonds from taxation and to pay interest in gold on the face of the bonds, namely on

United States bonds to secure circulation....................................	$391,563,300
United States bonds to secure deposits.	17,753,650
United States bonds for reserve.........	24,517,059
Total....................................	$434,834,009

This represents the bonds held by the banks in 1871, and the amount does not materially vary. Assuming the interest to have been 6 per cent. in gold, and the average premium from 1864 to 1874 on gold to have been 50 per cent. the interest would equal 9 per cent. in currency or an annual sum of $39,135,060.81 as a yearly bounty, which, taking the fourteen years the banks have been in operation, foots up to the sum of $547,890,851.34, which, added to the profit on the bonds, $167,325,777.20, make an aggregate of profits of $715,216,628.54. These figures, enormous as they are, are but the simple enumerators of the most gigantic swindle that ever was imposed upon a civilized people. There is nothing in the history of the world to compare with it in enormity, and every dollar of it has been stolen from THE TAXED and patient people to be given to the untaxed monopolists.

But, thus far, I have only reached the cornerstone of the temple of the bankers' privileges. The entire investment in the purchase of the $410,316,950 of United States bonds for banking purposes was but $197,508,239. This represents the sum in money invested as capital by the national banks. They thus started with a 20 per cent. investment. The next step in their monopoly was for the United States to issue to these banks 90 per cent. of national-bank notes, representing the credit of the United States, amounting to the sum of $350,000,000, to lend —for this currency was money—which the bankers received from the Government to use for banking purposes. This shows what the bankers got for their

Investment....................................	$197,508,239
Receipts—U. S. bonds....................................	$434,834,009
National-bank currency....................................	350,000,000
Making the sum on which they received interest....................................	$784,834,009

The interest received has been as follows:

On United States bonds....................................	$39,135,060.81
On national-bank currency....................................	33,250,000.00
Total....................................	$72,385,060.81

This is not all. The Government not only lent the banks its credit, so that they at once drew to their vaults deposits which have averaged $600,000,000, but they gave the banks the chartered right to loan these deposits. So that the aggregate of their loans have averaged the sum of $783,250,000, which makes the amount of their loans on their deposits $433,250,000, which at 9¼ per cent. per annum—that being the percentage the Comptroller of the Currency reports the banks to have realized on their loans—makes the annual sum of their interest on their deposits $38,992,500. So that the national-bank interest account on an investment of $197,508,239 is demonstrated to be as follows:

On United States bonds....................................	$39,135,060.81
On national bank bills....................................	33,250,000.00
On national bank deposits....................................	38,992,500.00
Total....................................	$111,377,560.81

or more than 50 per cent. annual profit.

Nor does this give the full measure of the most infamous privileges these chartered cormorants are enjoying.

They were made agents of the Government to sell bonds, given the right to sell, exchange and do all the discounts the most favored bank charters ever allowed; and, beyond this, there is still another feature of their profits which should not be overlooked, namely, the premium on their bonds, which to-day, at the lowest figures reported in the money markets, amounts to an additional sum of $21,184,254, which, deducted from the actual investment, shows that the investment of capital is only $176,323,985, on which their interest annually received is $111,377,560.81, or about 65 per cent. These annual bounties paid to the "Barons of the Purse," saying nothing of compound interest, in the fourteen years of bank depredations, figures up to the sum of $1,559,285,941.34.

Having thus shown how the national banks originated, the money that they have actually realized as profits on the money they actually invested, and that they now hold the United States bonds valued at $456,018,263 for the original investment of $197,508,239, I proceed to show the objects and purposes of the huge combination which is now organized as the National Bank Association. The incorporated national banks, in October, 1876, numbered 2,089. The amount of their capital stock, surplus funds, undivided profits, circulation, deposits and other items swelled their resources to the enormous sum of $1,823,469,723.44, the largest combination of capital ever embraced in any oligarchy known to the world. These 2,090 corporations, in the full panoply of soulless power, combined into a single leviathan monopoly to override all restraint; to compass all control; to rule Congress; to dictate to the nation its laws, to the people their rights, and to the United States their money and finances. Born out of the storms of rebellion, cradled into immense wealth by monopolized subsidies, its object is to make the Government its servant, and the people its slaves. Having thus characterized its objects, let us now see how it is composed.

The stock of the national banks is represented by 5,054,828 shares of $100 each, and about 1,500,000 shares less than $100 each. These shares are owned by 208,000 shareholders. Massachusetts holds 988,700 shares, the remaining New England States 1,030,126 shares. New York holds 1,482,746 shares; the other Middle States 1,568,632 shares. The Southern States, entire, 429,393 shares, or less than one-half held by Massachusetts, and the whole number of the Western States 937,333 shares, or less than one New England State. The Pacific States and Territories, 69,000 shares.

The number of shareholders in the Eastern States are 86,975, of whom 46,564 reside in Massachusetts. In the Middle States there are 68,126, of whom 26,339 reside in New York, 28,612 in Pennsylvania. In the Southern States there are 11,004. In the Western States, 17,170. In the Pacific States and Territories there are 721. Canadians hold 6,519; Great Britain, 6,728, and other portions of Europe, Asia, and the islands, 23,000.

Thus it is seen that more than four-fifths of this moneyed power is held by the Atlantic States. They have combined and controlled it. It is a power, which, to use the words of Thomas H. Benton, when speaking of the old United States Bank, which had a capital of but $35,000,000, or less than the people are now annually forced to pay as a bounty to the national banks, "is too great to be tolerated in a government of free and equal laws." It is a power massed and concentrated by a central conclave in New York, "to make the rich richer and the poor poorer," to multiply nabobs and paupers, and to deepen and widen the gulf which separates Dives from Lazarus. It has been combined by capital to make capital master. Its leaders have already made two public declarations:

1. That the association is dedicated to reducing all employes to the lowest measure of compensation, and

2. That its machinery is now in operation so that in any emergency the financial corporations of the East can act together at a single day's notice, and with such power that no act of Congress can overcome or resist their decision.

Its standard of wages is that which constitutes European pauperism. Its edict of power is that the American laborer must be contented with low wages; and its purpose is to open an unsparing war against all interests which resist it.

From its policy in the past, its policy in the future is easily deduced. At the birth of the greenback the originators of the Bank Association started their nefarious work. It was necessary to their purpose that they discredit it, and they were powerful enough to subjugate it to gold speculators, by making the Government hang the chain of repudiation round its neck by printing on every bill its refusal to receive it for duties on imports and interest on the public debt. Unless this was done it would be equal to gold, and if equal to gold the bonds could not be reduced to 42 cents on the dollar as they were. Again, if equal to gold, as they were in value but for this repudiation, gold speculators could not speculate on the misfortunes of the people by continually magnifying the price of gold, and as continually decrying the price of greenbacks. The second step was to change the contract by which our bonds, made payable in lawful money, were made payable in gold. This they forced Congress to do. It was a felony, but they were guilty of it. The third step was to demonetize silver by an infamous fraud. They did this because we had silver in abundance, knowing that gold was scarce, and that we had but little of it; for, with our bonds payable in gold, they knew they were masters of the people. The fourth step was to fix a time when specie payment should be resumed as a forced law, and when, at the will of the money power, no debt could be liquidated except in gold.

These were the initiatory and preparatory measures to organize and consummate the aristocratic and oligarchic power of the national-bank monopoly. It was essential to make them masters of the finances of the nation and of the people:

1. To discredit the greenback, in order to dissatisfy the people with it by making it inferior to gold. The foundation was laid in two ways, by direct action first, by stamping its inferiority on the back of every bill, as a positive repudiation of its power to pay duties or interest on the public debt, and thus to create a constant demand for gold, so as to keep the commercial world advertised of its inferiority and its inability to perform the highest functions of money.

2. By making a superior through which it should be compelled to redeem itself; thus constituting gold as the sovereign and superior, and the greenback as the inferior subject; keeping this inferiority as the weapon with which the gold speculator could daily assail the uncertainty in value of the greenback, and hourly agitate public credit for its redemption.

These were the direct means by which the money power forced the Government to recognize and proclaim the fluctuating and uncertain value of its own money. The indirect attack which his direct means supported was the Wall street cry of "Rag Baby," "Paper Balloons," "inflation," which hard-money knaves hourly resorted to, invoking the terrible losses which peoples and nations had been forced to submit to in depreciated paper money, citing to sustain their diabolical purpose the worthless millions of "French Assignats," Continental Currency," and "Southern Confederacy money," as if they were omnipotent to defeat our national resources, our honor as a people, and our credit as a Government.

To make this constant outcry a matter of constant alarm, they undertook to intensify the danger. Under the specious, but false and infamous, declaration that American credit was in danger, and that this danger could only be met and resisted by declaring that our bonds, which had been bought and paid for in greenbacks, and which were issued as payable in greenbacks or lawful money, should be paid in gold; and in this Congressional declaration, thus secure another legislative repudiation of the greenback and a further national recognition of its inferiority.

Having secured these fortifications to establish that gold was the sovereign, and the Government its subject, they yet saw that they would not possess the full power they coveted so long as silver, which we produced in greater abundance than any other nation, could be used as a means of liquidating debts, and as a measure of value. Therefore, to take from the people their last and most potent means of sustaining credit and regulating exchanges, they perpetrated the contemptible and overwhelming outrage of demonetizing silver. This done, the whole credit, property, prosperity, and power of the nation were in the hands of the men who could control the gold, provided they could take one more step, and induce Congress to pass a law for the forced resumption of specie payment. This they succeeded in doing, so that on the 1st day of January, 1879, there should be no recognized money but gold. The greenback repudiated, silver demonetized, gold made king, and the bankers controlling the gold, the Government would be at their mercy, property subject to their value, credit to their dictation, and the people their slaves.

These foundations for autocratic control having been thus secured to concentrate and wield the power so obtained, the next step was to organize the Bankers' Association, and they have organized it—organized it for the purpose of perpetuating an infamous monopoly; a monopoly to tax the mass of the people for the support of a bondholding aristocracy of bankers exempt from taxation; a monopoly to force from circulation the sovereign money of the sovereign people; a monopoly to dictate the currency, control the finances, and issue the money of the nation. It has organized, knowing that it can control the gold, and knowing that it has to root out, discredit and kill the greenback, or that the greenback will root out, discredit and overthrow the national banks and their monster offspring, this national devil-fish, this lophius piscatorius, fashioned into a leviathan money vampire. The creatures who gave it birth were conceived in war. The eggs out of which it was hatched were warmed into antimated life by the contraction of money to make ready to sacrifice the nation to the monster, forced specie payment. It has already laid waste every enterprise. Three millions of laborers, without labor and without bread, are now waiting to know whether by its continuance they are to be without hope. Like the devil-fish, it has crushed and killed and blighted all it has touched. It is now organized as a vampire to suck out the blood and life and liberty of the people.

The issue is unmistakable. Either the Bank Association has got to give up its sovereignty of money and yield to the sovereignty of the greenback, or the Government of the United States has got to give up its sovereignty and become the subject-borrower-slave to the Bank Association. There is no room for equivocation; there is no dodging the issue, or the battle which is to decide the issue. Which side, then, shall we take? It is the Bank Association and slavery, or the greenback and liberty.

The Bank Association means monopoly, privilege, taxation and aristocracy. It means low wages, which is subjugation and European pauperism for the laborer. It means class legislation for the rich at the expense of the poor. It means subsidies to monopolists, land grants to speculating knaves. It is a warrant of authority for capital to enslave labor. It is a patent to the few to rob the many. It is a charter of right to rich men to steal from the nation its power, from the producer his production, from labor its reward, from the people their liberty.

This vampire, as I have already demonstrated, has sucked from the life-blood of the nation $1,559,285,941.34 as profits on an investment of $197,508,239, besides holding $456,018,263 as capital, on which it draws by yearly interest, as a tax upon the people for the banking army of aristocratic monopolists the monstrous sum of $111,377,560.81, or nearly as much, for yearly profit, as the entire capital of the Bank of England.

This robbery must cease or liberty will cease. The Bank Association, with all its monopolies and privileges, must end, or the voting people are cowards and slaves. STEPHEN D. DILLAYE.

"Pay the Debt," by Turning It Into Money Again.

It is not the amount of a public debt that is so much to be feared as the nature of the debt. A debt, circulating as money, discharging all the business functions of money, will prove a blessing. Not that a public debt is a blessing, but, the fact existing that there is a public debt, then, if that debt be borne by the people as a circulating medium, it becomes a blessing, when contrasted with the same debt put into an interest-bearing bond and withheld from circulation. When borne by the people in an interest-bearing bond, it becomes one of the most fearful curses known to civilization.

Bad, however, as this "bond curse" is —a curse that moves directly to bankruptcy and the pauperism of at least 90 per cent. of the people—it has another feature of ruin, that, when attached, makes it the most potent instrument of oppression that has ever been saddled upon labor by the cupidity, selfishness and avarice of tyrannical man. We mean a banking system of issue, that issue to be redeemed in coin, and based upon bonds.

When a public debt is once funded into bonds—the interest fixed at a rate per cent. above the aggregate increase per annum of wealth—then you have surely fastened upon the neck of labor a yoke that will bear it down to serfdom, slavery and final death. Lord Pitt, when the fight was going on in regard to this very subject between Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson, used this significant language: "Let the Americans go into their funding schemes and banking institutions, and their boasted liberty will prove a sham."

A hundred years of the republic has passed into history. During all this time the fight has been going on as to whether the Government should issue the money, or whether bank corporations should issue their notes as money. The banks succeeded mainly (up to the day of the greenbacks) in getting the right to circulate their notes as money. All their money (their notes as money) was secured by collaterals, bonds, real estate, personality, etc., and every dollar was to be redeemed in coin on demand.

This has been substantially our monetary system from the formation of the Government up to the creation of the greenback, Feb. 25, 1862. It has been known in the popular language of the world as a specie-payment banking system; and, in our case, as in all others, has proved a delusion, a snare, a fraud unparalleled, and has robbed labor more than any and all other causes combined. Daniel Webster, in giving his views of so pernicious, so infamous a system, used this language: "A banking system of issue (based on specie) is a contrivance invented to cheat the laboring classes of mankind."

How true this is can be fully attested by citing the fearful fact, namely: "That our banking system during the century suspended payments nineteen times, and each time, in closing up their affairs, swindled the productive interests and classes out of more than 55 cents on the dollar."

We are fighting our way back to this old robber system, and have been ever since Hugh McCulloch set his murder-mill of "Contraction and resumption" going; and when we get there the banks will be ready to "suspend" on an average of once in six years; and each time in "closing up," by a means more vile than piracy, will rob the people of from 50 to 70 cents on the dollar—money thus stolen from the toilers of the world.

The public debt reached its maximum amount Sept. 1, 1865, and was stated at $2,808,678,612. Now suppose the currency portion of that debt (we admit it a debt only for the purpose of this agreement)—which at the time stated was $1,996,678,770, was to-day, as then, a circulating medium—was money. What would be the effect upon all the material interests and moral subjects? There is no question but what joyous hope would fill the heart of the now despairing, and happy contentment would cluster round the hearthstones of the needy, making that Mecca of the poor like unto Jacob's Bethel of old, the very gate of heaven.

The debt as it now stands is a "bonded murder-mill," crushing to death our entire industrial and labor system. On the other hand, suppose the sum above named was to-day carried as circulating medium, as it once was, and like the debt of the little republic of Venice was for over 500 years, such a thing would act as hope from despair, as life from the dead.

On carrying a debt as currency, De Wolf, in his "Bank of Venice," says: "The facility of payment furnished by the bank, which made it the admiration of Europe, honorable at once to the Government and merchants of Venice, and a support to the pride and power of its people, consisted in substituting as a medium of payment the debt of the republic for current coin."—Jesse Harper.

Over-Production.

Thousands of men and women starving to death all over the country, and an over-production of corn in the cribs.

Thousands of women and children ragged and barefooted, with an over-production of shoes and calico in the stores and factories.

Factories, mills and mines idle, with an over-production of labor tramping for work.

Failures and bankruptcies multiplying in every State, for the want of money, while John Sherman had to be prevented by law from burning up an over-production of greenbacks.—Pekin Legal Tender.

The White House Barber.

There is a colored man named Howe connected with the Executive Mansion in whom I have taken a great deal of interest during the past ten years or more. He was found there by Johnson when he came in. Johnson found him to be a good barber and kept him. He then shaved Grant and Babcock, and accompanied them in their summerings at Long Branch. Mr. Hayes liked him and kept him, and he still calls at the White House every morning with his razors, combs and brushes, and attends to anything thrt is needed in his line. All of these years he has drawn pay as a first-class clerk ($1,200 per annum) in the Treasury Department, but he has rendered no service in return, except shaving or shampooing those connected with the Executive Mansion, which does not take one hour in the day. Recently there was an examination for a vacancy in a second-class clerkship ($1,400 per annum) in the Third Auditor's office. The Auditor recommended a disabled soldier for the position, but Mr. Hayes went one better and put his barber in the place. Of course the disabled soldier felt bad about it, but that does not interfere with the barber drawing the salary just the same. A second-class clerk of the Third Auditor's office barberizes Hayes and Dr. Rogers, his Private Secretary. Instead of using ink he uses lather. He renders no service to the Treasury Department whatever, as, when he is not at the White House, he is occupied in running a public barber-shop in this city that he also keeps. The soldier is laid aside to make room for him, and all this under a reform administration and a "soldier's friend" President. It is enough to make one cuss—but that would do no good—although something of a relief at times, if it is done well.—Washington letter to Hartford Times.

Sherman on the Griddle.

Secretary Sherman, says a Washington dispatch, is very much disturbed at the way the Louisiana end of the investigation is going. The testimony doesn't appear to suit him. He expresses dissatisfaction with the way his case is being managed, and has requested Shellabarger to go down to New Orleans and take charge of his defense. Chairman Potter has forwarded to Sherman a reply to the latter's request that several hundred witnesses, whom he names, may be summoned to prove that there was intimidation and fraud in Louisiana. Potter reminds Sherman that the principal witnesses whom he asks for have already been summoned, including Weber, whose testimony has been taken, and that every other request of the Secretary has been granted, but the committee have not yet decided to go into the question of intimidation, and he (Potter) does not think it germane or necessary. The allusion to Weber's testimony is a little rough in view of the facts. Weber was summoned at Sherman's instance as his witness. On his arrival Sherman and Shellabarger interviewed him, and undertook to "coach" him. Finding that Weber didn't "coach" worth a cent, and wasn't likely to give the kind of testimony wanted, they dropped him and told him he might go home, but some of the committee thought he might as well testify as long as he was here; so he stayed. It is a singular fact that every witness so far has been a Republican.

Michigan Democratic Platform.

The Democratic party of the State of Michigan, in convention assembled, renewing its fidelity to time-honored principles, standing for the sacred preservation of the nation's credit and the nation's faith, for the constitution and laws, and for the great truth that this is a Government of the people, who will the people should rule, do hereby declare:

1. That we arraign the Republican party for corruption in office, and its unwise legislation and its wicked perversion of the people's will, as expressed at the polls. It has squandered the public lands, squandered the public funds, and corrupted the whole body politic. It has placed men in office dishonest and incapable, who have used their positions as private perquisites. It has legislated for the rich, oppressed the poor, and created gigantic monopolies. It has burdened each town and city with debt and taxation, and driven them to the verge of bankruptcy. It has driven our commerce from the seas, and destroyed our once-powerful navy. It has completed its career of crime and dishonor by stealing the Presidency from the people, and placing fraud in the Presidential chair.

2. We indorse the investigation of the electoral frauds, to the end that the truth of history be vindicated, and a repetition of such crimes prevented.

3. We declare that gold and silver coin is the money of the constitution, and all paper money should be convertible into coin at the will of the holder. We are opposed to a further forcible reduction of the volume of the currency, and we approve of the act of Congress prohibiting such reduction. We declare that the prostrate condition of the business interests of the country imperatively demands that taxation, both State and national, shall be reduced to the lowest point consistent with the attainment of the objects for which such taxes shall be levied, and that economy shall be practiced in every department of the Government. We congratulate the country upon the reduction of over $50,000,000 in the national expenditures during the last four years, and which result was secured by a Democratic House of Representatives.

THE Christian at Work has an interesting work on Sunday-schools in the United States. There are about 18,000,000 children between the ages of 3 and 18, while the attendance at the Sunday-schools is only a little over 7,250,050.

THE United Presbyterian Church report for the year ending May 1, 56 presbyteries, 647 ministers, 792 congregations, 78,648 members, and 709 Sunday-schools, with 66,215 officers and scholars; total contributions were $782,666. The contributions by Sabbath-schools were $23,210.

AT Brookfield, Mass., "a man's vest, hanging on a peg in a barn, was blown back and forth against the post by the breeze through the open doors, until matches in the pockets were ignited, and, had not some one chanced to be close by with water, the barn and contents would have been destroyed."

SENATOR THURMAN'S red-silk handkerchief, which figured so conspicuously during the sessions of the Electoral Commission, will appear in Mrs. Fassett's painting of that tribunal. The Senator has been sketched with the handkerchief thrown carelessly over his arm, and it will be so handed down to posterity.

M. DE LESSEPS' financial statement shows a much-increased, profitable sea traffic through the Suez canal last year. The canal proper is reported in a thoroughly-efficient working state, with average depth of water from twenty-seven to twenty-eight feet. At the Port Said entrance a gradual shoaling of the whole sea basin indicates trouble in the future.

THE cruelty of which a Wisconsin wife complains, in her suit for divorce, as that her husband tied her securely and shaved her head. The defense is that she bleached her black hair to lemon color by the use of acid, and that he, deeming such a thing highly scandalous, took the only means of undoing what she had done. He says that he bought a wig for her, imitating her natural hair, so that her bare head might be concealed while nature was remedying the disfiguration.

THE Japanese Government are evidently losing no time in extending their system of telegraphic communication, for there are now 125 telegraphic stations in the country, and it is estimated that there are 5,000 miles of wire in operation; 1,000 miles more are in course of construction, and still further extensions are contemplated. Considering that the first telegraph line for practical purposes was not erected in Japan before the end of 1869, the result achieved is by no means unsatisfactory.

A Russian Tragedy.

The Court of Assizes in Vaioh, Russia, had the case presented of a boy of 9 years, who had murdered his mother. The latter, since the recent death of her husband, had permitted herself an intimacy with a Government functionary which her son became aware of, and by which he was deeply mortified. He brooded over his mother's conduct, and begged her to change her course. The mother laughed, and without further listening told him to meddle with matters that concerned his age. The boy resolved on her death, and dug a grave for her. One night he entered her room with a hatchet, and, after contemplating the sleeping woman, and praying for her, fell asleep himself. His mother found him in the morning with the hatchet by his side. She questioned him with alarm regarding the hatchet. He gave a satisfactory excuse, and renewed his supplications for a cessation of her bad conduct. She told him to hold his tongue. On the night following he killed her, as she slept, with a single blow of the hatchet, and dragged her to the grave he had prepared. A search was made by the police, and the freshly stirred earth with which the boy had filled the cavity excited suspicion. The body was found, and the boy was arrested.

The Cross of the Editor.

The cross of the editor, constant as cruel, is in the evanescence of his productions. The most brilliant articles seem like the fire-fly of June. It flashes and then expires. Collected editorials are the dullest of reading. They are salt that has lost its savor. The most promising experiments of this kind have been failures. Dust is on the leaves and publishers are vexed. But to what hard-working editor does there not come the hope at some time, with propitious circumstances, when the collar shall no longer chafe, and the strain shall be relaxed, of doing something that will have permanent utility, upon which he may felicitate himself, as Gibbon joyed beneath the acacias of Lausanne, or as Allibone, with holier emotion, returned his "profound gratitude to that Almighty Being, 'without whose help all labor is ineffectual, and without whose grace all wisdom is folly?'" But the vision never receives the halo of realization, hardly the hue of anticipation. The grinding toil endures, and to the last he tugs as at a windlass, letting buckets down into the wells of thought only to draw them up full—of emptiness.—Troy Times.

Democratic Congressional Convention.

Notice is hereby given that a delegate convention of the Democrats of the 13th Congressional district, and all others in said district who subscribe to the principles enumerated through the Democratic state platform, adopted at Indianapolis on the 23nd of last February, will be held at Kendalville, Indiana, on Tuesday August 20th, 1878, at 10 o'clock H. M., for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Congress, and for the transaction of such other business as may be presented. In accordance with the basis of representation heretofore established, the several counties are entitled to send the following number of delegates to said convention. DeKalb, 26; LaGrange, 12; Elkhart, 34, Marshall, 28; Kosciusko, 27; Noble, 27 and Steuben, 8.

By authority of the Congressional Central Committee.

Weber no Tool.

During the cross-examination of E. L. Weber, by Cox of the Potter sub-committee, at New Orleans, on the 11th inst., in answer to a question relating to his indictment, the witness turning to Mr. Cox, said excitedly, "You Republicans could use my brother, who is dead to-day, you could use us on the stand to swear to any kind of a lie that you wanted in order to support and sustain you; to-day, that you can not use me as your tool, you propose to ruin me."

Senator Thurman is expected to blow his bugle and flop his red bandana with unusual vigor in Ohio this fall, for the result may have an important bearing upon his claims for the Presidential nomination in 1880, which many think lies between the two T's.—Tilden and Thurman.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Tilden, according to our political almanac, has lost his grip; the Hendricks eclipse that will be visible in the west and south will totally hide little Sammy from view.

Peter Cooper thinks Ben. Butler would make a strong candidate for President. Ben's Fourth of July speech gave him a "send-off" in a new direction politically; he is a much better man now than he was a few years since, and the handle of his name changes as he glides up and down on the see-saw of public opinion. First, it was simple Ben Butler, then General Butler, then "spoon-thief" Butler, then Hon. Benjamin Butler, then "cock-eye" Butler, and now the venerable old Peter, whose hairs are gray enough to indicate better sense, wants it President Butler.

William E. Gray, a notorious forger, whose father, the Rev. Edward H. Gray was chaplain of the United States senate from 1860 to 1869, was recently arrested in London and is now on his way to this country. During the sojourn abroad he successfully conducted his swindling operations in England and France. The amounts of his forgeries in the city of New York amounted to $310,000. While his money lasted, and he took away about $250,000, he lived in royal style and was on intimate terms with distinguished bankers and business men. But at last pennyless he returns to his old home to go to prison.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

His name will soon appear in Republican papers as a Democratic defaulter from Ohio, no doubt.

A New Man for President.

The following communication to the New York Sun touches Thurman up in the light in which he is seen by thousands of Democrats who have always regarded the 7 to 8 commission as an act due to short-sightedness and stupidity on the part of the Democratic leaders who stood by in fear and trembling and allowed the Nation's honor to be sacrificed by giving birth to an illegitimate heir to the highest American title. The masses of the Democratic party are not inclined to regard such timidity with favor in the future, whether it be under the leadership of a NEW MAN or otherwise. The correspondent says: "I was once ready to vote for Mr. Thurman for President, but I am not now. He not only violated but surrendered the Constitution. He debauched the Supreme Court from the fear of Grant's cannon, and now quietly sits down under the rule of fraud and infamy. A man placed as a sentinel to guard the gate of your citadel, who once betrays you and surrenders the keys, whether actuated by fraud or fear, can never be intrusted with the keys again. I propose, therefore for the Presidency a man who is without fear and above reproach, whom all the earth cannot frighten nor all its treasures bribe. His name is

JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON,

His noble attributes adorn him as the orders of merit did the great Frederick, but I beg leave nevertheless to enumerate some of them. He is a gentleman of the olden time; of honor as unsullied as a snowflake; a man to whom no one would dare propose that he should barter the patronage of his office, or look even with forbearance upon corruption of any kind, but especially official corruption. He is a great commander, as all the world knows that to be a great commander requires great ability—wisdom, indeed. He is an old-time Jeffersonian Democrat, a statesman well informed in the science of government, and thouroghly posted upon every constitutional question which has arisen under our Constitution, and with clear opinions upon the right side. He is opposed to centralization and in favor of the State Governments, in favor of economy and honesty in all governments and among all men. He was opposed to the eight to seven plan and law by which the Constitution was overthrown and the people cheated out of the Presidency; and when he was told that his name had been presented to the Fraudulent President for a cabinet appointment, he said promptly: "I am very sorry for it, because if the office were tendered to me I could not with honor accept it, as it would identify me with the Administration." The reply illustrates the high tone of the man. Last, but by no means least, he is opposed to military government and to the least increase of the army. Nay, he thinks it should be reduced. In his opinion the best defenders of a free republic are its citizen soldiers. In proof of this, he asks, what was the regular army during the civil war? Nowhere, except when whipped by and running from volunteers; citizen soldiers, who saved the Union and whipped the South; volunteer, citizen soldiers." And then he is a constitutional Union man.

The Men Who Run the Machine. Sherman's Backers.

As an indication of how the United States Treasury Department is manipulated in the interest of bondholders we clip the following from the New York Sun of the 12th inst: "The de facto Secretary, John Sherman, had two conferences in the Sub-Treasury yesterday with representative bankers on the question of resumption. The first was with the members of the late syndicate. August Belmont & Co. were represented by Mr. Lucke; Morton, Bliss & Co. by Mr. George Bliss; J. & W. Seligman & Co. by Mr. Joseph Seligman; Drexel, Morgan & Co. by Mr. Wright, and the First National Bank by Messrs. Fahnestock and Baker. Mr. Sherman told these gentlemen that he had requested them to meet him in order that he might ascertain their views relative to resumption. He felt confident that the Government, with its redemption fund of $121,000,000, was in a condition to resume at once, and said that he had no intention of issuing more bonds. Within a short time he intended to begin paying checks and drafts on the Treasury in specie, and it would be his earnest aim to use what power the law gave him to reduce the premium on gold, and finally to wipe it out entirely. The law authorized him to disburse specie whenever he deemed it expedient, but he could not begin to redeem greenbacks until Jan. 1, 1879, the date fixed by the Resumption Act. Mr. Sherman said further that circumstances just at this time were all in favor of speedy resumption, and he hoped that it would be brought about long before the time fixed. The balance of trade is largely in our favor, we have become competors in manufactured goods in markets where we never competed before, the prospects of the cotton crop are splendid, and all the indications are that we shall be able to maintain our present position. The called bonds which are to be paid by the treasury in a few days, will necessarily throw a large amount of gold on the market, and have a tendency to depress the premium, which is only now ¼@½ per cent.

The bankers agreed with Mr. Sherman as to the advisability of resuming, and he was asked at what date he would begin to disburse specie for governmental expenses. He declined to fix a specific date, but said that he should begin very soon. Immediately after the conference, a member of the syndicate told a Sun reporter that he would not be surprised if the specie disbursements are begun by the Treasury as early as Aug. 1. "Should this be the case," he said, "the Gold Room would go out of existence at once, and resumption would be accomplished without governmental orders. Even when the government begins to redeem legal tenders, I don't think there will be much of a rush for gold. Confidence in finance is everything. People don't want a gold dollar as long as they can get a paper one of equal purchasing value. If you go out of the city to-day and offer gold and greenbacks in payment of small bills, you will find that the greenbacks will be the favorites. The people are beginning to feel that the Treasury is solid, and hence I don't think they will make a run when the day of redemption comes."

The second conference was held in the afternoon, the participants being the following named bank Presidents: Benjamin B. Sherman of the Mechanics, William H. Hayes of the Bank of the State of New York, Charles Jenkins of the East River, Frederick D. Tappen of the Gallatin, George S. Coe, of the American Exchange, James M. Morrison of the Manhatten Company, Chas. M. Fry of the Bank of New York, Henry F. Vail of the Bank of Commerce, George I Seney of the Metropolitan, and E. H. Perkins, Jr., cashier of the Importers' and Traders' Bank. At this conference the de facto Secretary went over the same ground as at the one which preceded it, with the addition however, of the question to the bank Presidents as to whether his project of paying out silver would in any way tend to embarrass the banks. They replied that there was no danger of that, because most of the silver paid out would find its way back to the Sub-Treasury in the shape of customs.

"It is thought among the bankers that resumption is certain on or before the 1st of October. Mr. Sherman dined at Delmonico's yesterday with the new Collector of the Port, Gen. Merritt, and then went to Fire Island in a revenue cutter."

The following from the Milwaukee Sentinel (Republican) is not exactly in harmony with the views of the Radical leaders:

"The old Grant, the Grant who made the senate ring his only counsel, the Grant who invited political wire-pullers personal friends and relatives to deal in spoils, would be a burden too heavy for the Republican party to carry. If the politicians succeed in nominating him on the platform they have proposed, he will be defeated, as he ought to be, and and the Republican party might as well begin to look around for a convenient grave."

The National Greenbackers of the 12th district met at Fort Wayne on the 10th inst., and nominated John Studebaker, of Bluffton, for Congress. The nominee is a very wealty banker and bond-holder, has always been a Republican of the strictest school, and would no doubt be a valuable acquisition to Shermanism—(if elected.) "Consistency thou art a jewel."

The bill posters of Indiana have organized an association "to promote the business of bill posting throughout the State, to watch over and protect the interests of advertisers, and generally to have a supervision over the interests of bill posters in the State and to devise ways and means for the mutual protection of its members." President,—J. L. West, Logansport; Secretary,—H. S. Mensch, Fort Wayne.

Sixty-four articles have been agreed upon and signed by the Berlin Congress. The treaty of peace is well received by all interested. England, as usual, received the lions share in the division of the spoils.

The temperance lecture, delivered by Mr. Tatum, at the M. E. church last Sabbath evening, was appreciated by the large audience to the tune of 96 cents.

Mr. Jacob Mitchell, of the lower saw mill, is around again, after the severe and nearly fatal scald he received while the steam pipe was blowing off, a few weeks ago.

The County Democratic Central Committee will meet at the COURIER office, at 11 o'clock A. M. next Saturday. All candidates on the county ticket are expected to be present.

Arrangements are being made for a game of base-ball by our home club and the Operas of Pierceton. The game will probably be played at Columbia City.

The Garrett band turned out on Wednesday evening last, and discoursed some very good music. The boys have improved wonderfully within the past few weeks, and play as well as much older bands.—Herald.

There are several very fine telephones already in operation in town which are giving most excellent satisfaction. Mr. L. J. Hopkins is putting them up in good order, and has several orders on hand.

I desire to state to the citizens of Franklin township, that I will be at home to attend to business of the township, on Tuesday of every week, until further orders. 3t.

B. F. GREENWOOD, Trustee.

Look out for your boy to come from Sunday school with another boy's shirt on. An unthoughtful youth is liable to get things mixed sometimes. Cedar Creek is in good stage.

On next Saturday the National Greenback party of DeKalb county, will assemble at the court house for the purpose of placing in the field a county ticket to be voted for at the coming October election.

Last Tuesday was pay-day on the Eel River R. R. Cashier Mason is always promptly on hand with the cash at the appointed time, and the boys along the line are as promtly on hand to receive it.

Sweet Auburn. Sweet, smiling village. Thou once had a charm for us, but all thy charms (and our money) are fled. Please don't quote "The Deserted Village" to the dramatic club, as they have no taste for poetry.—Steuben Republican. Freemont Notes.

The military company, recently organized in Columbia City, very suddenly dissolved when the officer was about to "swear the boys in" for state service; only two were left to tell the tale—of the unconditional surrender of patriotic ambition

Our Butler township correspondent will please bear with our "boiling down" process, as our columns are sometimes crowded and we are compelled to "chop off" some of the items, though they merit publication.

Rev. J. E. Ervin and wife are visiting friends at South Bend and Mishawaka. Next week they expect to visit relatives at Chicago and Evanston, Ill. There will be no services at the M. E. church next Sabbath.

The saloon-keepers of Cincinnati are selling "schooners" of lager beer for five cents. "Schooners" are about twice the size of ordinary beer glasses. We know of an old friend who would like to be in Cincinnati now.

We notice that Geo. M. Crane, Esq., is spoken of as a candidate for Treasurer of the Republicans. Geo. would make a strong candidate, but we would hate to see him "scooped" this fall, the fate of that nominee.

You fellows that know Jake Huffman, engineer on the Eel River road, need have no hesitancy in asking him what time it is. It might be well-enough, however, to be accompanied with a shot gun. Jake, we sympathize with you, but that won't get you a new watch.

We are glad to see that our estimable old friend, F. Picker, is again at his post as target-man at the Junction, having been re-appointed to that position last Monday. Mr. Picker is prompt and attentive and will discharge the duties of that office in a reliable manner.

Tom Mays has retired from the Auburn COURIER and the office passed into the hands of Theodore Reed, of Columbia City, who last week took control of it. Mr. Mays was nominated for county clerk on the democratic ticket and is sanguine of an election. We wish friend Reed success in his new undertaking, knowing full well that the COURIER under his management will be one of the livetist democratic papers in Northern Indiana.—Warsaw Union.

To make a good local paper, says the Steuben Republican, each individual should make it a business to furnish the editor with all the local news that comes under his observation. The editor cannot see and hear everything, and those who see and hear anything worthy of publication, would confer a great favor upon him by telling him, and at the same time very materially assist in making a good paper.

We notice that out door meetings are becoming very popular. Why would it not be a good idea for our churches to hold a mass meeting every Sabbath evening, just as the sun disappears, instead of crowding themselves into hot churches. More people attend out door meetings, and it strikes us it is more in harmony with nature, to praise the great Creator with naught but the clear vault of heaven above.

The "Baby's Best Friend" is the most appropriate title for Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. It is absolutely free from opium, Morphia and other powerful agents, is perfectly safe and reliable under all circumstances, and by allaying the usual stomach and bowel disorders of babyhood keeps the child from fretting and crying, so injurious to itself and annoying to all. Price 25 cents. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

Greenback County Convention.

Notice is hereby given that a greenback mass convention of DeKalb county will be held at

AUBURN, JULY 20th, 1878,

at 10 o'clock, a. m. to select candidates for the various county offices to be filled at the coming election.

J. J. HOOPINGARNER, Sec'y.

Theodore Reed, who has been a resident of Columbia City for many years, has removed to Auburn and taken charge of the COURIER, at that place. Mr. Reed is a fluent writer, possessing fine business qualifications and we recommend him to the citizens of DeKalb county, as a gentleman worthy of their confidence and support. In everything but politics we wish Theodore unbounded prosperity.—Whitley Co. Commercial.

The Boot Upside Down will sell boots and shoes cheaper than ever for the next sixty days. We must have room for our fall goods. We are having made to order for the fall and winter trade the largest and best selected stock of boots and shoes ever brought to this county. Our prices are always below all competitors.

THE BOOT UPSIDE DOWN.
Auburn, Ind.

A nice stranger told the boys in charge of the anvil, on the Fourth, how they could increase the noise they were making, and they let him try it. He placed an old cart wheel boxing on the anvil, filled the boxing with powder, and set another anvil on the boxing, then applied the rod, and it did crack. The boxing burst, and pieces of it flew in every direction. One piece struck the man with the rod, tore his clothes and cut a deep gash in his side. Another went through the front of Fisher's store, another through the front of Crane's grocery, and still another through Straus & Wolf's store. The stranger disappeared.—Butler Record.

Township Trustees.

Each township trustee is required by statute to designate such number of days in each week or month on which they will attend to township business, and to give notice of the particular days upon which, and the place where such business will be attended to, which in most counties is done by keeping a standing notice in some paper published in the county. We call attention to this matter from the fact that we understand the trustees of this county have not been in the habit of giving such notice as the law requires.

Theodore Reed, formerly of Columbia City, made his maiden editorial bow to the people of DeKalb county, through the COURIER, whose editorialship he has now assumed. Mr. Reed is a most excellent gentleman and we are assured will raise the Courier even above its former high standard of a political armor bearer. While the people of Auburn may well feel proud of the enterprising citizen they are drawing into their midst; we have known Mr. R. for a number of years, therefore we know whereof we speak. Friend Theo. except the hand of the Free Press in a shake of hearty congratulations, trusting you may find the editorial chair a delightfully easy one.—Pierceton Free Press.

The Wabash Courier, referring to the new style of dress, says: "It is made to fit the form so closely that two hundred pounds of feminine loveliness may be easily "dressed" in seven yards of goods. To add to the grotesque appearance of the wearer, a sash is lashed around the form, just below the waist, and drawn so tightly that the person thus decked out moves along with as much difficulty as if a heavy ball and chain were fitted to each ankle. A real good style, though, for these hard times and in a country where fig leaves are neither cheap nor plentiful, should be encouraged by all economists.

Montreal, Canada, was the scene of great excitement on the 12th inst., in anticipation of a terrible conflict with the Orangemen. Large crowds of spectators gathered in the streets, an extra police force was organized, military companies were on duty in front of Orange headquarters, the merchants boarded up their windows for protection, military posts were established for the care of wounded, and every precaution taken for the protection of the lives and property of citizens. The Orangemen attempted to form in procession when their leaders were arrested and lodged in jail, which resulted in a postponement of the ceremonies, and the Orangemen were escorted to their homes by the police.

In this issue of the COURIER will be found a call for the Democratic Congressional Convention for this district. The delegates from the several counties composing the district will meet at Kendalville, August 20th. We hope DeKalb will be represented by a full delegation, as matters of importance to the voters of the district will likely be presented for discussion. The following is a list of the delegates from this county:

Butler-tp., Samuel Knott, John Harvey; Keyser-tp., J. R. Skilling, W. Teeters, J. Robbins, J. A. McClure; Jackson-tp., John Cool, S. J. Brandon, J. J. Walters, S. J. Tarney; Concord-tp. S. S. Shutt, J. W. Dills; Newville-tp., B. F. Blair; Stafford-tp., D. B. Bordner; Wilmington-tp., A. Smith, J. W. Bayle, S. Ochs, W. L. Blair, D. Tomlinson, C. Stoy; Auburn precinct, D. D. Moody, S. Kutzner, G. Plum; Richland-tp., L. D. Britton, E. Orr, N. McIntyre, G. I. Patterson; Fairfield-tp., G. W. Downs, A. Deetz, John Potts; Smithfield-tp., G. H. Duncan, J. D. Kelly; Franklin-tp. A. Baxter, A. M. Waterman; Troy-tp., S. Leonard, John Stearns.

Sunstrokes.

Miss Sophia Kessler, on north Main street, was also stricken down on last Sabbath and was seriously ill for some time, but is now improving.

Don Lawrence, while working on the grade to the bridge on Ninth street last Tuesday, prostrated by the heat, and had to be taken home. He became insensible and was dangerously ill, but is now recovering.

Our young friend Al. Harris, formerly an employee of the COURIER office, was prostrated by sunstroke Tuesday of last week, in the harvest field, and for a time was in great danger, but at last accounts was greatly improved.

Legal Notices.

We desire to call attention to the following from the Columbia City Post, concerning legal advertisements. "At the May term, 1877, of the Supreme Court of the State, in the case of Loughridge vs. the city of Huntington a decision was rendered which sets at rest the question of how long legal advertisements must be inserted in a newspaper where the law provides for three weeks publication? In that case the court holds that "publication for three consecutive weeks, means a publication for twenty-one days, and not simply three insertions in a weekly newspaper, which would ordinarily cover a period of but fifteen days." The generally accepted rule throughout the State has been, to publish legal notices requiring three weeks publication, only three times. The decision of the court makes voidable all such notices. Four weeks actual insertion is now required, in order to cover twenty-one days. The holding of the court is important, and should receive prompt attention from officers whose duty it is to give legal notices. The decision referred to will be found on page 260, 56th Indiana Reports."

The same rule applies to legal notices for a longer time, for instance, when the law requires notice to be given for "one month," it is held by good authority that publication must be made for six weeks.

La Otto Items.

—LaOtto is cursed with a liar that "holds over" the father of lies two to one.

—Silas and Chas. Simon, with their hired man, cut 45 acres of wheat in three and one half days. Next.

—Married July 3rd, at the residence of John Hogue, by the Rev. Worth. Wm. Kuntz to Miss Mary Hogue.

—Chris. Zern, of Lebanon, Pa., is visiting with his brother, A. Zern, of this place, whom he has not seen for 35 years.

—Married at Kalamazoo, Mich., July 4th, at the residence of Rev. James Robe. J. B. Gorrell to Mary E. Zern, both of LaOtto.

—The "little pet" has skipped to parts unknown. In the short time she was a resident of LaOtto, she has been the cause of more family "rackets" than 14 Beecher's could have been, and the half is not told.

Spencerville Items.

—J. M. Catill is busy supplying this community with tin ware.

—Dr. Houghton has moved into his new house at the head of Main street.

—George Wise worked too hard in the harvest field. Geo. you had better pound iron.

—Our merchants are having a good run of trade, notwithstanding the busy harvesting season.

—The continued wet weather has been the cause of considerable grumbling among the farmers.

—The barn of Mr. Wm. Provines just east of town, was consumed by fire Tuesday about noon, together with about 200 bushels of corn and a lot of hay. Cause mysterious.

—A letter recently received from a party formerly a resident of this place, and now of Randolph county, West Virginia, says that wheat at that place is worth $2.40 per bushel; oats 75c. and other things correspondingly high.

Butler Township Items.

—Items scarce as harvest hands.

—Considerable harvesting to do yet.

—Dudley and Houser intend starting up their threshing machines the latter part of this week.

—Harvey had to postpone his trial again on account of a boil which he says hinders his taking a seat.

—Mrs. Sturgeons, of Bluffton, came to visit her sister, Mrs. Dr. D. B. Roether last week. She had been here but a short time when she was called home by the sad intelligence that her child had taken very sick and was not expected to live.

—In reply to your inquiry of last week, we will say, we are somewhat afraid of the new editor. He boiled it down so terribly that we plainly see our inability as a correspondent. Left out a portion of one item that we most desired to have published, however we feel no malice, as we want to see the COURIER second to none in the County, and would not ask you to publish any thing for us unworthy of publication.

BEAUDEAUX.

It is said that Budd Doble, the celebrated driver and jockey of the east, has purchased Mollee McCarthy, one of the contestants in the famous running race which recently took place at Louisville, Kentucky.

GREENBACK CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION.

Judge Tousley Nominated.

The Greenback Congressional Convention held at Kendalville yesterday, was well attended, and the assemblage was an intelligent enthusiatic one. A short platform was adopted and the principles affirmed are almost entirely in accord with the Democratic State platform. Nominations being in order, the names of Hon. H. S. Tousley, Col. Wm. C. Williams, Hon. —— Bender and Capt. Fisher were announced, the latter withdrawing on the presentation of his name. At this point a letter was read by Mr. Skilling from Judge Tousley, urging his friends to abstain from the use of his name as a candidate for Congress. Gen. Blair, of Waterloo, took the floor and in an able effort advocated the nomination of Mr. Tousley, believing he was the choice of the people and that the office should seek the man. His speech was frequently applauded, and when he finished Mr. Bender withdrew in a neat speech, followed by Col. Williams who moved to make the nomination of Mr. Tousley by acclamation, which was received with great applause and passed with three cheers.

The following is the light in which the National Greenbackers of the 12th Indiana district view the Toledo platform:

WHEREAS, The platform adopted at the Toledo convention, although it contains some good things, does not lay down the most prominent principles for which we contend:

1. That the United States bonds shall be paid in greenbacks, which Congress shall make a full unlimited legal tender absolute money.

2. That Congress shall never more, under any circumstances, authorize the issue of bonds of any description whatever, it having the right to create money for the payment of all claims against the government.

3. That the bonds be called in, paid, cancelled and burned, immediately on the greenback party assuming control of the government of the United States, thereby stopping the interest on the public debt and the drain of the country.

Therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That we solemnly declare that we will not accept any platform that does not plainly and positively declare that the government shall create an absolute paper money, a legal tender for all dues whatever to and from the government and for all debts public and private.

Experts in the Treasury department at Washington estimate that "there are now two millions of counterfeit coin in circulation, and that the amount is constantly increasing. Besides the process of actual counterfeiting, the tricks of 'sweating' and filling are resorted to. As much as two dollars, says the Scientific American, is stolen from a $20 gold piece. What there is left of the metal is genuine, and the imprint, especially of the sweated piece, remains sharp; after filling the coin is reburnished. Another process is known as 'splitting,' by which as much as $15.50 can be taken from a single $20 gold piece. The two halves are then hollowed out and the hollow filled with an alloy of silver and platinum. The parts are joined together with gold solder. Another process is to bore holes in the edge, fill with silver, cover with gold solder and re-mill. Chinese rogues are accused of sending the coin to China to be thus debased and bringing it back for circulation. The amount of value thus abstracted is from $5 to $7.50 from $20. The counterfeits, pure and simple are almost invaribly below weight. But there is a counterfeit $5 piece which is one of the most dangerous. It is full weight, 129 grains, composed of gold and silver, and yet worth only from $2.70 to 3.40. It is thicker than the genuine."

CORUNNA, July 16, '78.

Quite a serious accident befell one of our citizens last Saturday. Mr. Joseph Williamson and another gentleman by the name of James Roff, from Canton, Ohio, were quietly riding along in a buggy in the outskirts of Kendalville near the lower crossing of th L. S. & M. S. R. R., as a hand car happened to be passing, which frightened their horse, causing it to runaway, and upon turning a corner threw the two gentlemen out with such force as to break both of Mr. Williamson's arms, besides seriously bruising and injuring his body and legs. The other gentleman had one rib broken, besides being badly injured and bruised in various places.

Will Accept.

As the day set for the Republican County Convention draws near, here and there is a man bobbing up willing to be sacrificed for his party's good. The number of aspirants for place on the Republican ticket is daily increasing, and lively times are anticipated. As far as we can learn the following have been entered for the race:

Representative.—So far no one is prominently mentioned for Representative, though a head rises above the water now and then, yells out Billy Meese, and disappears again.

Clerk.—As yet the present incumbent, Geo. H. K. Moss, seems to have the field all to himself.

Auditor.—The names of Isaac Hague, Albert Robbins and J. A. Shull, of Waterloo, will be presented.

Treasurer.—The following gentlemen are mentioned in connection with this office: J. A. Provines, of Spencerville, W. P. Andrews, of Concord, Chas. Beugnot, of Auburn, Wm. Henderson, of Concord, John Buchanan, of Fairfield and Geo. M. Crane, of Richland.

Sheriff.—Here's a whole regiment: H. T. Smith, Henry Willis and A. S. Leas, of Waterloo, Philip Noel, Wm. Faegler, of Jackson, G. B. Van Fleet, of Smithfield, Wm. Kennedy and Henry Knott.

A Silly Campaign Document.

[Washington Special to the Baltimore Sun].

A very silly paragraph sent from here by a correspondent of a Cincinnati paper as to what the Democrats will do if they get control of the government, has been given undeserved circulation in the press of the country. The statement is as follows: "It is undoubtedly the fixed purpose of the Democrats, if they obtain control of the government, to place ex-rebels on the pension rolls, admit them to the national military asylums, and in all respects put them on an equality with union veterans." It is only necessary to meet this malicious paragraph with the following citation from section 4 of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution to show its utter absurdity: "But neither the United States nor any state shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States." It is possible that the gentleman who wrote the paragraph referred to, did not know of this provision in the constitution, or in his haste to make partisan capital forgot it.

The campaign key-note sounded by Ben. Harrison, the Republican leader in Indiana, is being echoed by all the Republican newspapers throughout the state. The gulf between the radical party and the greenback movement, is widening with wonderful rapidity.—Each Republican paper is trying to excel in traducing and vilifying the National Greenback party. Why? Because the financial doctrine advocated by that party is detrimental to the interests of Sherman's bankrupting policy; because thousands of Republicans have become disgusted with their party leaders, and being prejudiced against the word Democrat, rather than the principles of the Democratic party, they seek a home in some new political organization, advocating measures as near Democratic as possible. Is it any wonder that Benny, THE HARRISON, is so bitter against "fiat" money and "idiotic" greenbackers, when he sees the radical ship sinking with its cargo of fraud and corruption without the least hope of saving the wreck?

Slight Objection to Thurman.

Senator Thurman has at last got the Democracy of Ohio united in his support, and it is supposed that he will be formidable as an aspirant for the Presidential nomination of his party in 1880. Mr. Thurman is a man of talent and character. In the Greeley campaign he made a speech which reminded us of Daniel Webster in his great days. Mr. Thurman would make a fair President, as things go; but he promoted the appointment of the unconstitutional Electoral Commission in 1877. The next Democratic candidate for President should be a man who believes in the Constitution of the United States and knows no other law of political action.—New York Sun.

The last clause in the above article means Hendricks, the popular statesman who was swindled out of the position to which he was elected in 1876 through the cowardice of the Little Squirt whose name stood at the head of the ticket.

TOWN TALK.

The Star sells a fine unlaundried, all-linen bosom and cuff shirt for 75c that sells all over the town for $1.00.

Other clothing men keep pacing up and down in front of the Star Clothing House, and wonder "how" the thing is done.

"They can't sell at such and such a price. It's mere talk," etc. Still our people get convinced on visiting the Star.

Brother clothiers engage men to buy up our cheap suits for them; still they say we are not offering bargains.

We again assert that we sell not sell our goods to merchants; our customers shall derive all the advantages of low prices.

Our sales in two days were $2,300.00.

"THERE IS BLOOD ON THE MOON."

BY GUY H. AVERY.

[It was believed by the ancients that blood spots appeared on the moon before war.]

There is blood on the moon!
Will it pass away soon?
Dread portents are rife
Of battle and strife.
For the ospreys of war
Are leaving their nest
In the Isles of the West
And swarming afar
To the gates of the Czar.
Oh! come they in peace
To the islands of Greece?
Bring they famine or feast
As they sail to the East?

There is blood on the moon!
Will it pass away soon?
Jackals are howling;
Gray wolves are prowling,
Patiently watching the sea,
Where dark feluccas are riding
And silently biding;
Dread monsters of war,
Black shadows of Thor,
Grim-visaged and stern
And armor-environed
In their corslets of mail
They ride on the gale;
Are they Paynim invaders,
Or Christian crusaders,
Or peaceful sea traders
As they sail to the East,
Past burning Stromboli
To the marts of Stamboul?

There is blood on the moon!
May it pass away soon!
For mothers are wailing,
Old forms are quailing,
Young cheeks are paling
In darkness and gloom;
Terror is falling,
Dim clouds are palling,
Foreshadowing doom,
For the Ospreys of war
Are leaving their nest
In the Isles of the West,
And swarming afar
To the gates of the Czar;
Bring they famine or feast
As they sail to the East?

Astronomer, what
Of this lurid red spot
On the face of the moon!
Will it pass away soon?

TAKEN BY SURPRISE.

A Pretty Little Love Story.

"It seems good, after all—now, don't it, Patty?—to have the house lighted up agin, though it's made a deal of work and a considerable fuss and trouble for just a day. But folks will have their whims; and it isn't often my folks is whimsical, so I don't complain, and I know you don't, Patty."

"No, Mrs. Dobson," said good-natured Patty; "I'm willin' to work, and I take pride in fixin' up for Miss Dolly; it's her party, you know. And Jacques tells me all the young ladies is to bring their own pardners. There'll be a sleigh-ride to-morrow morning, for they do say there never was such sleighing as there be this year; and in the evening the German. And what time is the supper to-night, Mrs. Dobson?"

"Half-past 10," replied the housekeeper; "and here it is a quarter to 9, and the train due at half-past. Well, they'll have a good supper; not but that we could have done without that French cook sent with Jacques, for I don't hold to French cookery, and never shall; it's my idee that frogs and crokkits and mymiece is del'terious to Americans that was brought up on the Mayflower, and baked beans, and good stiff pumpkin pie. And they'll have an appetite for it, ridin' across the cold hills through the drivin' wind in that great strawride sledge of Gaffer's—the only thing that could be pitched upon to hold sixteen; and there's sixteen comin', all told."

"Dear me!" said Patty. "And I wonder who Miss Dolly's pardner is? If it's that pretty, curly-headed Mr. Ned Berton, I don't blame her for goin' agin Mrs. Derwent a little. Now what does make Mrs. Derwent hate Mr. Ned?—and she do hate him in dead earnest."

"I can tell you," said Mrs. Dobson; "'tis because she has got another husband in her eye for Miss Dolly. But, if she has, what bizness is't of mine? What bizness is't of your's, Patty? You ought to know better than be meddling with the affairs of your betters—a young thing like you."

Whereupon the gossips parted, Mrs. Dobson to go down stairs and watch the salad-dressing—in which even to her satisfaction the French cook played the prescribed third part of "a madman to stir it up"—and Patty to go up stairs for a last look at Miss Dolly's room, which was all in order, and "like a baby house," so Patty thought, "for cunnin' things."

A real girl's room it was, though Dolly was a young lady grown, 18 her last birthday, and "out" this winter. As Patty flitted around the room, feather duster in hand, and lingered fondly at the "duchesse," as Mrs. Derwent called the lace-draped toilette whose mirror was bestuck with cards and photographs, a card dropped from somewhere and lighted upon the blue pin-cushion. Patty lifted it, somewhat troubled, for she had been ordered not to touch the mirror, and she knew by one transgression of that order that if the array came tumbling down like a card house there was no putting it up again to cheat Miss Dolly.

She looked at the memento ruefully. It was a large card, with a gray crest in the corner and a few written lines. She turned it over. On that side, too, there was writing, but in different-colored ink, and much finer. Patty could not read handwriting, but she said to herself, "This card is Miss Dolly's; shall I try to put it back in the mirror, and perhaps push down the others, or perhaps put it in the wrong place, so Miss Dolly will know I have been touching it? No; I'll just stand it up, this way, with the crest side outward, right in front of the pin-cushion, and she'll see it and know it's her'n."

Then Patty took her last look at the pet room, and turned down the lights, and shut the door, and went, with less enthusiasm, through the other guest-chambers. And before long the great sledge, with its six horses and its hundred bells and its merry people, came rushing and jingling and singing and shouting up to the door. And supper was ready, and the young people just flew to their rooms to drop their wraps. And then at the last moment it was discovered that there were seventeen guests instead of the sixteen provided for; and Miss Dolly—beautiful Miss Dolly, with her eyes shining as bright as stars, and her silken yellow hair fluffing up around her forehead and falling in glittering streams upon her fur-lined cloak that she tossed back like white wings, until she looked like an angel in a picture, only more so—stood in the passage and said: "Well, then, Patty, give some one my room, and I will go with Cousin Emily." And Patty, with a natural instinct of attraction for the "pretty curly-headed Mr. Ned Berton," went straight to him first, and said: "Would you please, sir, take Miss Dolly's room? and I'll show you the way." And Mr. Ned Berton, without uttering a word, but looking, as Patty said afterward, "just caught up and fluttered," did as he was bid.

Then there was supper; and by the time the clock struck 12 good-nights were said, and the guests were all locked in their chambers to seek the slumber that should make them quite fresh for the delightful morrow.

And at midnight Ned Berton, in a sort of awe, stood in Dolly's room, with his hand upon his heart, looking about him, and saying, beneath his breath, "This is hers, then, and given to me! I am glad no other fellow has it. I believe I would knock down any other fellow who had this room, who dared to sleep in it, or who dared to take a long look at it. Dolly, my darling angel! I hardly dare to sleep in it myself, it is so sacred—I suppose she fixes her hair there;" he glanced at the blue and white toilet. "And I suppose she kneels down and says her prayers here;" he not only glanced at but kissed the blue and white coverlet. Dolly was Ned's first love, and he adored her. "I don't think I shall sleep to-night, or, if I do, 'twill be to dream of her, like one who looks on life when he is dying; for I know very well—and surely to-night I have better reason to know it than ever—my love is hopeless—What is this? My card?" His eye had caught the crested card set against the pin-cushion. He approached and read it without lifting it, recognizing his own handwriting. "Ah!" he sighed, "I remember the day I gave that to Dolly, more than a year ago—yes, for it was at Christmas time, and now it is February. I slipped it into her hand as she passed through the hall, at the Damois breakfast, with that detestable Eustace Hurd. I saw her blush quickly before she took it. How well she knew I had something for her! I believe Dolly and I could make each other understand anything without a word or whisper. 'A word to the wise,' they say, 'is sufficient;' a look is enough to the loving. And what eyes she has! Well, I must forget them; I must learn to forget them. But not to-night—not to-night, Dolly."

He took up the card and mechanically turned it over. "N. B.," and a few lines of handwriting. He paused at "N. B." "Her writing, and my initials, as she names me—Ned, Ned Berton. It must be for me. She knows that I am here. What else, then, could the card—my card—be here for? 'N. B.'—to any other eyes, and, in case of accident, simply nota bene; but to me—ah, I will note well, my angel! 'N. B.—Ask mamma to-night, and if she says no, ask papa; and if he says no, make him say yes. To-night, without delay. Feb. 10.' "'Feb. 10.'—that's to-morrow. 'Ask mamma.' Oh, Dolly, can you mean it? Your command is law; but Mrs. Derwent will say no. That is a foregone conclusion, since I have no prospects—no immediate prospects at least—and here's Eustace Hurd worth half a million. There's no hope for me there. 'Then ask papa; and if he says no, make him say yes.' Can I make him? What shall I say to make him? What arguments can I bring to bear upon this intelligent, kindly, but thorough 'man of the world,' in this age of high living, when sentiment rates at so little and money rates at so much, to show myself, a young lawyer with an income of barely three thousand a year, a just rival, in a claim for the hand of Dolly Derwent, of Eustace Hurd, worth half a million? What arguments can I use? Or, in default of argument, how shall I express myself to reach his heart?—for I suppose that under all his jovial worldliness he has a heart. Let me think."

And he thought. Alone there in Dolly's room, with the light lowered to a spark, sitting in the arm-chair, with his head leaning upon his hand and his eyes downcast, he thought. The wind that had arisen with the sunset died down; its wild sobbing across the hills and in the tree-tops ceased; rain fell, then a sharp, fine sleet beat against the window-panes; that too ceased. The little porcelain clock upon the mantel struck half-past 4, and still Ned Berton thought. At last dim daylight glimmered on the walls, and then, wearied to the soul, he flung himself upon the sofa and fell asleep.

Some one awoke him late. He was the last one at the breakfast-table, and the sleighs—eight dashing large cutters, with "just room for two"—were at the door. The eighth had been procured with some difficulty; but this Ned Berton was not to know; politeness would not inform him that he was the odd one of the party, the seventeenth, who had not been provided for, having been invited by Mr. Derwent, on the supposition that "of course Ned was included" a supposition which Mr. D. learned emphatically, afterward, had not been founded upon fact.

Mrs. Derwent, however, not to be remiss as hostess, made the best of an embarrassing blunder, and, in spite of her plan that only the young people, seven couples, should enjoy the sleighing, and, in spite of her antipathy to that diversion, and her unconquerable fear of horses, which even the sober grays of her park phaeton could not render calm, heroically ordered the cutter.

She came and rested her plump little jeweled hand with matronly ease upon Ned's shoulder, as at the now-deserted breakfast-table he bent over his plate in abstracted mood, trying to swallow his hot roll and coffee, and said, genially, "So, Ned, I am to go with you. But only on one condition—that you will promise not to run away with me."

Ned withdrew himself from his soul's preoccupation just sufficiently to jerk down a last mouthful and say, with rather confused gallantry, "I cannot promise for myself, Mrs. Derwent; but I will promise that no unappreciative animal, no 'untamed fiery steed,' shall run away with you."

"Then come," said she, gayly, "for they are all going or gone. Why, Ned, you have eaten nothing. Won't you have another cup of coffee? No? Well, we shall lunch sumptuously at the 'Blue Globe;' they have been two weeks preparing for us. That will be dejeuner for you. Where is Dolly?"

Ah, Dolly! There she stood on the door-step by the side of Eustace Hurd, wrapped tight in her fur cloak, ready for departure, and her sweet, warm face—not hooded enough to hide its golden halo—turned wistfully backward. "Good-by, mamma," she cried; and then she saw Ned, and the sweet face changed—turned pale for the instant, Ned thought, if such a thing could happen that a rose-bud should turn pale. She gave him just a look, scarcely a smile. He felt his heart's wild beating under her appealing look.

Such a morning as that morning was!—one of those miracles of mornings when the white mantel of the snow makes the world like a new-born planet; when nature shows herself in all her artistic renderings a sculptor more than a painter, exclaiming, for the moment, like the passionate angel of the palette, "Form is everything; the outline is the picture." The sleet had polished the trees, and the scene was not only molded against the horizon in bold and chiseled contour, but every detail of foreground, every stone and fence and leafless bush, and every mile of perspective, every farm-house and grove and over-branching forest, was as if cut in crystal or in marble, decisive and pure and delicately hewn in matchless marvel of curve and tracery. A white new world.

To Ned Berton, with one thought in heart and brain and imagination, this wealth of beauty was as naught. And Mrs. Derwent certainly had no expression of admiration on her countenance as she said, spasmodically, "This is really"—with an alarmed glance at the horse's ears—"the best—isn't it, Ned?"—with a terrified gasp as the sleigh lurched and darted forward—"sleighing that we"—and an impetuous movement of her hand out of her muff—"we have had"—and an uncontrollable clutch at Ned's arm—"in years."

"Splendid!" said Ned, gloomily. "Glorious!" said Ned, savagely. "Oh, how I wish," he thought, "that I could get hold of Eustace Hurd's coat collar! He would be tossed into that snow-bank before he knew it; how does he dare to bend his head so close to Dolly? There! now they have turned the corner; they will be out of sight." "Whoa, Charlie! hi, Charlie!" to the horse, which exhibited decided signs of uneasiness, developing presently into vicious restiveness, the unruly beast now leaping frantically onward, now shying at a shadow, and now with uprearing hind legs bespattering the occupants of the sleigh with bits of ice and snow-dust. Mrs. Derwent nearly fainted, and then "came to;" and Ned Berton nearly swore, as the sleigh in front exasperated him with its silhouette of a tender couple, and then recovered himself with a consideration of pity for his really suffering companion, and with—faith in Dolly.

So they proceeded, having some intervals of smooth going and conversation between long spells of harassing irregularity in the conduct of the horse, and of stinging jealousy to Ned, and of unfeigned terror on the part of Mrs. Derwent, until, after a distressing sleigh-ride of two hours, they came to the "Blue Globe;" and Mrs. Derwent, immediately after alighting, rushed to Dolly and said, "My dear, I cannot possibly go back with him. My nerves will be shattered. You will have to, for you are not afraid of anything, my darling. I will go home with Eustace Hurd; you must go with Ned. Only"—with sudden caution—"you must promise that you will not speak a word or let him speak a word, beyond commonplace."

And Dolly, only too glad on any terms to return with her dear lover, promised faithfully; whereupon Mrs. Derwent's terror subsided. The young people had a dance in the rustic ball-room of the "Blue Globe," and then lunch; and by 4 o'clock the sleighs were ordered for home, and Mrs. Derwent went with Eustace Hurd. And Dolly—silent, blissful Dolly—was tucked rapturously into the cutter with Ned. Off and away again!

The afternoon was superb. Even Ned, who had been blind all the morning, appreciated the beauty now. The sun shone as it never shone before; the sky was like a sapphire; the icicles melted and dropped in a million diamonds; the shadows of the fir-trees on the burnished snow were blue as the blue of the Grotta Azzurro. The little snow-birds hopped tamely by the roadside, and chirped musically. And the horse—going home—was as gentle as a lamb; Ned was able to drive him with one hand, and so find place for the other hand under the sleigh-robe close to Dolly's.

Faithful to her promise to keep the talk perfectly commonplace, whenever Ned approached any topic deeply interesting, Dolly interposed with a light remark or laughing jest, until at last Ned became desperate, and cried, "Oh, Dolly, will you not listen to a word that is earnest? May I not speak to you one moment of that?"

And then she answered, quite seriously, even sadly: "Not for the world of that, dear Ned. Not to-day. To-morrow, perhaps; if there is such a thing as to-morrow for me, when I only wish that to-day—just as it is now, I mean—could last forever! To-morrow, perhaps, you may speak of that; not before, as you love me, Ned."

"Then you are not hopeful?" sighed Ned.

"Hopeful? Oh, no, no; so far from hopeful! But, oh, Ned, hush!" He felt, under the sleigh-robe, her little hand's quick pressure of his. "Let us just be happy this beautiful day, that seems to rub out everything that is dark and gloomy with its white-gloved hand. I love these blue and white winter days. Every one loves contrast, you know; and, Ned, the colors of my life are not these light, gentle colors just now."

That evening, when Dolly was dressed for the German in her delicate gown of pink gauze and her wreath of blush-roses, two notes were brought to her almost simultaneously; one on a silver salver by Jacques, who was dismissed immediately, and the other produced with some perturbation from an apron-pocket by Patty, who devoutly lingered.

Dolly had just reached the landing of the upper staircase, on her way down to the drawing-room, when these messages reached her, and she stood in the arch of the stained-glass window—where Patty hastened to light the bracket-lamp—and read them both. The first on lavender-tinted paper, with a monogram tri-colored, was from Eustace Hurd:

DEAR MISS DERWENT: At last I have the permission of your mother to say to you a few words that I have long wished to say, and that have only been suppressed, in consideration for your youth and inexperience, until this hour. Will you grant me the indulgent favor to come into the library for a moment before the dance?

Your devoted EUSTACE HURD.

The other note—on papa's business paper—was from Ned Berton:

MY DARLING ANGEL: I have done exactly as you told me—at least in regard to your father. A thousand blessings on that inspiring little card, which I have worn upon my heart all day. Oh, Dolly! but for your divine courage I should have yielded to despair.

Your father has given me permission to address you. Meet me one moment, dearest, before the dance in the library, just to let me look at you and kiss your hand. I promise not to say a word of that till to-morrow.

Your own NED.

"Miss Dolly just turned white and red, like a 4-o'clock posy," said Patty, describing the scene afterward. "And then when she thought I didn't see, she kissed Mr. Ned's note, and she said to herself like, 'But what can he mean about the card—the inspiring little card? I don't understand this.' And then I said, 'Oh, Miss Dolly, do send some answer quick to Mr. Ned, for he's walking up and down the piazza this freezing night without an overcoat.' And she says, 'Go tell him I will.' And I ran mighty quick—for Mr. Ned may thank me that he did not catch his death of cold—and told him what she said, and he cried out, 'Bless you, Patty! you are a good girl, Patty.' And he gave me—but I didn't do it for that. And my! ain't he a hearty young gentleman? and just the one for Miss Dolly!"

"What can he mean about the card?" thought Dolly again, as, so absorbed in Ned's surprising note that she quite forgot the other, she went musingly down stairs.

For in fact the card was a simple memorandum made a year ago. But not until months after the present pregnant February 10, to which it proved such an exciting precipitator, did Ned Berton know that the writing had been made upon the white surface, oblivious of the other side of the crested card, by his impulsive little lady-love one day when, with her most intimate girl-friend as witness, and with her own written terms to serve for solemnity, like a sworn signature, she determined to ask her mother, and, in case of denial there, to coax her indulgent father, for "a black silk gown with train, and trimmed with Chantilly, like Miss Austen's"—a style of costume already pronounced "too old" for a school-girl. Could it be possible that fate in caprice destined this girlish demand to be answered not by "a black silk," but by a pearl-white wedding-gown? Time alone could tell.

Flushed and radiant, and with but one thought in her heart, Dolly glided down the stairs and entered the library. But she recoiled with astonishment when Mr. Hurd, alert with expectation, stepped briskly forward, and, lifting her hand to his lips, kissed the finger-tips devotionally.

Ned Berton, at this instant entering the door behind Dolly, saw the complacent face of his rival, and his assurance in the little act of gallantry. Springing forward, he laid his hand authoritatively and possessively upon Dolly's shoulder. Mr. Hurd drew himself erect, and his inquiring stare changed to undisguised animosity as he encountered Ned's blazing eyes.

"What does this mean, sir?" he demanded.

"It means that Miss Derwent came here to see me," said Ned.

"You are mistaken, sir," answered Eustace Hurd, haughtily. "Miss Derwent came here in response to my solicitation."

The men's voices were loud and angry. Mrs. Derwent, who in an adjoining room awaited with fluttering anxiety the result of the interview which she believed would consummate the "brilliant match" long held in contemplation, and for which she had used all her motherly influence to inspire Dolly with a sense of its advantages, could not possibly restrain her impatience and her indignant concern at this violent interruption. She came into the library, and caught Dolly's hand to withdraw her from the hold of her youthful lover.

"Mr. Berton," she said, angrily, "how dare you infringe upon the rights of hospitality so far as to annoy my daughter?"

As she spoke she felt a strong, commanding hand laid upon her shoulder; she turned, and saw her husband. Mr. Derwent, who had been pacing up and down the hall in an unusual disturbance of mental equanimity, had also heard the angry voice, and hastened into the library.

"My dear," he said to his wife, "Ned is authorized to do so."

"Authorized? By whom?" asked Mrs. Derwent.

"Surely, sir," interposed Mr. Hurd, "you do not mean to repudiate your wife's responsibility in this matter? I presumed that you were one—presumed so not only from the admirable harmony of your lives, but from the very nature of the case. I presume that your united judgment has, of course——"

"What do you mean, sir?" said Mr. Derwent.

"What do you mean, father dear?" asked Mrs. Derwent, recovering herself, and pushing Dolly away, who had rushed to her father and clung confidingly to his arm. "What is the meaning of this unhappy contretemps, my love?"

"Simply this," answered Mr. Derwent. "A young man, a dear boy whom I have known since he was a baby, a worthy, true-hearted fellow, I sincerely believe, the son of my college chum and my friend of a life-time, came to me an hour ago, and pleaded his case like a rising young lawyer as he is, and a rousing warm-hearted youngster—pleaded his claims to be allowed to win Dolly. That was your expression, wasn't it, Ned?—to win Dolly?"

"Yes, sir," said Dolly's lover, who stood apart, with his arms folded, his head erect, and his fine eyes blazing like "live coals from the altar"—perfectly majestic. So poor little Dolly, shrinking and trembling, and venturing but one glance, thought to her heart's core—thought that moment and forever.

"Very well, then," continued Mr. Derwent, "I gave my consent to Ned to go in and win her."

"And I—I—" faltered Mrs. Derwent. "This is exceedingly strange, exceedingly unfortunate. I have just given my consent to Mr. Hurd, whom I esteem so highly—whom we both esteem so highly—to address my daughter."

Some comical side of the affair must have touched Mr. Derwent, for he laughed at this; not his bright, wholesouled laugh exactly, but just a laugh to clear his throat sufficiently to say, kindly:

"Ah, well! So I perceive we are all in trouble. Dolly, my dear, I don't see how anyone but your own self can get us out of this trouble. Here are two gentlemen, both exceedingly estimable, one already approved by your mother, and one—one somewhat rather leniently regarded. The truth is, Dolly, I courted your mother when I was hardly more than a boy—a penniless boy, too—and I have never repented of my rashness; it has been my happiness and my fortune—yes, my fortune, young men! Two suitors, Dolly; one, I say, rather leniently—for sympathy perhaps, or for 'auld lang syne' maybe, for his father was my college chum—rather leniently regarded by your father. Both lovers of yours, my child; and I don't wonder at that, little Doll; both honorably offering you heart and hand. I see nothing now to be done except that you should choose between them."

Then every one in the room—Eustace Hurd, Mrs. Derwent, Mr. Derwent and Ned—majestic Ned—looked straight at Dolly.

Dolly, having been pushed away from her father's sustaining arm by her mother, had dropped, wretched and half fainting, upon the sofa. But she arose now, and stood for a moment with her little hands clasped against her girlish bosom—beating, indeed, now with a womanish impetuosity—and her little feet misgiving her, so that she felt herself tottering, and her face paling, paling, and her eyes downcast. And then suddenly, with a flash to cheek and lip of vital carmine, and a thrill to her finger-tips, so strong that it extended her hands cordially, and an instinct of faith that nerved her to composure and dignity and queenliness, so far as it was possible for an angel-like, child-like creature like Dolly to show queenliness, she advanced a step or two, and raised her eyes, and said, with a charming directness, in voice low-toned but so penetrating with the intensity of a youthful life-time and the earnestness of an eternal promise that it haunted evermore those who heard it, "Ned—you have taken me—by surprise."—Harper's Weekly.

Progress in Hard Times.

Notwithstanding the times, it is doubtful if the country ever made greater or more rapid progress in substantial wealth than during the past seven years. From a comparison of the statistics of the census of 1870 with those furnished by the Bureau of Agriculture for 1877, it appears that there were 31,000,000 more acres of land under cultivation last year then in 1870, an increase of 34 per cent. The percentage of increase in the number of bushels of corn produced was 22½; of wheat, 52; of rye, 42; of barley, 35; in tons of hay, 34; and in pounds of tobacco, 91 per cent. The increase reported in live stock over the aggregate of 1870 was, horses, 44 per cent; mules, 45; cows, 26; oxen and other cattle, 29; sheep, 25½; swine, 28 per cent. The aggregate increase in the number of live animals amounted to about 25,000,000 head. The excess of the grain crop of 1877 over that of 1870 was nearly 550,000,000 bushels. Our exports for the year ending June 30, 1877, exclusive of gold and silver, amounted to $632,980,080.—Scientific American.

Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson, as he appears in these days, is pleasantly described by a writer in the Herald, of Boston. His spare features are sharply outlined, his thin gray hair straggles over his head, his clear eye twinkles with every amusing utterance, his air is that of a student, an inquirer. He has a frank cordiality which is charming; he listens to you as if you were teaching him, not he you, and you forget that you are in the presence of our first American writer, and talk out your thought as to your own brother. Mr. Emerson is quoted as saying that he "had written nothing for several years"—his "work was done."

Alas! Too True.

Flattery, flattery, and always flattery, is the true motto for the heaven-born statesman who holds, and holds rightly, that ascendency in the social empyrean is a necessary condition of political sway. There is but one way for acquiring power with individuals, whether they are men or women; assail persistently their weak points, carry those points victoriously, and imbue them with the delusion that their weak points are their strong ones.—London World.

MARQUIS ANTINORI, at the head of an exploring expedition in Equatorial Africa, writes to his brother from Mahak Nonza, in the Kingdom of Shoa: "I am very happily residing among this raw-flesh eating people. TO MAKE a white foot or a star in a horse's forehead—Take pickled mackerel and confine it on, in any shape you please three or four days repeating, and it will produce a white foot or a white spot. Rub the white saddle spots on a horse's back a few times daily in the spring of the year, before the coat is shed, with bacon grease, and it will restore the natural color.

JOHN AND THE SQUIRE.

I am only a farmer's girl,
John is only a farmer's lad,
But somehow, when we chance to meet,
The very sound of his coming feet
Can make my heart so glad
That up to my cheek the warm blood flies,
And he reads his welcome in my eyes.

I am only a farmer's girl,
Master Tom is the Squire's son,
But, strange to tell, his feet this way
Turn often toward the close of day,
After the chores are done,
When John (he passes the meadow gate)
Gives me a scowl, and—will not wait.

I am only a farmer's girl,
So what can the Squire want of me?
My heart is John's; John knows it well
But it isn't for me the truth to tell—
So bashful a lad is he!
So the Squire may come and the Squire may go,
But all the answer he'll get is "No!"

The Squire praises my hair and eyes;
The Squire says I'm a lady born.
What care I for his foolish speech?
'Tis John's voice only my heart can reach
[illegible]
But John is jealous, the foolish boy,
And my days are shorn of half their joy.

Oh, I am only a farmer's girl,
And John is only a farmer's lad,
But I'd rather be his in humble life
Than be a "lady" as Squire's wife,
With a restless heart and sad!
But John—so bashful a boy is he!—
Is a long while asking my heart of me.

Do You Diet?

"Do you diet much this warm weather?" asked a friend of old Fuzbuz, as he took off his hat and mopped his brow the other day.

"Dye it! Dye it!" answered Fuzbuz, running his hand through his hair, and looking at his fingers; "what do you mean, sir?"

"Why, you look good and hearty, and as for color"—

"Color, color! What is it to you, sir, whether I dye my hair or not? Hang it, sir, if I had such an infernal-looking red head as you've got, I'd dye it sky blue."

"Look here, old Fuzzy, what in thunder are you talking about? I asked you if you dieted, seeing that you were complaining of dyspepsia the other day, and you begin to rave about hair-dye."

A FRENCH agricultural paper announces the discovery of an extremely simple and cheap means to protect houses from being struck by lightning. This consists merely of bundles of straw attached to sticks or broom handles, and placed on the roofs of houses in an upright position. The first trials of the simple apparatus were made at Tarbes (Hautes Pyrenees), by some intelligent agriculturists, and results were so satisfactory that soon after eighteen communes of the Tarbes district provided all their houses with these bundles of straw, and there have been no accidents from lightning since.

SABBATH READING.

"Would to God."

Would that my master could but see
The Prophet of the Lord; for he
Would heal him of his leprosy!"
So spake the little captive maid
Unto her mistress, half afraid,
And so to-day speak we.

"Would that my child," so prays her sire,
"My child—the child of my desire—
But felt God's love, or feared His ire!
Life, with its sins, fast from her throbs,
And the end thereof"—the old man sobs—
"The end thereof is fire."

"Would," saith a wife, "my husband could
Amid life's hunger, have the food—
Amid life's fever, the calm mood—
Which come to them that love His name
Who bore dishonor for their fame,
And evil for their good!"

"O, would to God my brother knew,"
His sister saith, "what fair flowers grew
In God's dear garden, and he too
Would come and gather them all day,
And we would wander in the way
Where walk the happy few."

One to another thus they speak,
Or murmur out of hearts that break.
Nay, lift your heads; the thing ye seek
Is nigher to you than you dream;
Look up—lo, there is Jordan's stream,
And there the Prophet meek!

The Pathos of the Bible.

An ancient legend has it that a tyrant of the East went forth to battle with the Greeks. Gazing upon the mass of living millions enlisted in his cause, the monarch's heart was melted. He wept, he knew not why. The tears came not, as he supposed, from any inference of reflection. They rose spontaneously as they will at times amid the bustle of a crowded thoroughfare. Our own emotions are reflected back from other hearts. We feel the thrill of spiritual contact, the mighty presence of life. Such is the pathos of the Bible, the underlying tenderness which makes the Book of books the book of human nature; sounding the depths of human sympathy, universal, indefinable, profound.

Poetry and pathos in the Bible are subordinate. It never controverts its sacred office, nor makes effect a purpose. The tender and poetical are humble instruments to seal the truth upon the consciences of men. The child who cannot comprehend the love divine is melted as he hears from mother-lips the sweet story of Him who was Himself a babe at Bethlehem, who loved and blessed the little children. The man who, scarcely better than the child, can know the wonders of the same inexplicable love, is impressed by the simplicity and tenderness which mark that strange, eventful life.—Prize Oration, by Howard P. Ells.

Two Good Illustrations.

The Catholic Review publishes some "Five Minute Sermons," by the Paulist Fathers. Last week it had one on "Let every man be swift to hear, but slow to speak." The preacher made use of these illustrations:

A story is told of a crazy man who, in some very lucid interval, asked a friend if he could tell the difference between himself and the people who were considered to be of sound mind. His friend, curious to see what he would say, said, "No, what is it?" "Well," said the crazy man, "it is that I say all that comes into my head, while you other people keep most of it to yourselves."

My friends, I am afraid that the crazy man was about right, but he was too complimentary in his judgment of others. By this rule there would be a great many people in the asylums who are now at large. Really, it seems as if it never occurred to some persons, who are supposed to be in their right minds, whether their thoughts had better be given to the world or not. Out they must come, no matter whether wise or foolish, good or bad.

Yes, the madman, for once in his life, was pretty nearly right. One who talks without consideration, who says everything that comes into his or her head, is about as much a lunatic as those who are commonly called so. For such will have one day to give an account for all their foolish and inconsiderate words, long after they themselves have forgotten them. And to carelessly run up this account is a very crazy thing.

A little instrument has lately been invented, as you no doubt have heard, which will take down everything you say. It is called the phonograph. It makes little marks on a sheet of tinfoil, and by means of these it will repeat for you all you have said, though it may have quite passed out of your own mind. There are a great many uses to which this little instrument may be put; but I think that one of the best would be to make people more careful of what they say. They would think before they spoke, if a phonograph was around. Few people would like to have a record kept of their talk, ready to be turned off at a moment's notice. It would sound rather silly, if no worse, when it was a day or two old.

Perhaps the phonograph will never be used in this way, but there is a record of all your words on something more durable than a sheet of tinfoil. This record is in the book from which you will be judged at the last day. Our Lord has told us at that day we shall have not only to hear, but to give an account for all the idle words spoken in our lives.—Baptist Weekly.

"Under Fire."

The first time that a soldier goes into action he fancies the shot that he hears whizzing through the air is aimed at him. But, if he is not hit at first, he soon acquires a sort of fatalistic feeling that he never will be. The eve of a battle might be supposed to be a solemn moment. I have been at several eves, and I never perceived the vestige of solemnity, nor—so far as I could perceive—did it strike any one that the next day he might be killed. The thoughts of every one were concentrated first on supper, and then on finding a comparatively comfortable place in which to sleep. During a battle all not immediately engaged are simply bored. If ever a hand-to-hand fight takes place it is due to some bungler being in command on one side or the other. Most of the regiments engaged do not see the enemy. Attacking in column and bayonet charges are things of the past. Shells and bullets are fired into a position or upon troops advancing. The victory is decided by artillery and breech-loader firing. Those who can concentrate the heaviest fire upon particular strategical points win. So mechanical is the whole affair that it is an admitted axiom that, if one-third of the best regiment in the world can be put hors de combat, the remainder will execute a strategical maneuvre to the rear.—Labouchere, in London Truth.

Drunkenness in England.

A London letter to the Hartford Churchman says:

"But there is a deadlier foe to British interests than the most fiery Turkophil, would represent Russian policy to be—a foe much nearer home and without a power to disguise its assaults upon the very existence of the nation. I mean the demon of drunkenness. My language is not too strong, for it is no stronger than that which the best men of the country feel it now their duty to use upon the subject. Last Sunday Canon Farrar delivered the annual sermon in Westminster Abbey upon this theme. I heard it, and felt, while listening, though no especially new or startling facts were developed, that the blush of shame and sentiment of profoundest concern must have visited every English man and woman within hearing, especially as the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany were among the worshipers. Solemnly putting from him every form and phrase of exaggeration, under a deep sense of responsibility imposed by the place and the subject, Canon Farrar declared alcoholic drinking and drunkenness to be the one glaring, disgraceful and perilous national vice, by which the nation stands unenviably distinguished and as seriously endangered. He pointed this declaration by showing how history discloses in every empire and people that has fallen into decay and ruin in the past, some special destroying vice or crime; that, as Rome was ruined by slavery, Greece by luxury, Venice by pride, the Papal power by ambition, and others, as he followed the catalogue, so England is doomed to destruction by the spreading and blighting curse of intemperance, unless the moral sense of the nation awaken to the peril and arrest the evil.

"The preacher, with that boldness and earnestness for which he has become distinguished, arrayed once more, and with scathing commentary, the familiar but frightful facts that sustain his judgment. One hundred and fifty millions sterling spent in this way by the people, of which £37,000,000 come from the working classes, and the result is 600,000 drunkards, besides that equally brutalizing intemperance pervading all classes, and hidden only by social decencies."

He Was After Dickens.

"Do you want to hire a reporter?" inquired a red-nosed young man, as he thrust his illuminated olfactory into this office yesterday.

He was informed that we had all the help we required at present.

"Sorry—very sorry," he said, bowing quite low; "just noticed by squib in newspaper that the immortal Dickens began life as a reporter; first I had heard of it, and concluded at once to begin this way myself. Dickens made a great success of it, and what has been done once can be done again."

We acknowledged that Dickens had made quite a hit.

"A decided hit," put in the young man, "and all I want is to start under the same auspices. Sure you have no place for me?"

"No place at present."

"Mighty sorry," replied the applicant; "have just been reading 'David Centerfield,' and am quite charmed with the author's style."

"'David Copperfield,' not 'Centerfield,'" we ventured to suggest.

"Perhaps you're right; yes, now I recollect, you are right; much obliged; been playing base-ball lately, and have got names confused. Will be in town few days, and hope you will not forget me if a vacancy should occur."

We promised to remember him, and the young man withdrew.

Protruding his beacon light once more, he said:

"Daniel Webster, Benjamin Franklin and Napoleon Banaparte also began life in newspaper offices; but I don't care for them. Dickens is the man I'm after," and he closed the door softly, and went down stairs on his tip-toes.—Oil City Derrick.

Shepherdess and Wolf.

Mary Belle Loy, barely 14 years of age, is a shepherdess, whose rosy cheeks, sun-burned face, and graceful form, as she mounts her pony, would excite the envy of many city belles. Some days ago, while looking after her woolly wards, she discovered a full-grown wolf, of the coyote species, stealthily approaching the flock. She put her horse to his speed, and the wolf fled. Then there was a race over the hills and prairie, neither showing any indication of fatigue, until finally he was compelled to consider himself "run down." Now came the "tug of war." The little maiden unbuckled her bridle rein, and madethe ring at the end, and this only, with good her position as mistress of the situation, and without alighting from her saddle soon disabled her foe and saved her lambs. Then she started for the nearest neighbor for assistance, but found no one at home who could assist her, save another girl, who mounted another pony, and, armed only with a dull knife, these two girls were soon galloping over the prairie to save the scalp, for which the county pays a "royalty" when presented to the proper officer. When they returned, the principal of the Red Riding Hood escapade had partially recovered, and was moving off. But one girl threw him down and the other cut his throat.—St. Louis Globe.

AMERICAN ORGANS AT THE PARIS EXHIBITION.—Every American visiting our Section will conceive a legitimate pride at the well-merited praise which he will hear from the great European musical critics who constantly swarm around Messrs. Mason & Hamlin's Cabinet Organs, and openly acknowledge that nothing in Europe can be compared with the Exhaust Bellows and Separate Vibrators peculiar to American Organs, as especially perfected in the Mason & Hamlin instruments.—Paris (France) Register, June 1, 1878.

BOSNIA, including Herzegovina, was under Turkish rule for nearly 300 years. It has been a source of weakness rather than strength. To Austria the province may be made a source of wealth, but whether it will be or not depends on how well the two sections of the empire agree upon its acquisition.

"Couldn't Stan' de Pressure."

A colored tramp, who was hanging about the depot a day or two since, was observed to disappear around the corner whenever a passenger train drew up, reappearing only as it departed. It looked suspicious, and a special policeman pounced upon him as he returned from one of these semi-occasional excursions, and demanded what he was "up to." "Are you keeping shady from a constable, or don't you want to go till a freight train comes along?" he asked. The wanderer proceeded to elucidate: "You see, boss," said he, taking another reef in his trousers waistband, "I hain't had nuffin' to eat wort meshunin' since las' night; and ebery time dat de cars pulls in de boy at the hotel ober dar by de pervilyeum—he trots out and beats de gong for dinner, and I tells you, boss, it makes me feel jes' like I was goin' to cave in, an' I can't stan' de pressure, nohow." He let him go.—Binghamton Times.

A WINE merchant in Mayence, Germany, went down into the cellar, knocked out the bungs of sixteen casks, cut his throat, and died in a deluge of wine, thus causing his unhappy partner double bereavement.

Remember This.

That when you buy a can of DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER you take no chances, for it is warranted absolutely pure, full strength and full weight, and it cannot fail, if properly used, to produce the most positive and satisfactory results, not only in biscuits, rolls, muffins, and fancy cakes, but in all kinds of batter griddle-cakes as well.

GOOD health is a blessing only attained by careful attention to the real wants of the body; but by how many ways do we aggravate symptoms and produce diseases it is difficult to cure, frequent among which is Heart Disease, Nervousness, Sleepless or Wakeful nights. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. These troubles can be cured by the use of Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR. Send to the sole agent, F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet of testimonials, etc.

Respiration was carried on with great difficulty, its blue lips and finger nails denoted a state of collapse; the physician had notified the mother to prepare for and submit to separation from her child. Weeping and sympathetic friends filled the room. Congestion of the Lungs was rapidly terminating fatally. Fellows' Hypophosphites was administered, with Cod Liver Oil, in accordance with the printed directions; a change for the better was apparent in an hour, and in sixteen hours the child was enabled to cough up the obstruction, and its life was saved.

The above is a true account of what occurred in the family of the writer in 1875.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Explanation of the Manner in Which it is Produced—The Coming Light—Cheap—Brilliant—Non-heating.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

While America has, as an almost invariable rule, taken the lead in discoveries in electrical science and their practical application, the application of electricity to the lighting of cities, factories and other large buildings has been entirely lost sight of, and it has remained for the French in their great Exposition building, and in many large factories, to have practically utilized the magneto electric machines of Gramme. There are still steps in advance to be taken, and it is to be hoped that now the honor of inventing some means by which the electric light may be introduced into home life may be borne by an American. The following article, from the London Journal of Applied Science, gives the latest information in regard to the progress already made in that direction:

The application of electricity for lighting seems at last to have been accomplished. For some time the magneto-electric machines of Gramme have been used in the lighting of certain factories in Paris and its neighborhood, and the number goes on increasing, and where the ceilings are lofty and direct light applicable, the success is perfect. Among the establishments so lighted are those of Call & Co., engineers; Lautier, Lammonier & Co., the makers of the Gramme machines, both of Paris; and Thomas & Powell, of Rouen, and at the Fives-Lille Works. The system of direct lighting, however, is not applicable to weaving and spinning sheds, the ceilings of which are low; the light is too intense, and everthing which impedes it—shafting, driving-bands and machines—creates intense black shadows. The problem was to get a light which, like that of the sun, allows objects to be seen by reflection, and this has been achieved by throwing the light by means of a hyperbolic reflector on the whitened ceilings and walls, when the machinery is sufficiently illuminated by reflection to cause everything to be seen as on a bright, sunny day, while the eye is not fatigued, nothing is painfuly brilliant, and nothing obscure. A wool spinning factory at Daours, in the Department of the Somme, covers an area of 4,730 square feet; it is a ground floor, 140 feet long, 35 feet wide and the ceiling is 12 feet from the floor. This ceiling is composed of planks and laths, and is, like the walls, lime washed. The electric light is supplied by two lamps placed at a height of six feet from the floor, and thrown upon the ceiling by means of conical reflectors, which prevent the diffusion of any direct light whatever. The reflected light is reflected and diffused in all directions from the ceiling and the walls, and without shadows. The light is much superior to that given by ordinary gas; it is soft, and at once local and general in all parts of the work. The foreman seated at his desk, has plenty of light for working at his books, and sees all over the building. Thus the grand intensity of electric light is at once utilized and moderated. The machinery is at one end of the factory, and is driven by a belt from a water wheel.

This mode of lighting has been in use for more than a year; the cost of the motive power is almost nil. Each lamp consumes from three to four inches of the carbon point per hour; and the cost of this being one cent per inch, the cost of the two lamps is two-pence per hour, the seventy gas-jets by which the factory was formerly lighted cost 1s. 8d. per hour. We could enumerate several other factories where the light has been used successfully for more than a year, but will only sum up some of its advantages. Besides its cheapness, the effect upon color is an important consideration; it is found, with the electric light, even the darkest colors are worked at night quite as easily as in the daytime. Another important consideration is that of fire; any electric lamp replaces from fifty to seventy jets of gas; they require no hand lamps or matches to light them—a most important consideration; and lastly, the lamps are completely incased in glass lanterns. So important are these facts that Insurance Companies have offered to insure factories lighted with electricity at rates lower than usual. The electric light requires but little preparation. The nessary machines and lamps can be set up in a few hours; all that is required is to keep the grease boxes of the machines full, and to clean the latter daily. The electric light does not effect the temperature of the factory, and consequently does not dry the air, neither does it consume any oxygen nor charge the atmosphere with carbonic acid and other products of combustion. The fact of its not having altered the apperance of colors has caused it to be used by dyers. The expense of the electric light is given as follows: The cost of the machine, with lamp giving equal light to 500 carcel jets, is about £90, and these will represent from fifty to seventy gas jets, according to circumstance. The power required is equal to two-horse steam power, and the cost of carbon points, as already stated, is 2d. per hour for each lamp. When the power is that of water the cost is inconsiderable, and when that of coal has to be taken into account for the steam engine it amounts to 2d. per hour, bringing the total up to 4d per hour, and lubrication is set down at about ½d. more, while the wear of the machinery is regarded as nil. Taking for the basis that the electric lamp only replaces the minimum number of gas jets, namely, fifty, it is seven times cheaper than gas, motive power not included, and four times cheaper, taking the cost of driving as estimated above.

These facts compose a strong case, and the success which has been obtained is easily ascertained. A perfect light, as regards colors, which neither injures the eyes of the working people nor renders factories unhealthy by contaminating the air while immensely reducing the risk of fire, and which saves 75 per cent. on the cost of gas-lighting, possesses so many advantages that it is only surprising that the manufacturers are not more eager to accept it at once. The experiments in the electric lighting with the Gramme machine are now duly repeated at the Palais de l'Industre Paris. An area of 12,000 square yards is lighted by two electric lusters of six lamps each, suspended at twenty-seven yards from the ground. The power is applied by two steam engines of twenty-five horse power each. It would take 10,000 candles to yield an equivalent light on the floor, or 300,000 to illuminate the whole space as thoroughly. At first there was but a single luster; they then used two, and it is proposed soon to introduce three. It is understood that during the International Exhibition there will be tests made of the various methods of lighting streets and buildings with electricity, and the relative value of the different systems will be determined. One division of the Exhibition will be devoted exclusively to electricity. Although it is conceded that the light afforded by electricity is far superior to any otherwise available, some difference of opinion exists regarding the superiority of the several apparatus now introduced, and the comparative expense. Measures are to be taken to insure the utmost impartiality in the experiments, and the results will be anticipated with great interest.

A STRANGE STORY.

Francis Murphy Relates a Startling Incident in His Life, and Confutes Some Current Slanders.

[Troy Times.]

Some nine months ago Francis Murphy, the temperance reformer, began his work in Troy, and pursued it for about five weeks with unexampled success. The story that Mr. Murphy had committed some dark crime in former years, in Portland Me., was secretly whispered by persons who were either envious of his success, or by those who desired to see him fail in his work; and when he narrated the history of his life in the opening nights of his lectures, and referred to his imprisonment in Portland, without detailing the circumstances of the misfortune that sent him to prison, we felt that possibly there was some shadow upon the past which Mr. Murphy might desire to conceal from the public. Then when he left Troy and engaged in his temperance labors at Washington some hints were thrown into the press respecting his past career which seemed to justify the idea above expressed. We accordingly felt it our duty to say to Mr. Murphy that he owed it to himself and friends to publish the facts. They are as told by Mr. Murphy himself, and supplemented by abundant evidence, as follows:

In the year 1869 I was proprietor of the Bradley Hotel, at Portland, Me. It was a respectable house, and enjoyed a good reputation and patronage. On the first of September of that year the St. Johns boat arrived at the wharf, and a large number of guests entered the hotel to partake of breakfast, and some registered with a view of remaining in the city. After the guests had prepared themselves for breakfast they were all shown to the dining-room with the exception of one man, who remained seated in the office, with head bowed and hands covering his face. I asked him whether he was going into breakfast. He lifted up his head and said, "I have got no means of paying for it."

I bade him go right in and get something to eat. I saw by his looks that he had been drinking, and stood in need of a substantial meal. There was a scar on his face, and he said to me: "I've been having a pretty hard time, and would like to have something to drink more than food." I took him into the bar and gave him some liquor, after which he went into the dining-room and partook of breakfast. Upon coming out he desired an interview with me, when he told me he was a tailor by trade, an utter stranger in the city, that he had no means, and asked me if I would trust him to a week's board provided he could get work; I said I would do that; and more than that, I interested myself in his welfare, and went out and secured a situation for him. His name was entered upon the registry of the hotel—Patrick Murray St. Johns, New Brunswick. On the evening of the 3d of September he came in late to tea. The wife of Captain Hager, of New York—who was superintending the excavations in the harbor—her sister and cousin, with two children were seated at their private table. Murray began in a free way a conversation with Mrs. Hager, whereupon the waiter requested him to desist. He arose from the table in an angry mood and left the dining-room. Mrs. Hager paid no attention to the man, and upon concluding supper went to the sitting room and engaged in conversation with Mrs. Murphy, after which she started to her own appartments, and Murray assaulted her. I was summoned, and, Murray, declining to quit my house I tried to put him out, and after a struggle he fell to the foot of the staircase with a factured skull. He died four days afterward. I was arrested and tried for the murder of that man. The trial lasted eight days and occasioned great excitement. I had to meet the prejudice of the friends of the Maine Liquor Law, from the fact that I kept a hotel at which liquor was sold; and I was bitterly denounced and charged with giving the man liquor. I never gave him but one glass of liquor in my life, and that was for medicine, and I had done all I could to assist him to a life of sobriety and usefulness. I can never tell how much I suffered for being tried for murder in the presence of my wife and family and friends. The verdict was manslaughter. The case was appealed, and I was admitted to bail in the sum of $10,000, General Shepley and A. A. Stout becoming my bondsmen. I returned home very much depressed to think I had been convicted of such a hideous offense, when before God I knew I was entirely innocent. I then began to drink very hard. My wife was very much troubled, though patient and kind, and bore in her face the sufferings she endured at the terrible calamity that had come upon us and our children. For about one year I kept on drinking and became exceedingly reckless. My friends had me locked up July 30, 1870, in the county jail in Portland, after which my family removed from the hotel and were compelled to take up quarters in a little tenement house on what was known as the "back cove," and were in very destitute circumstances. I remained in jail three months On the 15th of August, at a religious meeting held in the prison by Captain Cyrus Sturtevant, I made up my mind, God helping me, never to sell another drop or drink another glass of intoxicating liquor. Meantime the case had been appealed and the verdict sustained. I was arraigned and sentenced for a period of sixty days in the county jail at Portland. On the expiration of my sentence I was invited to deliver an address in the City Hall on Gospel temperance, and from that time, April, 1871, I date my entrance into the work to which I have dedicated the remainder of my life.

NOTICE TO CONSUMERS
—OF—
LORILLARD Tobacco

The great celebrity of our tin tag tobacco has caused many imitations thereof to be placed on the market, we therefore caution all chewers against purchasing such imitations.

All dealers buying or selling other plug tobacco bearing a hard or metallic label, render themselves liable to the penalty of the law, and all persons violating our trade marks are punishable by fine and imprisonment. See act of congress, Aug, 14, 1876.

The genuine Lorillard Tin Tag Tobacco can be distinguished by a Tin Tag on each lump with the word Lorillard stamped thereon.

Over 7,000 tons tobacco sold in 1877, and nearly 3,000 persons employed in factories.

Taxes paid Gov'm't in 1877 about 3,000,000, and during past 12 years, over 20,000,000.

These goods sold by all jobbers at manufacturers rates.

The Blackest Chapter in the History of the Republican Party.

Last February Representative Muller, of New York, introduced, and Congress passed, a resolution ordering the three Commissioners appointed by Grant to liquidate the affairs of the bankrupt Freedman's Bank to render some account of their stewardship. The report reluctantly brought out in obedience to that resolution is now published, and it is certainly one of the most remarkable documents ever given to the American people.

In order to appreciate the edifying performances of this commission, it may be well to recapitulate briefly the events which proceeded its appointment. It will be remembered that the Freedman's Bank contrived in a few years to accumulate something like six million dollars from the savings of the colored race. The success of this philanthropical institution was peculiary gratifying to such Christian heroes as Gen. O. O. Howard, and to those modern statesmen of whom Boss Shepherd is a shinning representative. These gentlemen became so eager to forward the interests of the depository that they speedily evaded or thrust aside the over stringent restraints of legislation. Thus the charter of the bank debarred its officers from borrowing, whereupon the Christian soldier, Howard, resigned his office of Vice-President and three days afterward borrowed $24,000 on rotten securities. Boss Shepherd, for his part, was unwilling to take an active part in the developement in the institution until the original restrictions confining loans to first mortgages and national or other approved bonds had been swept away; and accordingly an act to that effect was passed by the Republican Congress. Thenceforward the process of substituting second mortgages and the scrip of the Young Men's Christian Association, paying companies, or other corporations equally substantial, for the hard-earned dollars of the Freedmen went on with startling rapidity. Nevertheless the colored man and brother would have probably continued to deposit, and allow his Republican friends to manipulate his deposits for an indefinate period but for the light thrown on these operations by the Sun and other independent newspapers. As it was, the bankruptcy of the institution was stoutly denied and studiously concealed by the eminent philanthropists who controlled it until at least fifty per cent. of its assets had disappeared.

When the club of Republican statesmen and Christian soldiers organized to invest the savings of the Freedmen had finished their work, and the doors of the bank were closed, the most urgent business apparently should have been to determine on the quickest and cheapest method of liquidation to the end of securing as much as possible for the unlucky depositors. A Republican Congress, however, did just the opposite of this. Instead of taking measures to obtain a receiver of well-known integrity and business capacity, it authorized the President to appoint a board of three Commissioners, each to receive three thousand dollars a year, payable out of the remnant of funds belonging to the bank. Grant's selections in this instance were characteristic. For the first place in the commission he named Creswell, who had just resigned from the Cabinet to escape impeachment. Next, with the sage declaration that the board ought to include "one nigger," Grant appointed an aged black man with a benevolent face, named Purvis, who lived in Philadelphia, and knew a little about medicine, but of law or banking, nothing. The third place was given to a man named Leipold born in Germany, but hailing from Wisconsin, and rejoicing in the special favor of Senator Howe. These commissioners were appointed on the 4th of July, 1874, but no account was rendered, and nothing regarding their management could be ascertained until the report of the Beverly Douglas Investigating Committee was made to Congress in May 1876. It was then shown that J. A. S. Creswell was too much engaged in other business to give any of his valuable time to the bank; that, accordingly, he paid Leipold $500 for attending to his part of the business, and pocketed the remainder of his salary. It appears that the colored man, Purvis followed the example of Creswell in each particular, and that in the hands of Leipold, thus invested with exclusive control, the funds left to the bank on the morrow of its collapse were swiftly vanished, under the guise of an expense account. It was distinctly charged by Mr. Douglass in his report that Grant's Commissioners "regarded what remained of a sad wreck as a legacy for the benefit of themselves and their retainers." Of course the charges of a Democratic Congressman were indignantly repelled; but now, after the lapse of some two years, they are more than sustained by the statement wrung from the commission by the Muller resolution.

The fact is now admitted by the commissioners that in three years their so called expense account has reached the enormous sum of $179,000, of which more than $62,000 went to their own salaries and those of their clerks. The amount paid in fees to favorite lawyers was upwards of $23,000, the larger share of this being secured by one Enoch Totten, a son-in-law of Senator Howe. No wonder the board has required two years to pay a dividend of ten per cent., making but thirty per cent. in all yet returned to the depositors.

The Freedman's Bank was created by the Republican party. Its managers, from O. O. Howard down to ex-Senator Pomeroy, were Republicans; so are the Commissioners whose discharge of their trust we are now able to judge by their own report. This statement was delayed until Congressional action at the late session was improbable. But when it again meets, let Congress assert its prerogative, and wipe out a scandal that has become national, by snatching from the hands of the present Commissioners and their legal parasites the scanty remnant still belonging to the victims of the most colossal scheme of swindling hypocrisy that the world has known.

Freemasonry.

Though it has always flourished most in the congenial atmosphere of civil and religious liberty enjoyed under Protestant government, yet at no time has any branch of the Christian church been excluded from participation in its privilages, and of late it has opened its portals to Jews and other believers in the purer forms of Monotheism. Though numbering amongst its members many of the best and wisest of men, it has been persecuted by some European governments with relentless cruelty, and is still denounced by the Romish hierarchy as an impious association, the members of which are ipso facto excommunicate. In other countries it is often looked on as a great benefit to society, the high pretensions and pompous accessories of which are calculated to provoke a smile of amusement, if not contempt. Great, however, are the benefits of Freemasonry; it is far more than a benefit society. It may be defined, in its own words, as a "beautiful system of morality, veiled in allegory, and illustrated by symbols." It lives and instructs in emblems and symbols, in which the leading idea is that the Freemasons are a body of Masons, engaged in the erection of a spiritual temple, affording to each that encouragement and aid, material or moral, of which he may stand in need; bound to practice collectively and individually every public and private virtue; to contemplate all mankind as brethern, but especially those united by the same sacred tie, whatever their station, or their place in the social scale; to practice "charity," in its broadest and deepest meaning; to do all this silently, secretly, without publicity or ostentation, this and nothing less, is the purpose, the labor of the craft. This is incumbent on every Mason, whatever his abilities or his opportunity but it involves also a devout and intelligent study of the sciences, as the works of the Great Architect of the universe.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at F. E. Davenport.

Advice to Correspondents.

Write proper names very plainly.

Write only on one side of the sheet.

Be brief in statement and sparing in comment.

When you have nothing to say on any subject say nothing. Don't string words together for the sake of filling pages of manuscript.

"Short items and lots of them."

Avoid puffs of this one and that, and save the editor the trouble of cutting them out of your letter.

If you would be clear and forcible, don't use foreign words. Be natural. A man never stops to hunt up a foreign word when he is stung by a hornet.

The Feather Business.

The business done in New York city alone in a single year is almost incredible, especially when one considers that plumes are only one small unit among many unnecessary requirements of fashion. The forests and marshes of the whole world contribute to a well-stocked feather emporium. Ostrich plumes, natural, colored, made into a thousand different forms of trimmings, skillfully knotted and curled into "willow feathers," or combined with other species of plumage; peacock skins and tails; breasts of glossy grebe and blue heron; delicate egrets; the iridescent purple and green head and skin of the Impeyan pheasant; thousands of humming-birds, birds of paradise, red birds, birds green, black, yellow, blue—of every conceivable tint and mixture—are found here, each suggestive of foreign lands and wild forest life.

The chief business in feathers is with ostrich plumes, which are used for every variety of purpose. They come principally from South Africa, although the long soft Egyptian feather known as the Mogador is a finer quality than the "Cape" feather, and brings a higher price. The Cape feathers are pure white often tipped and streaked with a soft gray tint. Some varieties are gray throughout, and of the most delicate texture. Those from the wild Egyptian bird are some times as long as twenty-four inches, and the down on each particular spine is longer and thicker than on those from the Cape. They are of pure white, or of an almost invisible yellow tint. The price per pound, which contains from eighty to a hundred long feathers, runs as high as three hundred dollars for the best qualities. There is often a considerable quantity of guano and other dirt, which must be carefully removed by the manufacturer. Acids are used in cleaning feathers, after which process they are assorted and prepared for the market. The thick quill is scraped with glass on the under side until about half its substance is removed, which leaves the feather soft and graceful from stem to tip. Many are left in their natural purity, or soft gray coloring, while others are prepared in various tints to suit all tastes. The feather manufacturer uses mineral dyes adapted to the delicate nature of his plumes. Cloth dye should never be applied to valuable plumes, as, however well the feather may appear at first, it is rotted, its natural gloss and softness gone forever, and it remains only a sorrowful relic of its former splendor. A feather once dipped in cloth dye soon wears out, and can never be renewed, while it may be cleaned or dyed every season by a professional worker in feathers, and still retain its brilliancy and valuable qualities for years.

Marabou, egret, and some other of the light airy plumes are sold in quantity by the ounce, and are worth from eight to sixteen dollars, according to quality. Birds which are imported whole, like humming-birds, birds of paradise, and hundreds of more common varieties, are reckoned by the dozen or hundred. Thousands of humming-birds are brought from South America. The Indians shoot them with blow-guns made from a small palm from which the pith is removed, leaving a polished bore. The tiny birds are in this way stunned, and captured without injury to their exquisite plumage. They are rudely stuffed, the wings secured by a narrow strip of paper fastened tightly around the body, and in this form they reach the feather manufacturer, who then cures them with acids, arranges them artistically, securing the wing open by means of fine wires, and displays them, a gorgeous show of glistening color, in his case. Neither humming-birds or whole birds of any kind are as much in use as a few years ago, and it is to be hoped the fickle changes of fashion will soon put an end to the wholesale slaughter of these small denizens of the forest and meadow.

No plumage is of more service to the manufacturer than that of the peacock, whose magnificence has been called the "consummation of art in feathers." Every feather on this noble bird is turned to some use; its long tail plumes, the tuft upon its lordly head, every one of its glistening scales, are of value. Yards and yards of green, blue and purple trimmings are manufactured by skillful fingers as decoration for cloaks, dresses, hats—whatever use fashion may dictate. In flat feather trimmings the maker may display much artistic skill in combination of colors. Every bit of plumage too small for other use may be interwoven with an infinite variety of shades and tints. Here is trimming made from pure white marabou plumes, airy and graceful enough for a fairy bride; there, the feathers of the peacock, the Impeyan pheasant, the blue heron, are combined in georgeous gold and purple and drab as would suit the costume of a queen. The white peacock—where is his contribution to this rich array? The white peacock is not a species; only at intervals does he appear, a solitary albino of his tribe. Royal, indeed, was that chapel de paon blanc worn centuries ago by St. Louis King of France.

Feathers must always hold a place far in advance of artificial flowers in decoration of costumes. Flowers are at best but a poor imitation of the reality, while plumes are a genuine and magnificent contribution of nature to man's desire for beautiful adornment.—Helen S. Conant, in Harper's Magazine for August.

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

There is no excuse for loafers and tramps now. Farmers this week have been to town trying to engage hands, and have found it difficult to get a supply, although there is a regiment of loafers about every town of any size whose constant plea is "no work."

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Secretary Sherman went to New York last week, and had a conference with the Syndicate touching his preparations for the resumption of specie payments. Mr. Sherman said that the coin now in the treasury was amply sufficient for purposes of resumption, and that he would make no further sales of bonds on this account. The members of the Syndicate expressed themselves as being in accord with these views, and pledged themselves to assist him in carrying out the Resumption act.

Theodore Fisher, Frederick J. Muller, John Musset, James Andrews, James Hamlin, and John McCarty (boys) were drowned at New York, while boating and bathing in the river.... That was a curious case of swindling by the Trustees of the Teutonia Bank of New York. By the confession of the Secretary of the bank it seems that for several years he was in the habit of buying securities and charging them on the books at higher rates than were actually paid, the difference being divided up among the Trustees. Thus was banking rendered more profitable unto the Trustees than unto the stockholders.

Several deaths from yellow fever have occurred in the Brooklyn navy yard.... E. J. Oakley, the absconding cashier of the Merchants' Exchange National Bank, of New York, after eluding the vigilance of the authorities for several years, has at last been arrested. His defalcation amounted to $300,000.... W. P. Tilton, iron dealer, New York, has failed for $470,000.

THE WEST.

Advices from Oregon are to the effect that the worst of the Indian war is over. The savages hoped to obtain the assistance of the Columbia river bands, but were disappointed. It was while they were waiting for this reinforcement that Howard struck and dispersed them. Many of them are supposed to be endeavoring to return to their reservation. They show no disposition to attack towns or close settlements, and, in fact, throughout the raid, have avoided all fortified points or considerable parties of armed men. Remote ranches have suffered heavily in loss of stock, and many ranchmen and herders have been butchered. No definite estimate has yet been made of the number of the killed, because many men known to have been in the route of the savages probably escaped.

The Governor of Oregon has issued a proclamation calling for volunteers to fight the hostile savages. The Governor says that all friendly Indians will go to the hostiles whenever they find they can be successful against the whites; that all friendly Indians, with few exceptions, are midnight allies of the hostiles, and help them in removing stolen stock and plunder; and that their promises and pledges of friendship cannot be relied upon. Dispatches from Crow Creek Indian Agency to the Chicago Tribune tell of the startling disclosures attending the opening of the safe of Livingston, the agent at that point, who, when surprised by a visit of inspection from Gen. Hammond in March last, locked up the safe and refused to reveal the combination. The arrival of Indian Commissioner Hayt, and the opening of the safe under his direction, have revealed a system of fraud and plunder fully equaling all that had been reported in connection with the administration of affairs at many of the Sioux agencies.

The city of St. Louis has been suffering a season of phenomenally hot weather, the thermometer ranging from 90 to 105 degrees in the shade for several days in succession. Business was almost wholly paralyzed, people being afraid to venture out of doors. Hundreds of people were prostrated by the heat, and a kind of panic seized upon the community. In one day there were 150 cases of sunstroke, 49 of which were fatal. Other sections of the West and Northwest have suffered from the extreme heat, cases of sunstroke being reported from many towns and cities in Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and other States. In many instances farmers have been prostrated by the heat while working in the fields. No such weather has been experienced within the memory of the oldest inhabitant.... Millions of bushels of grain have been destroyed in the Northwestern States by the recent heavy rains.

A dispatch from Portland, Ore., says: "The troops under Col. Miles drove the Indians into the foot hills, near Cayuse station. They fought four or five hours at long range in the valley. Finally the troops and volunteers made a charge and drove them four miles to the hills, and captured several horses on the field. The volunteers did well. The officer in command complimented them highly. Quite a number of Indians were killed, but the number could not be learned.

The statue of Hon. Stephen A. Douglas, which crowns the monument erected to his memory, in the southern part of Chicago, was unveiled on Tuesday, the 16th of July.... Chicago and Milwaukee, which are usually among the coolest cities in the country during the summer solstice, have not entirely escaped the effects of the deadly heat so prevalent throughout the West. A number of cases of sunstroke, some of them fatal, are reported from both cities.

Some idea of the fearful weather that has prevailed in St. Louis lately may be gained from the statement that 159 people of that unfortunate city died of sunstroke in a period of seven days.

A sad accident happened near Johnstown, Ind., a few days ago. While moving a steam thresher on the farm of John Shackley, the boiler exploded, killing John Shackley, Frank Jones, Patrick Johnston, and John Clanhence, and dangerously wounding Albert Shackley, Henry Ashler, James Dixon, Alex. Humphrey, Thomas Smith, and two others.

A dispatch from Baker City, Ore., says "the Umatilla Indians under Forsythe struck the hostile camp about two miles and a half from Stark's rancho, Daley road, killing seventeen warriors and capturing twenty-five women and children and sixty or seventy head of horses. The hostiles are much demoralized.".... A San Francisco dispatch reports the discovery of rich placer diggings on the Colorado river, in Arizona.

THE SOUTH.

Henry Wise was hanged at Waterboro, S. C., last week, for the murder of Mercer Brown, his rival in a love affair.

Before the Potter sub-committee at New Orleans, Isaac W. Patton, the Chairman of the Democratic State Committee in 1876, testified: "He saw Anderson about October. Anderson proposed that if the Democrats would support Nash for Congress he would give them two members of the General Assembly, and from 1,500 to 1,800 in East Feliciana parish. Witness could not entertain the proposition, but telegraphed for McCabe in Feliciana. He came down and talked with Anderson about his treatment of the people. Anderson finally agreed to go back if they would cash his scrip. Mr. Patton agreed with Mr. McCabe to pay $150 of the amount. The witness gave Mr. Jenks $50. Mr. Jenks said he would not take it as a bribe, but he would as a loan."

Piper and Hernden, implicated in the robbery of a train on the Texas Pacific railroad some time ago, have been held at Austin, Texas, and sentenced to life imprisonment.

WASHINGTON.

Ex-Gov. Kellogg was again before the Potter committee on the 12th inst. Referring to the MacVeagh Commission, the witness heard, last fall, that the Sherman letter had been found among D. A. Weber's papers, and that Mrs. Jenks had procured possession of it through her intimacy with the Weber family. Mrs. Jenks had called upon him in New Orleans and spoken of the Sherman letter. While examining the contents of the document, Mrs. Jenks sat on a sofa and pretended to be reading him the substance of the letter from a paper which she held in her hand. The witness contradicted many of the statements of James E. Anderson, whom he regarded as utterly unreliable. He denied that false protests and affidavits relating to intimidation were used before the Returning-Board as a pretext for throwing out Democratic majorities. He produced letters from the Weber brothers certifying to the intimidation that prevailed in the Feliciana parishes. Kellogg explained that the $20,000 borrowed in Chicago was for his private use, and was not employed in connection with the electoral count.

Appointments by the President: Alexander Reed, of Ohio, Receiver of Public Moneys at Walla Walla, Washington Territory; Eliot C. [illegible], of Missouri, Commissioner to the Paris International Exposition; Caspar H. Stibolt, of Iowa, Consul at Campeachy, Mexico; Eugene Schuyler, Consul at Birmingham, Eng.

Dun, Barlow & Co., report that the "failures in the United States, for the first six months of the present year, are 5,825, as against 4,740 in 1877, an increase of over 1,000 in number, equal to nearly 25 per cent. The liabilities for the first half of 1878 are $130,000,000, as against $99,000,000 for the same period of last year, a percentage of increase still greater. These figures are of grave import as an indication of the state of trade. Never before in an equal period in the history of the country have business misfortunes been so numerous or aggregated an amount of loss by bad debts so great."

Contrary to general expectation, the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne was unproductive of bloodshed in the city of Montreal. The Orangemen went to their hall and the Catholics gathered outside, the latter in vast numbers, backed by the Mayor's 500 special police. When the appointed hour came for the procession the Orangemen did not like the appearance of things on the street, and remained inside. Six of the leading Orangemen were arrested upon special warrants, the trial of whom will test whether the Orange body is a legal society.

The Potter committee occupied itself on the 13th with ex-Senator Kellogg, and completed his examination. Nothing of material importance was elicited. Gen. Butler endeavored to elicit from the witness a statement as to whether or not all the visiting statesmen, commissioners, and others connected with the election in Louisiana had been rewarded with offices.

Mr. Hiscock objected to such testimony upon the ground that its only object was to throw ridicule upon the President. Butler disclaimed any intention to cast ridicule. He said it was hard to gild the lily or paint the rose. Some persons were so ridiculous that nothing he could do could add to it. A long list of names was shown of persons connected with the Presidential contest in Louisiana who had been appointed to office by President Hayes. The committee adjourned till the 23d of July, to meet at Atlantic City, N. J.

The following assignments of Internal Revenue agents have been made: F. Meyer, to duty at Omaha, Neb.; George W. Atkinson, to the District of Virginia and West Virginia; Edward Leet, at Chicago.

The Secretary of the Treasury has determined to venture upon the disbursement of silver dollars at once in payment of various Government dues. He has issued a new order to Assistant Treasurers, authorizing them to use the standard silver dollars in their hands for the payment of checks and pay-rolls; in exchange, in moderate amounts, for greenbacks and national-bank notes, especially of the denominations of one and two dollars.... The Potter committee has issued subpœnas for the principal visiting statesmen on both sides, including ex-Senator Trumbull, ex-Gov. Palmer, and all other Democrats, and for all members of the Louisiana Commission.

Owing to numerous applications for registered 4-per-cent. bonds of small denominations, the treasury has been unable, with all the clerical force which could be employed thereon, to fill orders as rapidly as received. Purchasers of bonds should understand, however, that interest will run from the date of payment for bonds and not from the date of their issue, and that the little delay from time to time on account of suddenly-increased orders will result in no loss or injury.

GENERAL.

The authorities at Washington regard the Indian troubles in the Northwest as wearing a serious aspect. Gen. Sherman is reported to be hastening forward to the West all troops available for the purpose. Garrisons on the seaboard have been withdrawn, and heavy artillery regiments have been armed and drilled as infantry, and are en route to the seat of war.... Advices from Sitka, Alaska, report a fight among Indians, with four killed. The Indians are favorably disposed toward the whites. An old squaw was flayed alive and hanged by the Indians for practicing witchcraft.

The number of failures in the second quarter of 1878 in the Dominion of Canada is 392, with liabilities reaching the sum of $4,407,806. The total failures for the first six months of 1878 are 947, with liabilities amounting to $13,508,729. The number of failures in the first six months of 1877 were 1,223, with liabilities amounting to $15,151,937.

POLITICAL.

Secretary Sherman, in an interview in New York, the other day, is reported to have declared that Gen. Grant would be the next Republican candidate for President.

A. C. Hesing, the well-known Chicago politician, has gone into bankruptcy.... James R. Doolittle, Jr., of Chicago, has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Third Congressional District of Illinois.

The Democratic State Convention of Colorado nominated W. A. H. Loveland for Governor, and renominated Thomas M. Patterson for Congress—both by acclamation.

FOREIGN.

A Paris dispatch says nearly all class juries of the Exhibition have finished their work and submitted their reports to the group juries. The latter have passed upon the reports thus far presented, making very few changes. It is stated that the Americans have obtained more prizes than the citizens of any other country, in proportion to the number of exhibitors. In one class all American exhibitors have obtained medals, and in another all except one.

The European congress held its last sitting at Berlin on the 13th of July. The treaty of peace was signed by all the Plenipotentiaries alphabetically. After the signatures, Count Andrassy warmly eulogized Bismarck's Presidency. Bismarck thanked the Plenipotentiaries for their indulgence. The proceedings terminated with a grand court dinner at the White Hall Palace. Crown Prince Frederick William congratulated the illustrious statesmen upon the realization of his hopes and that the blessing of peace crowned their efforts. He declared Germany's co-operation can be counted on for all that tends to secure and preserve this great benefit. He proposed the health of the Plenipotentiaries, and of sovereigns of the Governments who signed the treaty of Berlin. The treaty contains fifty-eight articles. Its first twelve articles relate to Bulgaria, which is constituted an autonomic tributary principality under the suzerainty of the Sultan, with a Christian Government and national militia. These articles further regulate the election of a Prince by the notables at Tirnova, arrange a Provisional Government previous to his election, and lay the basis of a Government after his election. Articles 13 to 21, inclusive, relate to the new province called Eastern Roumelia, south of the Balkans, which is placed under the direct military and political authority of the Sultan, with, however, a Christian Governor, and the conditions of an autonomous administration. The Governor is to be appointed by the Porte, with the assent of the powers for five years.

The Turks are at length reconciled to the Austrian occupation of their western provinces. Orders have been issued by the Porte to the authorities of Bosnia, notifying them that the relations between Austria and the Sultan continue most amicable, and that the Austrian army will enter the country with friendly intentions. It is reported that the Bosnian insurgents are inclined to submit quietly to Austrian rule.

Lord Beaconsfield returned to London last week, and was enthusiastically received by the English populace. His journey [illegible]

The Greek insurrection in Thessaly and Epirus appears to be maintained for the purpose of compelling Turkey to proceed at once with the reforms that have been demanded by the Berlin congress. It is apprehended that, if the disturbance ceases, the Turks will resort to the procrastination that comes so naturally to them, and allow all the abuses of administration to be continued in the old way, regardless of the pledges that have been made and of the stipulations of the treaty of Berlin.

Lord Beaconsfield made his appearance in the British House of Lords on the 18th of July, and explained and defended his course in the Berlin congress. He refrained from assuming in the slightest degree a triumphant or boastful air, and at the same time left the impression to be gathered from his words that a great victory had been gained. It has been claimed that the giving of Sophia to the Bulgarians left the line of the Balkans to be easily turned by the possible enemies of Turkey, but Lord Beaconsfield held that the possession of the Ichtiman pass by the Turks was sufficient to guard against such a contingency. The Premier held throughout to the idea that the congress had saved Turkey, and left it a great European power. He spoke contemptuously of the idea of the partition of the Ottoman empire, and quoted Bismarck as saying, when the retention of the line of the Balkans was secured, "Turkey in Europe still exists.".... In the shooting for the Elcho challenge shield, at Wimbledon, Ireland carried off the honors, the score standing: Ireland, 1,610; England, 1,560; Scotland, 1,552.... A Paris dispatch reports a great strike of miners at Anzin, in France. Five thousand colliers left the pits, demanding higher wages and eight hours as a day's work. Troops were called out, and many arrests made.

Death of Dr. James C. Ayer.

Dr. James C. Ayer, the well-known patent-medicine proprietor, has died at Winchendon, Mass. For the past two years he had been in extremely poor health, and for some part of that period his mental condition was such that he had to be confined in an asylum for the insane. Dr. Ayer was undoubtedly the wealthiest maker of patent medicines in this country. He had been engaged in the manufacture of pills and sirups for many years, and his name is known through his medicines all over the world. In the later years of his life, before his mind became unbalanced, he was desirous to become known to the public as a statesman, and not alone as a maker of pills. Having great financial interests in Lowell, Mass, where he resided, and in its surrounding towns, he succeeded, in October, 1874, through agents, while he was in Europe, in procuring the Republican nomination for Congress in the Seventh Massachusetts district. A great deal of opposition to him was made on account of his cold manners, and he was defeated by the Democratic candidate, Mr. Tarbox. A few days subsequent to the election the superabundant ill-feeling toward him in the town of Ayer—which is named after him—found expression in the public burning of his effigy. It seems likely that brooding over his defeated hope of acquiring political position, and over the indignities cast upon him by the men he expected to rally to his support, caused his mind to become unhinged. In June, 1876, he became so violent that he was conveyed to a private asylum in New Jersey, where he remained for some months.—New York paper.

What Becomes of Wealth.

A boot and shoe dealer has hanging in his store a pair of boots worth $7. They constitute a part of his wealth, and a portion of the wealth of the world. A man buys them and begins to wear them; by friction against the pavement little particles of the leather are rubbed off, and thus separated from the rest of the sole. Every particle that is thus removed takes out a portion of the value of the boots, and when the boots are entirely worn out the $7 of wealth which they formed is consumed. The wheat, corn, etc., which was raised by our farmers last summer is being eaten up. No particle of matter is destroyed by this process, but the value which was in the grain is destroyed.

As, while men are wearing out clothing and eating up food, they are generally busily employed producing wealth of some kind, the wealth of the world is not usually diminished by the consumption, but it is changed. This applies, however, only to personal property; town lots and farms generally retain their value, but personal property is subject to perpetual destruction and renewal. As the several particles of water which constitute a river are forever rolling away to the ocean, while their places are being supplied from the springs and fountains, so the movable wealth of the world is constantly being consumed to gratify human wants, and constantly being renewed by the restless activity of human industry.

Buffalo Horn, the Bannock leader, is described as a small, gracefully-built Indian, with beautiful eyes, not unlike a cross between an eagle's and an antelope's. One side of his long hair is bound round with threads of a brown bark, which, resembling a buffalo horn, is probably the occasion of his name. He is a very daring rider, a good shot, brave, intelligent and proud as Lucifer, but seems to enjoy the society of the whites.

Miss Emily Faithful, in a recent address on the extravagances of modern life, said that outward luxury was becoming a perfect passion among English men and women, who had lost the taste for simple pleasures, and, in their pursuit of gold, were losing sight of higher characteristics.

Senator Hill says that at the next session of Congress he will advocate a bill permitting States and corporations to issue paper money.

ORANGEISM.

History of the Order from its Inception.

The Orange Society differs from nearly all other secret associations in this, that it has no literature which can be distinctively called its own. Its history has yet to be written. The state papers in England and in Canada contain much valuable information concerning the order, and the part it has played since its organization. The annual reports of the various grand and subordinate lodges are filled with statistical intelligence that, in the hands of a judicious compiler, could be used to advantage in giving to the world the history of a body whose shibboleth is an event which happened nearly 190 years ago—the battle of the Boyne.

William III. arrived at Torbay, Devonshire, England, Nov. 5, 1688. His flag bore the arms of Nassau quartered with those of England, and on the banner was inscribed, "The Protestant religion and the liberties of England I will maintain." His arrival was received with great joy by those who professed the Episcopal faith, and even the dissenters were not averse to his coming. At Exeter, on the 21st of the same month, was formed the first Orange organization. The declaration of principles was drawn up by Bishop Burnet, whose histories of the reformation and "His Own Time" are to be found in almost every private and public library. The signers pledged themselves to defend and support William, Prince of Orange, in upholding the Protestant religion. This combination was called "The Orange Confederation."

After the Battle of the Boyne, which was fought July 12, 1690, and the subsequent surrender of Limerick—James II. having in the meantime fled to France—the Irish Protestants in the North formed societies to perpetuate the remembrance of the Prince of Orange, who had done so much for them. In Dublin was organized a society, known as the "Aldermen of Skinner's Alley," purely a local affair, being confined to the Protestant freemen and freeholders of the city. Londonderry followed next with the "Prentice Boys," and shortly afterwards Enniskillen turned up with the "Boyne Society." The last mentioned had auxiliary branches. It was extended throughout the country as a means of self-protection against an alleged guerrilla party, known as "The Rapparees," who were charged with midnight assassinations, burning of buildings, and destruction of property. The "Rapparees" were the unconquered few who would not acknowledge English supremacy.

During the years intervening between 1740 and 1750 a vast number of associations similiar to the "Boyne" were formed in various parts of England. Nine years later there were frequent uprisings in Ireland, particularly in the southern counties. The insurgents were dressed in white sheets—whence the name "White Boys"—and armed with guns, pikes, and pistols, and they made it very warm for English settlers and those who sympathized with them. In Tipperary the natives were organized against the Sassenachs, as the Saxons and foreigners were termed, and bore the names of "Levelers," "White Boys," and "Rapparees." The "Hearts of Oak" appeared in Ulster in 1763. They were put down temporarily by the authorities, and reappeared as "Hearts of Steel." In Munster another guerrilla party was known as the "Right Boys," and in the North another body bore the name of "Defenders." In 1791 was organized the society of "United Irishmen," with headquarters in Dublin. By the Protestants it was pronounced a treasonable institution, and an intended muster and parade on Dec. 9, 1791, was frustrated only by royal proclamation. But to go back for a moment. The "Defender" and the "Peep of Day" organizations got fairly under way in 1784. The former were exclusively Romanists, and the latter Presbyterians of decidedly republican proclivities, who were anxious to sever all connection with England and establish a democratic form of government.

All these native Irish movements of course gave an impetus to the Boyne Society that it would not otherwise have achieved. Noblemen and proprietors of landed estates lent their influence to, and openly encouraged its extension. George II. openly supported it, and pronounced it the great mainstay of the church and English connection in Ireland.

Commencing in 1776, the Protestants in the South of Ireland began the formation of the Boyne societies, and shortly afterwards they were armed and paid by the Government. The counties of Cork, Clare, Galway, Kerry, Limerick, and Waterford were overrun with "White Boys" and "Peep of Day-ers," and so numerous were the depredations that the people were afraid to sleep. The Boyne societies were called by different names—"True Blues," "Blazers," "Williamites," "Britons," and "Invincibles."

In the fall of 1795, an incursion was made against the Protestants settled in Tentaraghan, County Armagh, and they were obliged to flee to the hills, where a desultory warfare was kept up for three or four days. At its conclusion a deputation of priests called upon the local magistrates and gave assurances of their desire to restore quiet and tranquillity. The magistrates had sent for military aid, but, relying on the representations made by the priests, withdrew the request for help. After some further consultation it was agreed to bury the hatchet, each party entering into bonds to keep the peace.

This agreement, like pie-crust, was designed to be broken. Three days later, Sept. 21, 1795, an attack was made on an English Protestant settlement, known as the "Diamond," a small village near the line between the counties of Armagh and Tyrone. The "White Boys" suffered an inglorious defeat.

From the evening of the Battle of the Diamond, as it is called, dates the existence of the first Orange lodge, and its membership was restricted to communicants of the Church of England.

Somewhere in the neighborhood of 1820 the British Parliament passed an act prohibiting the existence of any political organization. This was a serious blow to Orangeism. The Duke of York had been elected Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England, and the unfriendly press made good use of their opportunity. A Parliamentary investigation was ordered, which established the fact that a royal relation had refused to join the order until it had purged itself of some oaths and obligations which were regarded as an infraction of the law. The Duke of York resigned in 1821, and there was a vacancy in the office of Grand Master until 1827, when the Duke of Cumberland was elected. Then began a revival in the order.

For nearly half a century Orangeism has been one of the institutions of Canada.

The Orange Society is increasing in strength every day. There are now 1,660 lodges, of which about 1,250 are in Ontario or Upper Canada, in active operation, with a united membership of nearly 200,000. As the population of the Dominion is not over 4,000,000, there is one for about each twenty inhabitants, including women and children.

BRITAIN'S TRIUMPH.

The Lion Swallows the Turkey.

The Chicago Times, commenting upon Beaconsfield's great diplomatic victory in the Berlin congress, says: Confidently as those who have duly studied Anglo-Saxon growth and character may have believed that in the outcome of the Russo-Turkish conflict Great Britain would suffer no loss of national prestige or advantage, nevertheless it may be truly said that the British triumph which concludes the long and fierce controversy is amazing.

The caricature picture-makers might graphically represent this latest contest on the "Eastern question" under the similitude of the Russian bear fighting the Moslem turkey at enormous cost of life and treasure, while at a distance the British lion quietly watches the furious combat. For a time victory inclines to the side of the feebler combatant, and the lion manifests a lazy and indifferent sort of satisfaction. But the tide of battle suddenly turns. The bear seizes the turkey and is proceeding to dismember it. The lion wakes up and begins to roar vehemently. The bear growls savagely. The animals show their teeth and make ready for combat. In the situations presented by the succeeding diplomatic maneuvers, the artist will find the subjects for a series of graphic illustrations, showing the bear rampant, the lion "isolated," with his teeth out and his tail gone, etc., concluding with a congress of national quadrupeds, in which the lion appears with the turkey inside of him, magnanimously tendering to the bear a small fragment of one of the tail-feathers.

At a cost of $1,000,000,000 Russia has played the glorious part of the monkey that drew from the coals the finest lot of chestnuts Great Britain has ever gained.

What Russia has gained is defeat, humiliation, and a loss of prestige. The recarving of Turkey in Europe advantages Austria without cost, but not Russia. The acquisition of a narrow slice of Bessarabia is of no practical value, political or military, while the new compact between Turkey and Britain brings the lion and the bear face to face in Asia, and puts a terminus to the advance of the latter in that direction.

In effect that compact makes Great Britain henceforth the predominating power in Asia. In effect, if not in terms, it is the erection of a British protectorate over Asia Minor, carrying British influence and control from the Dardanelles to Persia. In the probable reality of the future, it is the extension of British India westward and northward through the valley of the Euphrates to the Mediterranean and to Constantinople. Already an English navigation company occupies the Euphrates and monopolizes the commerce of that great Oriental highway. Already the project of an English railway from the Euphrates to the Mediterranean is announced, and the construction of another line, hitherto proposed, connecting the eastern extremities of the Mediterranean and the Black seas, is now virtually assured. The process of Anglicising Asia Minor, politically as well as commercially, is begun.

Moreover, the astonishing outcome of the Berlin congress has given again an emphatic answer to the question whether the Almighty made the Mediterranean sea for an English lake. At any rate, if the Almighty did not make the Mediterranean for English use, events prove that He has had very poor success in carrying forth the purpose of its creation. For more than a century England has commanded it at the middle and one end. And now England commands in the middle and at both ends. The cession of the island of Cyprus to the British renders their control of the Mediterranean, in its whole length and breadth, complete and absolute.

The possession of Cyprus is to England hardly less important than that of Gibraltar. Within a few hours' sail to Port Said, and to Adriatic ports on the east and north, it is admirably situated by nature for a great military and naval rendezvous from which can be commanded the whole Asiatic peninsula and all the routes, both land and water, to India. It is the real key to the Orient, and as such will unquestionably be held and used by the British power.

In fine, the outcome of the Berlin congress is the greatest triumph for Britain that this century has witnessed. It is not surprising that in Russia great indignation should be manifested on account of an outcome which is for Russia worse than her defeat by the Turkish arms would have been. Nor is it surprising that even the English nation should be amazed at this unexpected success of the most audacious programme of national aggrandizement at another nation's cost which an English Premier has ever undertaken.

The Coming Harvest.

The agricultural reports from all quarters are almost duplicates of each other—magnificent weather, abundant yield where the harvest has already been garnered, excellent prospects for the crop yet growing. In Illinois the winter wheat harvest is about over; the grain is of splendid quality and the yield is great. Many of the farmers are selling their new wheat at 75 to 85 cents. There seems to be no expectation that the price will advance. The corn-fields look splendidly, and the farmers are now anxious to sell their remaining stock of last year's corn. The railroads are already beginning to be embarrassed for want of sufficient cars to move the crop. The cotton crop is still reported to be very forward; some estimates place the probable yield at 5,000,000 bales, but it is altogether too soon to make any calculations with safety.—Exchange.

WONDERFUL SHOOTING.

Dr. Carver, the Western Marksman, Astonishing the New Yorkers.

A New York paper gives the following account of some extraordinary shooting by Dr. Carver, the California marksman: A small wooden shed, with a bar in one corner; in front of this a table, on which were four rifles, several boxes of cartridges, and half a dozen score-books. Fifteen or twenty feet in front of this, again, a barrel and a man, the man taking the glass balls out of the barrel and throwing them in the air, and Dr. Carver breaking them with the bullets as fast as they appeared. Somebody was always at work loading a rifle. The marksman could fire them faster than the loader could load. And they were the most remarkable rifles—breech-loaders, of course. When they were opened at the end one cartridge was shoved in after another, till it seemed as if the first one must surely be somewhere up by the muzzle.

Dr. Carver's costume has nothing to do with his marksmanship, and his shooting is simply business. He seldom misses what he fires at. Most of the time was taken up in shooting glass balls, filled with feathers. The balls were of the thinnest film of glass, slightly tinted, so as to be easily seen in the air, and, when they broke, the feathers scattered in every direction. The balls were thrown about twenty feet into the air, and the marksman was not more than fifteen yards from them at any time. It was noticeable that the shot was invariably fired just as the upward impetus of the glass ball ceased, and as it was about to begin its fall. This close glass-ball shooting did not give the idea of remarkable skill, probably on account of the short distance, even though the average was nine hit out of every ten. It looked much more wonderful when the assistant threw the glass balls as far as he could, and Dr. Carver broke each one as it flew, the distance being not less than 100 yards. Several coins were shot, straight through the center, as they whirled in the air.

One of the most astounding of Dr. Carver's feats was his hitting a bell-metal ball when it was almost out of sight, up in the air. The ball is so made that when the bullet strikes it, it rings like a small gong. The assistant threw the ball many times as high as he could throw it, till, sometimes, it could hardly be seen, but every time the marksman brought the sound out of it. He also cut into all the lead-pencils he could induce the spectators to throw into the air, and he fired successfully at a large number of unused cartridges. When the assistant threw two glass balls up at the same time, the rifleman, with a double-barreled weapon, first broke one and then the other, without making a single failure.

The two requisites for good shooting are, of course, an immovable rest for the gun-stock and a steady hand and arm for the barrel. The secret of Dr. Carver's wonderful marksmanship may be in his immense and perfectly-balanced body, which stands firm as a rock. With a steady hand also, such a man may do almost incomprehensible things with a good rifle. His body seems able to withstand any attacks of nervousness: yet, when he misses a shot, he is very likely to miss the two or three succeeding ones, a sure sign that the miss flurries him. Another of his peculiarities is that he aims with both eyes open—so that he can keep an eye on the Indians, he says, while he is firing at a buffalo.

A Seaman's Remedy for Sea-Sickness.

Mediterranean sailors have great faith in the drinking of iron as a remedy for sea-sickness, primitively obtained by scooping off the anchor-rust. At the same time a small pouch, containing roasted salt and flowers of thyme, is tied upon the region of the navel as firmly as can be borne. This is said to lessen and gradually to subdue the antiperistaltic motions of the stomach caused by the rolling of the vessel. This preparation was already known to the ancient Greeks as "thymian salt."

"Whisky is your greatest enemy," said a minister to Deacon Jones. "But," said Jones, "don't the Bible say, Mr. Preacher, that we are to love our enemies?" "Oh, yes, Deacon Jones; but it don't say we are to swallow them."

AUBURN COURIER.

THEODORE REED, Editor.

LETTER FROM HON. T. F. BAYARD.

The Delaware Senator on Free Elections, Electoral Frauds, John Sherman, Etc.

* * * The political occurrences of the last two years, as they are being daily brought to light from their recesses of dishonest concealment, should teach the people of the United States the ever-recurring need of stamping with the severest condemnation everything that tends to weaken and impair the great principle of free and fair elections.

The distinguishing feature—the very safety-valve in our plan of Government—is the means provided, in the process of free elections, for the people to correct their errors and retrieve their political mistakes, whether by revoking misplaced trusts and punishing those who have deceived them, or changing the drift of political measures that have proved hurtful, so that, taught by experience, they may prevent the repetition of the disaster. The great issue of the immediate future is, in my judgment, the reassertion of this idea, and the solemn and resolute determination by our countrymen that elections shall be free, shall be the actual expression of the opinions and wishes of the citizens, and that they shall be honestly and fully acquiesced in by the defeated party.

See to what consequences a different course and theory have led the party called Republican at the last Presidential election, and how close upon the rocks the ship of state was driven, until, thanks to the patriotic and masterly self-control which animated the Democratic party, she was rescued and rendered capable of carrying her precious freight of human happiness and hopes upon new and, let us trust, successful voyages. The underlying idea of our institution—a free choice by the people, and honest and honorable acceptance of the popular verdict as final by all parties—has been wholly disregarded and contemned by the Republican leaders; and, to use the language of one of the most conspicuous and influential among them—Hon. John Sherman, the present Secretary of the Treasury—in a late letter to the Ohio Republican conference, "The only threat that endangers the public weal and safety is the restoration of the Democratic party to power. . . . I cannot but regard its restoration to power as the only danger that really threatens our public peace and safety."

Mr. Sherman is called a Republican, and has often held, and now holds, an office which is coupled with an oath to support the written charter of his country's Government; yet he does not hesitate, in his partisan zeal, to make this open, defiant proclamation that everything is to be subordinated to the one idea of preventing a political organization embracing in its membership a large majority of his fellow-citizens, from again obtaining under law the control of the administration of the constitutional powers of their Government, which for seventy years of unbroken honor and prosperity it had exercised.

The light already thrown by Congressional investigation upon the action of Mr. Sherman and his visiting associates in Louisiana in the fall of 1876—the means and methods then resorted to, and of which they so freely availed themselves to accomplish the one great end of depriving their political opponents and the American people of the just fruits of a laborious and earnest effort by the lawful methods of popular election to obtain reform in administration and relief from local misrule so vile that it was spreading like poison from the unhappy communities, where he and his party had established and kept it throughout all the arteries of our federal system—may now be better comprehended, as they clearly appear in he characters and careers of the Andersons, the Wellses, the Kelloggs, and the Jenkses, that motley and ribald group of political miscreants, male and female, in whose hands Mr. Sherman and his party had placed the wires of low and profligate political management which has converted popular elections into what would seem a horrible farce, were it not so filled with tragical consequences.

The American people have a sure remedy for every political evil in the periodical recourse to a free ballot. Leave that right unimpaired and they will retrieve their errors and correct their mistakes and follies; but, if deprived of it, they will be reduced to the single alternative of perpetual and degrading submission to admitted wrong, or a resort to forcible resistance to rid themselves of oppression.

Mr. Sherman and his allies would close the door of relief through the orderly and lawful change of rules and policies by the honest and honorable acceptance of the results of popular elections, and his brother, the General of the armies, is reported lately to have made the gratuitous but pregnant avowal, at the National Military Academy, that the army of the United States, under his command, would unhesitatingly be employed to sustain the tenure of a President, without regard to the right or justice under law of his title to the office.

The Fourth of July, 1878, and every day between that and the election day in 1880, are the fit and proper days for the American people to consider what answer should be given at the polls to such propositions—for the calm and deliberate contemplation of such ideas, so as to shape their issues in the simple integrity and manly spirit of 1776. Let them proclaim as their resolves:

1. That they will have free elections in all the States, undisturbed and unawed by Federal interference, civil or military.

2. The verdict of the people rendered at the polls shall be faithfully recorded, and shall be accepted and obeyed.

3. That the men or the party who shall stand in the way of these resolves shall be withered by the wrath of an earnest and honest people, who love civil liberty as enshrined in Republican institutions, and intend to preserve it for themselves and their posterity.

The issue is not less vital than this, and until it shall have been settled definitely in accordance with those resolves, and so unmistakably that no man shall venture to question or gainsay them, all other questions, however interesting, may wisely be postponed.

It is now the great essential in support of which not only every Democrat but all just-minded and conservative citizens of every party must rally; and when it has been secured then we may afford to differ and array ourselves at will upon questions of political economy, whose importance I fully recognize, but which pale into insignificance before the pressing and primary questions. Shall our elections be free, and shall their results be acquiesced in and obeyed by all? Respectfully yours,

T. F. BAYARD.

"Mexicanization."

"I thank thee for teaching me that word," said Shakspeare's Gratiano to the Hebrew. The Republican cry of "Mexicanization" is ended, but the Republican disposition toward Mexicanization is not. The Republican party stands to-day committed to a policy of Mexicanization, as it has been the party of Mexicanization for more than a decade of peace. What is Mexicanization? Is it not the placing the army above the law? Is it not the rule of the sword, even in time of peace? Is it not the control of force and not the sway of law? Is it not placing the musket over the ballot? Is it not making Government bayonets, superior bayonets, the title to office? Is it not making the authority of the legislative power dependent upon the number of uniformed men behind it? All these things we have seen in that sunny but unhappy land of revolutions called the Mexican republic. All these things we have also seen in the sunny half of our own republic under the Republican regime. Men who had been elected Governors have been bayoneted out of office to make room for men who hadn't. Legislatures the people had chosen have been forced by Federal muskets to abandon the legislative halls to which the people chose them, to permit Government guns to make laws for free States. All this in time of peace. This is Mexicanization.

On assuming the Presidency Mr. Hayes withdrew the rule of the Federal army from the States where it held sway. Each Republican convention that has met since that time has confronted the question, whether or not it approved such withdrawal. Not a Republican convention has indorsed that conduct. Last year it may have been too soon to expect a party to approve a policy it had so pertinaciously fought, but time should have so far soothed the hatreds that in 1878 a Republican State convention might be found to approve a course so eminently just, constitutional and peaceful; but not one is found. Some States, like Pennsylvania and Michigan, condemn that policy, known as the Southern policy, most severely by silence touching it. That is emphatically indorsing Mexicanization.

The Republican party is bitterly opposed to a policy that "brought peace and harmony" to the South, a policy "constitutional and pacific." Let the voters choose between such a policy and Mexicanization.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Slippery Sherman.

We print below the concluding portion of Congressman Potter's last letter to John Sherman:

As to the testimony of intimidation in the parishes of East and West Felicians proposed, in neither of these parishes did the election officers make any protests with the returns, and, as received by the Returning Board, the returns of the election of 1876 in those parishes stood absolutely without objection. Afterward Anderson, as Supervisor of East, and Weber as Supervisor of West Felicians, undertook to furnish protests upon which the Returning Board might reject the vote of these parishes. It is claimed they did this without cause, solely for political purposes, and because of political promises, and it is in evidence that they have themselves confessed this. It is also claimed that the fact that there was not a Republican vote cast in certain sections which had theretofore been largely Republican was the result of a conspiracy to withhold the Republican vote there in order to afford a pretense for claiming that result as obtained by intimidation, and thereby furnish ground for the rejection of those parishes.

The committee have not considered that the evidence you propose (and which has been taken by former committees) of certain alleged murders, whippings, and raidings not known to Weber or Anderson, not connected with the alleged conspiracy, and upon which neither they nor the parties engaged in the conspiracy acted, could have a bearing upon these questions, nor upon the action of the Returning Board on their protests, and they therefore decided not to take the same. Where, in the course of the examination, the witnesses (T. H. Jenks, Pitkin, and Weber) have referred to intimidation in these parishes, it has been incidentally, or as bearing upon the conspiracy. Should it later appear that the specific acts to which you refer have any bearing upon the conspiracy, or upon the good faith of Weber or Anderson, or of the Returning Board in respect of their protests, the committee will then consider the practicability of taking testimony, and that in contradiction of it, or of permitting you to use instead the reports of such testimony taken before the former committees. Respectfully, your obedient servant,

CLARKSON N. POTTER, Chairman.

To the Hon. John Sherman.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

ONE hundred parts of Indian corn contain 14 parts water, 11 parts nitrogenous matter, 64.7 of starch, 0.4 of sugar, 8.1 of fat and 1.7 of salts.

SIR HENRY THOMPSON has shown how, by a careful use of the micraphone, diseased bone, bullets, or other foreign substances can be detected in the human body.

PROF. FRANCESCO ROSSETTI, of the Academy of Science, Venice, has issued a pamphlet entitled "Sul Telefoni Senza Lamine," in which he shows how a telephone can be constructed without a diaphragm.

THE German telegraph office is employing the telephone very extensively; sixty-eight stations are already provided with this instrument, forty-one others will have it in a few weeks, and one hundred and eleven more before the end of the year; thus there will be then a total of two hundred and twenty telephone stations in Germany.

BEFORE administering chloroform, Prof. Occhin causes the patient to inspire ammonia, and it is said that he has obviated the danger of subjecting persons suffering from heart disease to the influence of this anæsthetic. The theory is that the stimulating property of the ammonia on the nervous and vascular system counteracts the depressing action of the chloroform.

IN the late Russian campaign, 355 surgeons, out of a total of 2,839, have died, being equal to about 12½ per cent. This mortality is a much larger proportion than that of the combatant officers. The only instance on record where the proportion of deaths among the combatant officers was larger than that of the surgeons was in the Prussian army during the Franco-Prussian war in 1870-'71.

A FRENCH agricultural paper announces the discovery of an extremely simple and cheap means to protect houses from being struck by lightning. This consists merely of bundles of straw attached to sticks or broom-handles, and placed on the roofs of houses in an upright position. The first trial of this simple apparatus were made at Tarbes (Hautes Pyrenees), by some intelligent agriculturists, and results were so satisfactory that soon after eighteen Communes of the Tarbes district provided all their houses with these bundles of straw, and there have been no accidents from lightning since.

IN the English language there are about 16,000 words suitable for telegraphic purposes; French, German, Latin, Hindustani, and Italian have together at least 50,000 of a safe telegraphic character. There are, therefore, about 66,000 words which merchants and others can use without artificial or fictitious combination. Sir James Anderson advocates the adoption of an authorized code of 50,000 words from the six languages mentioned, for which the single charge would be made, believing that these would be sufficient for the requirements of commerce; and if more were needed they might fairly be charged extra.

THE RIGHT OF REVOLUTION.

When Solomon, the rich and proud monarch of the Hebrew commonwealth, was dead, his son Rehoboam came to the throne. The people at that time, and for years previous, had grown weary under the load of a burdensome and unjust taxation. Immediately succeeding Solomon's death the leading men of the nation, realizing the situation, sent to Egypt and recalled Jeroboam to administer the affairs of the Government. But, if possible, to avoid a revolution, the representatives of the people and Jeroboam came to Rehoboam, and petitioned for an abatement of taxes, because they had borne a heavy yoke, but the King haughtily sent them away, saying if they received hard usage from his father, they might expect rougher treatment from him. Then ten-twelfths of the people revolted, founding a new nation, and the once-powerful Hebrew nation dwindled to two small tribes. Excessive and burdensome taxation under the Roman empire, while it did not result in immediate revolution, nevertheless, weakened the nation; reduced to abject poverty a large class of her enterprising citizens; ruined the agriculture of the Roman provinces, and the rulers were obliged to forgive debts, and remit taxes which the people were utterly incapable of paying. Every branch of commercial industry was affected by the severity of the law. The merchant, the banker, the manufacturer, the mechanic, and even the most obscure retailer of a sequestered village, were obliged to admit the officers of the revenue into the partnership of their gain, in order to avoid a confiscation of their property by the levy of exorbitant taxes, and the historian Zosimus laments that the approach of the tax levy was announced by the tears and terrors of the citizens, who were often compelled to embrace the most abhorred and unnatural methods of procuring the sum at which their property had been assessed. As a result of this system of excessive taxation, an exemption of taxes was granted in favor of 330,000 acres of uncultivated and unproductive land in the once fertile and happy province of Campagna, the scene of the early victories, and delicious retirements of the citizens of Rome, now rendered a barren waste, and its once-happy owners utterly impoverished by excessive and overburdensome taxation.

Who is not sufficiently acquainted with early American history to realize the fact that American free government and institutions were born of excessive taxation; and, in the judgment of the fathers of our republic, the end sought justified the means, and, when British teas were thrown into Boston harbor all England was aroused, and English troops were sent, with all possible haste, to Boston to crush the mob. Gen. Washington became the leader of that mob, and when, under his leadership, the yeomanry of America vindicated the righteousness of their cause, who dares decry against that revolution.

Every individual possesses the inherent right to revolt against an oppressive government. Communities are but an aggregation of individuals, hence this inherent right to revolution on the part of communities; and, in the eyes of the nations and according to and in harmony with international law, success on the part of those who revolt against their government—however small their beginning may have been—entitles them to the recognition of the great powers of earth.

The fundamental principles upon which our fathers founded this government were: Justice and equity toward all the people—no classes nor casts. Principle, rather than personal ambition, was the mainspring and prompting motive with them, and all thought of private advancement or renown was merged in a spirit of community and social union; but how widely our Government has departed from this original idea of protection to her citizens, the freedom and greatest degree of happiness toward all, we will now consider.

The events of our sanguinary civil war are yet too fresh upon our memories to need a recital, but, as terrible and bloody as it was, its evils were in no measure to be compared with the events which followed. During the war numberless hosts of hitherto-impecunious men, bummer politicians, and parasites upon the community obtained license to barter and trade within the army lines, and not infrequently were the officers of our armies made partners in their nefarious schemes, and army raids made into the enemy's country to capture cotton and other valuable property, and hundreds and thousands of our noble soldiers sacrificed in these abominable schemes of speculation. The result was, the war was needlessly prolonged, to enable this vast horde of parasites to fill their pockets with their ill-gotten gains. Immediately upon the close of the war, this shoddy aristocracy developed a style and extravagance in living hitherto unknown in this country, and, like epidemics in disease, it infected, to a large extent, the entire body politic. During the canvass for elections which immediately followed the closing of the war, these same persons in large numbers stood for office, and were returned to our State Legislatures and to Congress, and many came into the possession of offices of both the National and State Governments, and the legislation which followed has only been in the interest of capital and against labor and the general industries of the country. While a large portion of the people have contended and maintained it to be the duty of Government to issue an increased amount of Government currency (greenbacks), and proclaim it the "money of the realm," making it legal tender for all dues public and private, and with it to redeem all the outstanding indebtedness of the country, the Shylocks of London, Amsterdam and Wall street have thrown up their hands in holy horror, at the same time filling the palms of our Congressmen and officers high in the Government with glistening gold; and, in consequence, the halls of Congress have resounded with the eloquence of the representatives of the money power, which met a hearty response from the Presidents and their Cabinet officers, that such an act would be deemed a virtual repudiation, and was clearly unconstitutional. They have told us from the stump and from the forum, yes, and their hired lackeys clad in clergymen's vestments have proclaimed from the pulpit and in the lecture room, that the issuance of greenbacks—the nation's money—was simply a war measure, a necessity at the time for carrying on the war, and, that being past, they should now be retired and we should return to an exclusive hard-money currency.

Right here let me propound one or two interrogatories and call upon the representatives of the Shylocks for answers:

1. If the issuing of greenbacks was simply a war measure, and not intended to remain as the permanent financial policy of the Government, was not the creating of our bonded indebtedness also a war measure and a necessity absolute to the carrying on of the war?

2. If—the war being over—the occasion no longer exists for allowing the further issuance and circulation of the greenback currency, why does not the same argument equally apply to the bonded indebtedness of the country?

3. If the Government has the right, and can, in justice to its own subjects, repudiate its currency obligations, upon which basis the real values throughout the country were established, and thus render bankrupt nineteen-twentieths of the enterprising business men of our country—as it has done—has it not the right, and could it not with equal justice repudiate at least the interest on its bonded indebtedness? And can there be any justice in longer permitting such a vast amount of wealth to be held in this country entirely exempt from taxation? No one will deny that the motive which prompted the Government to declare its bonds non-taxable was to induce capitalists to invest in them freely to aid the Government in carrying on the war. The war is long since over, and that emergency has passed—and, according to their own logic, this vast amount of wealth should now be compelled to pay its proportion of revenue the same as other money is taxed. A sewing woman or a day laborer who, by hard work and frugal living, have saved their few hundred dollars and deposited it for safe-keeping in a bank are compelled to pay exorbitant taxes to their respective governments, municipal, county, State, and national, while the rich nabobs, with millions of United States bonds in their safe-keeping, do not contribute 1 cent of revenue. Is this right? Is there any justice or equity in this? Surely none. We are told that the distressing hard times under which the country is groaning are the result of over-production. There never was a greater fallacy; and we have too great faith in the average intelligence of Americans to believe that they will accept this theory. The only over-production there has ever been in this country has been the over-production of bankrupt debtors, and rendered so by the base and corrupt financial policy of the Government; and the capitalist looks quietly on, viewing the financial wrecks scattered all around him, and says: "My millions are invested in United States bonds. The Government pays me a stated income, while I have no risks to run and am entirely exempt from taxation. Labor must pay the taxes, support the revenues. What care I for the people? I will not exchange my bonds for money and run the risk of business ventures, and at the same time be compelled to contribute to the revenues of my country." When we come to discuss this matter in all its detail and practical bearings and effects upon the middle and lower classes of our country, it fairly makes the blood curdle in our veins. And can the free American citizen longer submit to so gross injustice? Is all this in harmony with the declaration of principles made by the founders of our Government? Rather is it not the schooling of tyranny, foreboding the establishment of our Government upon the basis of an aristocracy of wealth and the enslavement of the laboring classes?

We now return to our first proposition—revolution. The end sought justifies the means necessarily employed.

Having thus cursorily reviewed our national affairs, what is the duty of every free American voter? It is not to immediately rise in armed rebellion against the Government, and if possible overthrow it, for history teaches us that a majority of such revolutions bring to the surface men of great executive ability, but devoid of moral sense; and frequently the remedy is worse than the disease. But it is the duty of every free American citizen to seize hold of and maintain all those rights guaranteed to him under the constitution of our common country, and before a resort to arms exhaust all constitutional means for correcting the existing evils which are resting so heavily upon us and crushing out the life blood of our nation. The self-interest of every retail merchant, manufacturer, mechanic, professional man, all middlemen and day laborers throughout this land, calls upon him and appeal to his better judgment in this behalf. And our duty to our fellow-men, which is a higher and holier motive, should prompt us to band together as the heart of one man, and under the constitution, and agreeably with its letter and spirit, immediately correct the errors we have considered. Failing in this attempt, then, rather than submit supinely to the enthrallment of a worse than African slavery, it would be the bounden duty of labor to array itself against capital and appeal to the arbitrament of the sword and the God of Justice for vindication.

It is a mistake to assume that any specific form of government must necessarily last forever; the institution is indicative of a certain stage of civilization, and for the time being is adapted to a particular phase of human development, and when the great mass of the people have developed to a plane beyond that recognized by the Government it is no longer essential to the well-being of the people. All tyranny springs out of a bad state of government; thus, as civilization advances, governments as such decay. In a government desirous of keeping pace with the progress of civilization all legislation should be with the view of the greatest happiness to the greatest number; and any government which encourages legislation short of this is sure to lose its hold upon the people, and American legislators have got to learn that nothing but evil will result from unequal class-legislation. So soon as a republican or democratic government, through its legislative acts, passes laws which are inimical to the wants and absolute needs of the great majority of its citizens, so surely does it sound its own death-knell. Our legislators must be taught to obey the law of equal freedom. If a government forcibly takes the money of one of its citizens for its support and voluntarily releases another of its citizens from any obligation to contribute to the revenue, it becomes thereby class legislation, and is inimical to the welfare of its citizens, and is no longer entitled to the support of that large class who are compelled to support its revenues; and, on the other hand, that class who do not contribute to the revenues of the government in equity are not in the least entitled to its protection; and, by releasing one subject from the payment of taxes and compelling another subject to contribute, it is guilty of infringing on the rights it ought to maintain, and the government becomes an aggressor instead of a protector.

And in the matter of currency laws all governments are at fault. Laws interfering with the currency regulations, either forbidding the issue, or to enforce the receipt of certain notes or coin in return for other commodities, infringe on the right to exchange. It prevents trades which would otherwise have been made, or compels exchanges which would not have been made, and therefore violates the law of equal freedom. The matter of currency, or monetary arrangements, of any community, is dependent upon the morality of the people. If the great mass of the people are morally corrupt, dishonest, nothing but coin can circulate as currency, and all business transactions will be confined strictly to this basis, and an exchange of metal with each business transaction. And whenever a government, or its legislature, adheres persistently to an exclusive metallic currency, it is because the law-makers and government officers have become so thoroughly corrupt at heart as to measure the moral sense of the entire people by their own standard. On the other hand, so long as the law-making and administrative powers of the government are conscious of being exercised and influenced by a high degree of moral sense, so long are notes and promises to pay the principal currency of the country. In fact, "a want of confidence," as we often hear it expressed in hard times, simply means a corrupt government and coin money. On the other hand, good times are the result of a government whose laws are enacted and administered by representatives of the people who discard selfish ends and aims, and in all their acts only consult the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number.

At no period in the history of our Government have our free democratic institutions been in so great peril as at the present time. During these five long and wearisome years of distressingly hard times our Government has persistently pursued a course terribly fatal to all the business industries of the country—the effect of which has been to render bankrupt almost the entire business population, rendering them unable to give employment to our mechanics and laborers, and, to-day, millions of so-called tramps are perambulating the country in search of labor to procure food. And yet the Government totally ignores this lamentable condition of our affairs, and the money kings say: not until confidence is restored will we invest in business enterprises that will give the people employment, and those high in government are still harping upon the evidences of better times. Is it any indication of prosperity, either present or prospective, when we see a man and his family of eight or ten sons all out of employment and lounging about their home? Precisely is this the condition of our country, with almost the entire business portion of its population financially ruined, and nine-tenths of our laboring population without visible means of support for themselves and families. It is high time that the American people of all classes should look these facts square in the face. And I warn the moneyed aristocracy of America that, if they do not heed the admonitions in time, and lend their influence to correct the legislation of the country, and make it conform more to the interests of the masses, the threatening storm will burst upon them with all its fury, in which event they can blame none but themselves; let them remember that the law of compensation holds good throughout all the realms of nature, for, as a man soweth, so shall he also reap.

Let our legislators and men in high authority and the moneyed power which at present controls them all remember that by trespassing upon the claims of others men hurt themselves also; the reaction comes sooner or later, it is sure to follow. It is a trite remark that revolutions never go backward; with each revolution the law of development has something to do. The result of our civil war was the evolving of a higher degree of civilization in America, for, whatever others may think to the contrary, the great underlying motive which prompted the immense sacrifice of treasure and life of the people of the Northern States during "the war" was the emancipation of the African slave and his elevation to citizenship, and the result was in favor of the greatest happiness to the greatest number.

The proud republic of Rome suffered on account of class legislation and its oppression of the poor, and, in the years 238, 324 and 336 of the Christian era, partial insurrections announced the condition of a class bound up with all the wants of ordinary life, but disinherited of all the advantages of citizens of the republic. The result was finally that the Senate was obliged to support them by sending as far as Sicily for wheat, to deliver to them either gratis or at a mere nominal price. From the year 387 to the year 412, during a period of twenty-five years, the republic of Rome passed through the same troubles we are experiencing to-day, which culminated with the entire abolition of debts, and the prohibition to exact any interest. All governments, whatever be their form, contain within themselves germs of life which make their strength, and germs of dissolution which must some day lead to their ruin; and, so long as the law-making power preserves its virtues and its patriotism, the elements of prosperity predominate, but so soon as it begins to degenerate, then the causes of disturbance get the upper hand and shake the edifice.

In view of these facts, and to avert existing evils, and those still worse that are prospective, it is the bounden duty of Americans—regardless of old party lines—to make common cause in effecting at the polls—armed with the free ballot—an immediate, thorough and effective revolution of our Government; and let us do it, before it be for ever too late; elect men to our State Legislatures and to Congress who will represent the people, and, as servants of the people, enact laws for the equal protection of all; elect men who will restore to the country that species of money that was once good enough to pay our soldiers for fighting to preserve the nation intact; elect men who will obey the behests of the people, and at once repeal all acts of class legislation, and compel the rich as well as the poor to contribute to the revenues of our Government; then we shall find "confidence restored," all the industries of our country will revive, willing hands will find plenty of labor and at remunerative wages, and the wants of those millions who are now anxiously inquiring what shall we do for bread will be met; avenues of trade will be opened to the enterprising business men of the country whose efforts at present are paralyzed, and our country once more will start out upon the highway of prosperity.

C. HOLLAND.

FARMERS, READ.

A Change of Ownership of the Soil Advocated—The Creation of a Class of Land-Owners on the One Hand, and of Tenant Farmers on the Other.

The following significant article recently appeared in the editorial columns of one of the leading Republican daily journals of New York city, and one of the ablest organs of the bondholders' ring in the East. We ask every farmer under whose eye this paper may fall to give it a careful and attentive perusal:

Complaints are rife in all quarters that capital is idle and unproductive. The means of investing money safely and profitably are now very much restricted. Scarcely a railroad in the country is beyond suspicion of financial weakness; no manufacturing business offers inducements to investors, and merchandise is equally unattractive. At the same time agriculture, our most safe, steady and remunerative industry, languishes for want of means to give it life and action. What are the reasons that capitalists, on one hand, entirely neglect agricultural investments, and that farmers, on the other hand, suffer from want of active capital to cultivate their land in such a way as to make it most productive? No capitalist will loan money on mortgage of farm property, for one reason among others, that, should the property come into his hands in default of payment, it would be completely useless to him, if not a costly burden on his hands. At the same time farmers plow undrained fields, feed the poorest kinds of stock, cultivate unfertile soil, and work with the hands instead of with machines and steam engines, being—to use an expressive, well-understood term—"land poor." It is very plain to one who has money to invest that if the owner of a farm, offered as security for a loan, can scrape but a poor living from his farm, there is more than ordinary risk that he cannot meet the burdens of interest on borrowed money, or be prepared to repay the loan when it comes due. This is a very effective reason why such loans are difficult or impossible to procure.

The trouble at the bottom of all this SPRINGS FROM OUR SYSTEM OF OWNERSHIP OF LAND. Heretofore this has been a matter of pride with our agricultural class. To own the farm free from incumbrance has been a matter for congratulation, and a basis for a comfortable independence. But things are not as they used to be. We have changed all that. Years back the farmer and his wife dressed in homespun, and his children helped in the farm work. There was a sort of sturdy yeomanship, industrious content, and thrift; with no artificial wants, and few needs for money except to pay the light taxes and buy the few necessaries that were not raised on the farm. There were no dressing bills to meet at the year's end; no costly modern improvement about the farm or homestead, and the farmer never troubled himself about how the capitalist felt about making loans. Then to own a piece of land was to have a farm, and the only floating or active capital needed to cultivate it was the muscles of the farmer and his industrious family. Then to "go West" was synonymous with entering a promised land of plenty and wealth. Now the possession of a piece of land brings a man face to face with poverty. As he views his possessions he feels how hopeless he is without a few hundreds or thousands of dollars. The ancient ax and hoe, reaping-hook and flail, which sufficed our forefathers, are now substituted by the steel plow, the costly team, mower, reaper, thrashing machines, and all the other expensive accessories of the farmstead. A crowd of new wants meet the new or young farmer at the outset of his career, and, as the means to purchase these must be borrowed, a load of debt at once weighs him down and clogs and hobbles him. Now, too, our taxes are a very serious incumbrance on the profit of the farm. Comfort and happiness are fled from the farmer's home, and care and anxiety take their place. Formerly, farmers worked hard, but borrowed no trouble on that or any other account; now they are downtrodden and worried, and worry is a far heavier burden than work. How to procure money to make ends meet is the burden of their minds, and nothing comes to ease it. This is the general condition of things among those who cultivate the soil. Is there a way of deliverance?

THERE SEEMS TO BE BUT ONE REMEDY, AND THAT IS A SLOW ONE, AND ONE NOT IMMEDIATELY EFFECTIVE. TO REACH IT, BOTH FARMERS AND CAPITALISTS NEED TO BE EDUCATED TO IT, BUT IT SEEMS TO BE INEVITABLE THAT IT MUST COME ABOUT IN COURSE OF TIME. IT IS A CHANGE OF OWNERSHIP OF THE SOIL, AND THE CREATION OF A CLASS OF LAND-OWNERS ON THE ONE HAND, AND TENANT-FARMERS ON THE OTHER. SOMETHING SIMILAR, IN BOTH CASES, TO WHAT HAS LONG EXISTED, AND NOW EXISTS, IN THE OLDER COUNTRIES OF EUROPE, and similar also to a system that is common in our own State of California. Those farmers who are land poor must sell, and become tenants in place of owners of the soil. The hoarded idle capital must be invested in these lands and turned over to the poor farmers, who will at once be set upon their feet; not to go and loaf about towns and villages spending their money while it may last, but to buy with this money stock, fertilizers, implements and machines, and go to work to cultivate the soil profitably. Instead of their money being sunk and dead in unproductive acres, it will be invested in cows, sheep, swine of improved breeds, in guano and fertilizers, by which the crops will be doubled or trebled. It will thus become active and productive, and capable of doubling itself within the year. The farmer will be relieved from the burden of a bad investment, on which he now makes no interest, and his money will be placed where it will do the most good. He will at once be lifted from poverty to financial ease, and, in place of an unsalable farm, he will have to show for his money some property that will realize all that it is worth at a public sale at twenty-four hours' notice. VERY MUCH MORE THAN THIS IS IMPLIED IN THIS CHANGE that is so obvious to the practical man that it need not be particularized.

The owners of money, now unproductive, would by thus investing their capital become possessed of real estate of the most valuable and productive kind. In place of an anxious, speculative business, full of risk, they would have one of an easy, agreeable character, which would draw them, at least part of the year, to the country to care for their property, in the midst of rural pursuits and pleasures. The improvement of their land by draining, building, fencing and clearing would increase it in value and largely add to its productive capacity. Their money thus invested would find employment for themselves, as well as set to work many men now only half employed. In every way there would be gain. Our rural social system would be improved; the soil would be made largely more productive, and money that now lies idle, folded and hidden in a napkin, as it were, would be put into circulation, and, giving life to labor, would increase itself. It would in fact be "twice blessed," blessing "him that gives and him that takes," and would fulfil its proper work in the social economy. It would be attracted toward agriculture as the safest investment, and farmers would be relieved from what is now the source of bitter complaints, viz.: that capital avoids them.

IT IS VERY CERTAIN THAT AMERICAN AGRICULTURE IS UPON THE EVE OF SERIOUS CHANGES, and of great improvements. This must be, for it cannot go back and it cannot stay where it is. The greatest industry of the country cannot remain in an unprofitable and unsatisfactory condition, nor can it long remain without the use of adequate capital to invigorate it and give it full scope. Thousands of persons now idle look to it for employment, and, if there were farms to rent, there would be plenty of tenants for them. EVERYTHING SEEMS RIPE FOR THE CHANGE. Half the farms in the country are ready to be sold if buyers only appear, and hundreds that can now be bought for less than their value twenty or thirty years ago need only some judicious outlay to make them as productive as ever. Few farmers can hope to provide their sons with farms of their own, and there is no place for these young men in the overcrowded cities. But to stock a rented farm is not so difficult a matter for a father intent on starting a son in life. This would be easy to do if the farm could be rented on a long and satisfactory lease. But, before this can be done, the owner of the land must hold it as a permanent investment, and not as property to be offered for sale to the first comer. When farm land is held by the owners, there is some probability, if not certainty, that it will be permanently improved, and then such property will be eagerly sought for by tenants who will be able and willing to rent it on long leases, and cultivate it in a more productive and profitable manner than farms are now worked. And then will begin a new era in American agriculture, and one that seems very desirable.

Paper Money.

All that is practical in the proposition to make and use legal-tender paper money exclusively is contained in a nutshell, and the great advantages to accrue from the system are too apparent to admit of a moment's doubt. Look at a few facts:

1. The people must use paper currency. Everybody knows that.

2. Specie-basis bank notes are expensive to the people and unsafe. History does not show a single instance of such a system in any country or age but it failed and brought misery and distress upon the people. Every intelligent person knows that.

3. Bank notes have no legal quality of money. They cannot be used to pay debts except at the option of the creditor. For that reason they can be shaved and discounted by the money changers when they combine to do so. Their credit rests wholly upon the promise of redemption in coin, which is an impossible thing to do, as all history testifies. Every person will recognize these facts.

4. Legal-tender Government paper money will pay debts at face. It will pay taxes at face. Its credit is sustained by the Government that makes it a legal tender by the fiat of law. It is good as long as the Government endures, and no paper, whether bank note, bond, mortgage, deed or any other contract or credit, can last longer than that. None other has ever lasted half so long. Men can sleep on their Government money with no fear that it will fail or will vary in its debt-paying power. Banks may go up or down; railroads may prosper or go into bankruptcy; individuals or corporations may flourish or flounder—it makes no difference whatever with the Government paper money. It will last as long as the flag floats, and when that is lost all is lost.

5. It is the best, and what can be better than the best? It is the cheapest, and what can be cheaper than the cheapest?

6. It can be issued and got into circulation without being borrowed and consequently without paying interest. Bank notes cannot be issued except some man will borrow them from the bank and pay interest upon his note left with the bank in place of them. Government money can be issued in the payment of Government debts and expenses to any amount required, and may float from hand to hand exchanging commodities and paying debts indefinitely and no man be taxed a cent of interest to get them afloat.

7. Clothed with all the legal qualities of coin for the payment of all debts and receivable by the Government alike with coin for all purposes, it will be par with coin and answer all the practical purposes of money. What more can any money do?—Indianapolis Sun.

Why Ben Wade Was No Longer Required in Public Life by His Party.

VICE PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
WASHINGTON, Dec. 18, 1867.

MY DEAR SIR: Yours of the 8th instant is received, and I most cordially agree with every word and sentence of it. I am for the laboring portion of our people. The rich can take care of themselves. While I must scrupulously live up to all the contracts of the Government and fight the bondholder as resolutely when he undertakes to get more than the pound of flesh. We never agreed to pay the five-twenties in gold, no man can find it in the bond, and I never will consent to have one payment for the bondholder and another for the people. It would sink any party, and it ought to. To talk of specie payments or a return to specie under present circumstances is to talk like a fool. It would destroy the country as effectually as a fire, and any contraction of the currency at this time is about as bad. But I have not time to give my ideas in full. Yours truly,

BENJ. F. WADE.

Democratic Congressional Convention.

Notice is hereby given that a delegate convention of the Democrats of the 13th Congressional district, and all others in said district who subscribe to the principles enumerated through the Democratic state platform, adopted at Indianapolis on the 23nd of last February, will be held at Kendalville, Indiana, on Tuesday August 20th, 1878, at 10 o'clock H. M., for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Congress, and for the transaction of such other business as may be presented. In accordance with the basis of representation heretofore established, the several counties are entitled to send the following number of delegates to said convention. DeKalb, 26; LaGrange, 12; Elkhart, 34, Marshall, 28; Kosciusko, 27; Noble, 27 and Steuben, 8.

By authority of the Congressional Central Committee.

CHAS. A. O. McCLELLAN,
Chairman.

The Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald says: "Mr. Davis' Mississippi City speech is an out-spoken, flat-footed, unmistakable, unnecessary and unwise secession speech."

There is likely to be a quarrel between the Democrats and Greenbackers as to which party shall have the "honor" of introducing Dan Voorhees to a DeKalb county audience.—Waterloo Press

Not at all, the Democratic party of this county are not inclined to be selfish; if the Greenback men of the county regard Daniel as being in sympathy with the doctrines advocated by them, it is their duty to indorse him, and it is the duty of democrats to appreciate all efforts to change the present bankrupting policy dictated by the bond-holding thieves of New York, and carried out by addle-pated Sherman.

The Albion New Era calls the political editor of the Indianapolis Sentinel, a "scribbler," would that we were a scribbler of as much ability as a ready writer. Bro. Prickett is troubled because Voorhees is a "bigger man" than Morton was, that's all. Oliver P. certainly was the shrewdest political trickster and campaign manipulator that has figured in American politics for years, but as to his being a great statesman and patriot is a claim which we are not so ready to acknowledge. His popularity in the Republican party was due to his ability to pull the wires that gave political action to jumping-jack Grant, rather than his love of patriotism, or desire for honest government.

The Greenbackers of the 13th Congressional District in convention assembled adopted the following resolutions:

RESOLVED, 1st, That we proclaim the right and duty of the United States Government to create money in sufficient quantity both to do the business of the country and to pay all national indebtedness, and that the greenback currency, the same as gold and silver money, should be full legal tender for all debts both public and private.

2nd. We are in favor of the repeal of the national bank law.

3d. We are in favor of the repeal of the resumption act.

4th. We are in favor of calling in all interest-bearing obligations of the United States, and paying them according to the original contract at the earliest practicable date.

Central Committee Meeting.

Pursuant to call the Democratic Central Committee of DeKalb county met at the COURIER office on last Saturday.

The meeting was called to order by W. H. Dills, who suggested S. S. Shutt as temporary chairman.

The meeting then proceeded to the election of a chairman of the County Central Committee, Mr. Wm. Blair having received a majority of all votes cast was declared elected.

On motion Theodore Reed was appointed Secretary of the meeting.

After disposing of all the business before the meeting, the chairman, members of the committee and Democrats present offered such suggestions as were thought of importance, and the Committee adjourned to meet on call of the chairman.

Shutt's a Boss

From the Newville letter published in the Waterloo Press of last week, we clip the following which we consider very complimentary to Mr. Shutt, our popular candidate for Representative, coming as it does from a Republican source: "Mr. Shutt has many warm personal friends, and his energy and industry when a member, four years ago, will give him popularity, and unless he is checkmated with a good man we may expected to see him elected, and another vote gained for United States Senator, redistricting the State, &c." That's the kind of political thunder that tends to electrify the body-politic, and encourage the selection of men to represent the people who command the respect of all, such a man is Mr. S. S. Shutt who not only has the confidence of his own party, but is acknowledged by both the opposing parties as being a candidate worthy of the suffrages of the people. He will be elected beyond a doubt.

Indian Troubles.

The following taken from the editorial columns of the Warsaw Republican ought to be good authority on the subject of the continuous Indian outrages: "Commissioner Hayt has unearthed an almost incredible amount of fraud and perjury among the Dakota Indian agencies. Dr. Livingston of the Crow creek agency, is condemned by the most overwhelming testimony, as he was taken unawares and had no opportunity to hide his guilt. He had accumulated an immense fortune since 1870, had an interest in three Nevada silver mines, owns two cattle ranches, and a hotel which was regularly supplied with food and vegetables from the agency. Such agents are the cause of almost every Indian outbreak." As "open confession is good for the soul," the writer of the above should have continued by adding the names and fraudulent transactions of the rest of the Indian agents who have been serving by Republican appointments, and then added a few suggestions as to the missionary work among the Indians. There is certainly no lack of material for an article of considerable length upon that subject. What little the Indians get that is intended for them, is stolen by the agent while the Indian is engaged in prayer with the missionary. Stealings divided by 2.

Hard vs. Soft Money.

As proof that the Republican party of Indiana are following the lead of spike-tail "Ben," the "loony" who talks "fiat" money and greenback "idiots," and expects to represent Indiana in the United States Senate in the event of a Republican State Legislature, we submit a few items taken from the proceedings of the Republican convention held in Fort Wayne last Saturday. The only financial plank in the platform submitted by the committee on resolutions is as follows:

"That we favor the free coinage of the bullion of our country as a measure favorable to resumption, and calculated to give a healthy stimulant to our business interests."

It willbe observed that the reference to the financial question was the demand for the "free coinage of the bullion of ours our country" as a "measure favorable to resumption." Pending the adoption of the above resolution Mr. Stratton offered the following substitute with a view to capturing the greenbackers, and seducing them into voting with a hard-money-gold-resumption party.

"That we oppose the abandonment of the greenback currency of the country, and are in favor of a sound and staple currency of gold, silver and paper.

That we favor the issuance of enough of the same by the general government, to supply the legitimate demand of the people."

Mr. Ninde, one of committee on resolutions said that the committee had been somewhat at a loss to know what kind of a financial resolution to report, but as THE RECOGNIZED POLICY OF THE PARTY AND THE ADMINISTRATION IS A HARD MONEY AND SPEEDY RESUMPTION ONE, the resolution was drawn in accordance with this settled policy.

Judge Taylor opposed Mr. Stratton's amendment. The Judge thought the government had no power to issue paper money except in times of war or in the stress of a storm, and that it was not one of the functions of government to furnish a circulating medium. The power of increasing or decreasing the currency is a dangerous one and should not be exercised except under the most pressing circumstances. He was not in favor of wiping out the greenbacks by forced laws, but he was in favor of paying them off as soon as it could be done in the course of events. As for the gold and silver, the government could not issue it, it could only coin what was taken from the bowels of the earth, and it would be folly to attempt to make up the deficiency by emitting paper. J. B. Harper moved to lay on the table Mr. Stratton's substitute, which motion was carried, and the republicans decided to go before the people as a hard-money-specie resumption party.

Will any person contend for a moment that a Republican Legislature would elect a United States Senator who is anything less than the soldiest kind of a hard money, specie resumption man? Can greenbackers consistently favor the greenback cause and at the same time draw upon the Democratic party for strength, thus indirectly aiding the Republican party to carry the State Legislature and elect Ben Harrison United States Senator? We think not.

Will He Accept?

In another column we publish Judge Tousley's letter to Mr. Skilling protesting against the use of his name as a candidate in the Greenback Congressional convention recently held at Kendalville. Notwithstanding the "emphatic disinclination to assume the responsibilities of a candidacy for Congress" as expressed in this letter, and the oft repeated negative to the appeals of personal and political friends, he was nominated by that convention without a dissenting voice. Two questions now agitate the political minds of the district; first, will the Judge accept the nomination tendered him by the Greenback party; and second, will the Democracy of the district endorse the nomination if accepted. As to the first judging from the positive manner in which Mr. Tousley expressed his views upon that subject before the nomination, and from information since derived through some of his most intimate friends, we are inclined to the opinion that his determination to stay out of the race is fixed beyond question. As to the other proposition, it is a matter that we presume will not be discussed to any great extent until the Democracy meet in convention on the 20th of August; it is reasonable to suppose however that there will be a difference of opinion upon that subject; the representatives from the several counties constituting the district will be expected to determine that question with a view to the best interests of the party in the DISTRICT, regardless of any local interest that might be effected by indorsing or not indorsing the nomination made by the greenbackers. DeKalb county will be represented in the convention and her Democracy will abide by the result.

Not Tramps.

Reports are going the rounds of the newspapers to the effect that tramps are threatening to destroy farm machinery, burn barns, grain, &c., in different localities throughout the country in order to induce the farmers to give them work. We do not believe there is a particle of foundation for any such statements; the idea of TRAMPS wanting work is simply ridiculous; they make no pretensions as laborers, nor would they care if every farm in the country was well supplied with all kinds of machinery; they are professional loafers, beggers, thieves and murderers; their threats of arson are not to secure Labor, but to secure something to eat, or to compel the farmer to divide the contents of his pocketbook with them, such are tramps; but the men (if any) who threaten the destruction of labor-saving machinery are NOT TRAMPS, they are men who have been thrown out of employment through the effects of the financial embarrassment that has crushed the business interests of a once happy and prosperous America; financial embarrassment in the interest of the bondholders, that they might become richer and the poor poorer. The families of laboring men are suffering for want of food in every city, town and hamlet in the land; rags have taken the place of comfortable clothing; want stands glaring in the face of the sufferer and misery is depicted upon every countenance. Such are the visible results of the financial policy of the present administration, for which the country holds the Republican party responsible.

Many thousands of honest, inteligent, and industrious laboring men of the United States are Sherman's VICTIMS but NOT TRAMPS.

The following letter written by Judge Tousley to Hon. W. W. Skillen on the eve of the greenback convention at Kendalville, defines his position upon the political issue of the day, briefly expressed, in language easily understood, covering all the points and embracing a popular platform in a nut shell:

ALBION, July 15, 1878.

HON. W. W. SKILLEN:

DEAR JUDGE,—Informed that it is the intention of some partial friends to present my name to the congressional convention which is to assemble at Kendalville on the 17th inst. for the nomination to the office of Representative in Congress, I avail myself of the earliest opportunity to say to you, and through you to the convention, that, if my name should be presented to the convention, I cannot consent to be considered a candidate, and sincerely hope the nomination may be conferred upon some one who is in better physical condition than myself to make the race. In thus expressing a decided and emphatic disinclination to assume the responsibilities of a candidacy for Congress, permit me to assure you of my warmest sympathy for a cause, the success of which is doubtless earnestly desired by an overwhelming majority of the people, to-wit: the permanency of the greenback as a circulating medium, unlimited and free coinage of silver, a volume of currency adequate to the demands of trade and the adoption of financial measures that will secure employment to those willing to work, enable the people to extricate themselves from the embarrassments that are crushing thousands of men of enterprise and genius, restore confidence by setting the wheels of trade and industry in motion, bring happiness to those now in distress, and lead the nation upon a new career of prosperity.

For the accomplishment of these noble purposes and aims, unity of action is an indispensable necessity. Minor differences of opinion should not be permitted to stand in the way of a united, earnest and determined effort to secure for the industrial classes of this District such representation in the halls of Congress as their interests and the general welfare of the whole country demands.

Very respectfully,
HIRAM S. TOUSLEY.

Greenback County Convention.

The Greenback party of this county met in Convention last Saturday at this place, to nominate a county ticket. The attendance was fair for the busy times, and considerable interest was manifested.

Gen. Blair was elected President, Ward Kennedy, Vice President; and Dr. D. A. Darby and J. O. Greenamyer, Secretaries. The convention appointed several committees and then adjourned until after dinner, when it re-assembled and nominated the following ticket:

REPRESENTATIVE,
EMANUEL NEIDIC, of Fairfield-tp.
CLERK,
DR. D. A. DARBY, of Union tp.
AUDITOR,
DR. J. J. HOOPINGANER, of Wilmington-tp.
TREASURER,
S. M. KNOTT, of Butler-tp.
SHERIFF,
R. N. CROOKS, of Union-tp.
COMMISSIONERS,
R. S. S. REED, of Union-tp, HENRY MILLIMAN of Concord.
SURVEYOR,
ALLEN SCHULTZ.
CORONER,
SAMUEL GREENAMYER.

An efforts was made to have the Democratic nominee for Representative endorsed, but by a presistent effort of the Republican Greenbackers this was defeated. There is some excuse for Republicans joining a movement like this, as they are heartily tired of their old party, but why Democrats want to wander away when that good old party has espoused the greenback cause to the greatest extent, consistent with public interest is more than we can understand. The objects to be accomplished as enumerated in Judge Tousley's letter, are identical with those to be secured in the Democratic State platform.

The chairman rather sat down upon Dr. Winslow who attempted to introduce resolutions not embraced in those reported by the Committee on resolutions, and all is not lovely in the camp of the greenbackers.

Harvest is over and everything is lovely at the extensive wholesale and retail establishment of J. E. Shilling.—The large demand for first-class harness, collars and saddles, has induced the proprietor to increase his former supply, and reduce prices accordingly. See his advertisement in another column.

The COURIER will be furnished to new subscribers in DeKalb county from now until November 1st. 1878, for the small sum of 50 cents, payable in advance.

Meeting Capt. C. O. Myers of the Standard, in Kendalville the other day, we noticed he carried rather an expensive cane for an editor, even more so than the one received by the former editor of this paper at Pleasant Lake. On inquiry we found his particular friends had presented him with a very handsome one, valued at $50. Worthily bestowed.

The excursion train from Fort Wayne to Chicago last week, left Valparaiso with nineteen coaches crowded to their utmost capacity. It was perhaps the largest passenger train that ever pulled into Chicago. Rev. Crossly, of Fort Wayne, was the originator of the movement; his ability as an excursion manager, makes every effort in that direction a success.

Temperance Pic-nic.

The first anniversary of the Sedan Temperance Reform Club will be held in the form of a pic-nic, in Michael Treesh's Grove, west of Sedan, beginning at 10 o'clock A. M., Thursday, August 1st, 1878. All friends of temperance are invited to attend and participate in the exercises of the day.

Dr. J. B. Casebeer has remodled the room over Davenport's Drug Store for the purpose of using the same as an office, which he will occupy in a few days. Those desiring his services professionally will please bear in mind that a change of location will be made soon.

DIED,—In this place of that terrible disease, consumption, Mrs. Kate O. Robinson, wife of J. Attwood Robinson and daughter of Samuel Heatly of Butler, aged 32 years, 6 months and 9 days. Funeral services to-day at 1:30 P. M., from the Baptist church by Rev. Mr. Ward.

Boys, when you go swimming observe the following rules:

1. Don't enter the water until you have cooled off.
2. Remain in only long enough to cleanse your person.
3. Make no attempt to swim long distances.
4. Take your bath very early in the morning or else wait until evening.

In the list of delegates to the Congressional Convention, published in the COURIER last week, the delegates from Waterloo precinct were omitted by the compositor, and the error was not discovered in reading proof. The following are the delegates from Waterloo precinct: M. Waterman, J. B. Hoover, R. Clutter, and Jerry Plum. We ask the gentlemen's pardon.

The Boot Upside Down will sell boots and shoes cheaper that ever for the next sixty days. We must have room for our fall goods. We are having made to order for the fall and winter trade the largest and best selected stock of boots and shoes ever brought to this county. Our prices are always below all competitors.

THE BOOT UPSIDE DOWN,
Auburn, Ind.

The little excitement relative to certain bankable paper, obtained here a few days ago, has subsided, and, as an evidence that depositors are not frightened, about $1000 were received yesterday on deposit. The well known character and financial standing of the officers of the bank will always secure for it the confidence it deserves.

DIED,—Cora, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. K. Baxter, of Waterloo last Sunday Morning about two o'clock, aged 2 years and 8 months. Its sudden death was caused by spasms, induced by the oppressive weather. It came very near death's door a year ago, when cholera infantum, proved so fatal in this vicinity. The bereaved parents have our sympathies in the loss of their little darling.

A contemporary says truly: "Men will pay money to advertise their business in a hotel register to be distributed through the state, or in business directories hung up in bar-rooms or railroad depots, where it does them no good whatever, but utterly rufuse to pay anything to secure space in a weekly newspaper for their advertisement, which goes every week into the hands of those from whom their custom must come."

Excursion to Detroit.

The Ft. W., J. & S. R. R. will run a special train to the city of Detroit, on Wednesday, July 31st, 1878, leaving Auburn at 5:40 A. M., arriving at Detroit at 11:40 A. M. Fare for the round trip $2.00. The special train will leave Detroit about 5 o'clock in the evening. Persons desiring to remain over night can leave for home at 7 A. M. next day, excursion tickets being good on that train. A steam boat will be in waiting for those who desire a pleasant boat ride, for the small sum of 25 cents.

AUBURN, IND., July 24th, 1878.

As some reports have gained currency derogatory to the First National Bank of Auburn, it is hereby certified that the bank is in excellent condition in every respect, that all the notes and bills held by it are well secured, and that there is sufficient funds now in its vault to pay all demands that can be made upon it by its depositors. Thankful for the confidence and patronage heretofore received, we invite a continuation of the same.

J. H. FORD, President.
WM MCINTYRE, Cashier.

The following knockdown argument in favor of newspaper advertising, we clip from the Butler Record: "An exchange says, 'It is funny that when you ask a man to advertise, he generally declines with the statement that nobody will see it.'" "The above is as true as gospel, for we joked a certain party, in this place, who believes that advertising does not pay, in last week's Record, about getting a gratis sight at the show, by pinning a policeman's star on the lap of his coat, and he got very indignant, blew around like a mad bull, and ordered us to stop his paper, as he would not take a paper that would reveal to the whole county how he gained admission to the show."

Examine Root & Co's. advertisement. New attractions, new goods and new prices.

Newspaper Regulation.

1. Any person who takes the paper regularly from the post-office, whether direct to his name or whether he is a subscriber or not—is reponsible for the pay.

2. If any person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay all arrearages, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper was taken from the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the post office or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of INTENTIONAL FRAUD.

A New Industry.

Going down Main street the other day we stopped in at the building south of John Shaffer's wagon shops, and found several hands busily engaged in manufacturing scythe and cradle snaths, under the management of Mr. Umber and Sons. They have put in extensive machinery for the bending and shaping of these snaths, and can turn out a car load in a very short time. Mr. Umber informed us that he had orders for all he could make, and would have work for the entire season. He wants the farmers who have good ash and hickory timber, to bring in 100,000 sticks from which to make these snaths, for which he will pay cash. We wish the new enterprise success, and that it will be supplied with material and orders to keep it going the year round.

The trotting horse Rarus won another laural at Toledo last week. Rarus was called for his great effort to beat the best half mile record at 4 o'clock. His appearance created great enthusiasm, and it redoubled when without trouble in scoring he spun away on the race, but when the mile was completed and the time announced as 2:10, the excitement knew no bounds. The animal was almost picked up bodily by the delighted horsemen. This is one second quicker time than Rarus has ever trotted before on a half mile track, and two seconds better than Goldsmith Maid's. This heat establishes also a high reputation for the Toledo track, unquestionably one of the finest in the country.

John Splan, who drove Rarus, was as happy as a boy with a new suit. He did not, as contemplated give him a mate, but sent him alone, and declared that, with a mate, he could repeat the mile in 2:15. Of course, with this achievement, the match with Lulu was not thought of for a moment, and fell through. The great event of the turf is the topic every-where.

Destructive Fire at Defiance.

Last Sunday night fire was discovered in one of the best business blocks in Defiance, O. The firemen of that place being unable to subdue the flames, dispatches were sent to Fort Wayne and Napoleon for assistance. A Fort Wayne Sentinel reporter accompanied the special train, sent with apparatus from that place, and the following are the particulars as learned by him: "The fire originated about 10 o'clock in a frame livery stable owned by John Kisen and run by Ky Newman. This was completely destroyed with the contents, including Mr. Newman's household goods. He had no insurance, but the building was fully insured. The flames then swallowed up the boot and shoe store of A. Ritner, the saloons of G. J. Sincaro and C. Silbert, the Keystone block, a large brick structure owned by Wolford & Meyers, the Crosby House, a fine four-story-brick hotel and several other buildings. The fire laid waste the finest square in the city, and the total loss at a very moderate estimate is $50,000, some place it as high as $75,000. The jewelry store of G. Sumner and the hardware store of H. Brown were badly damaged by water.

The fire was the work of an incindiary.

The blow is a severe one to the beautiful and enterprising little city of Defiance, but the people of that place will doubtless, with their customary public spirit, soon repair their loss."

According to later advices, the loss is estimated at $35,000. Insurance $28,000.

LaOtto Items.

—Peters, of Auburn, has pitched his tent in LaOtto for the present.

—Dave Stonestreet has the best field of corn in Butler township so far as heard from.

—Quite a number of LaOttoites attended the Greenback Convention at Kendalville, and announce themselves well pleased with the convention, and the quiet way in which the candidates conducted themselves toward each other. There were no "kicking" aspirants there, all were meek and humble, honest and earnest men in every sense of the word. Let the poor down-trodden and oppressed laborer look up, for the time is at hand when wickedness, corruption, usurpation and fraud shall be swept from this land of the free and brave tax-paying, uncomplaining people. Away with oppression, bondholders, national banks, resumption acts and returning boards. Let us cease from following after false gods, drop the golden calf, and cling to the greenback religion, the one all powerful to save this country from ruin.

—A tramp "went for" Mrs. Yearian the other day and but for the timely arrival of John Weaver would have assaulted her, for what purpose the reader can surmise. The tramps are becoming too numerous entirely, and how to get rid of them is now the all-absorbing question.

HANNA, Ind., July 16.—A fatal case of sunstroke occurred here about 4 o'clock this p. m. It was one of our section men while at work on the section. A German, aged about 35, named John Zimmerman. No friends in this country.

The DeKalb county Bar Association pic-nic at Pleasant Lake to-day. All the lawyers and their families visit the beautiful lake and the cool shade of the park, and with games, boating, music, dancing and other recreations, will enjoy themselves immensely. We extend our thanks for their invitation to join them.—Steuben Republican.

Kendalville has several 'three minute' horses, but the trouble is we have no suitable place for displaying their speed.—Kendalville Standard.

And the probabilities are, that if you had a "suitable place" you would not have the "three minute" horses. Five minutes might catch some of them outside of the flag.

A gentleman who was driving a few miles north of Wabash, last Sunday, informed us that he saw a prostitute, not more than sixteen years of age, in company with eight villainous looking men. Two of the latter had hold of her arms and were conducting her to a heavy woods near the road. She appeard reluctant about going, but the devils roughly urged her forward.—Wabash Courier.

The wart will go away when you do."

Friend Snyder, of the Pierceton Free Press, evidently knows how it is himself. Hear him: "Tombstone men might just as well lay in a stock of marble slabs for boys, for the "green apple" has already contracted with the M. D's. and the undertakers. Little boys, beware! go not where the progenitor of stomach aches abide; shun the green apple with its full grown worm, as thou wouldst shun thy father's hoe or ax, lest it seduce you with its voluptuous charms, and you fall with your hands crossed upon your equator, like Mr. and Mrs. Adam did, some years ago.

Sedan Items.

—Farmers have had to labor hard this year harvesting their wheat, as the crop is unusually heavy, and the weather somewhat unfavorable. We learn of one farmer, who being unable to bind his wheat during the day on account of its very ripe condition, bound and shocked on several evenings until nearly mid-night.

—The temperance society at this place met in extra session last Saturday evening and re-organized by electing new officers, which resulted in the selection of the following gentlemen: President, Geo. Read the "Breakfast Table." Subscription $2.00 per annum.

The people are all mad! The air is full of dissension and strife! The wheels of business are creaking fearfully, and the Ship of State is in a fog! The blue devils have taken possession of the country, and Momus has gone fishing with a slim supply of bait!

These things must not continue or life will become a hollow mockery! The people must be put in a good humor! The trouble with the atmosphere must be rectified! The wheels of business must be lubricated, and the "creak" taken out of 'em! The blue devils must be routed and "sat down upon," and the Ship of State towed into clear soundings. Momus must be better equipped, and things generally brought out of the chaotic muddle into which they have been dumped.

The BREAKFAST TABLE will provide for all this by making everybody's liver attend to business. Every edition is as full of spice and food for laughter as a boy's pocket of incongruities. Humor, fun, wit, pith and point run through it like mumps through a district school. It will convulse a man more completely than green apples or stale watermelon, and will either make him laugh or kill him. It will send Momus through the land like a yellow dog racing with a tin pan, and will make the people get up on their house-tops and fairly howl with joy. It will be as devoid of heavy topics as an editor's wallet of government bonds; light as biscuit, and breezy as the Cave of Winds. It will make people pay their bills as cheerfully as going to breakfast, and will prove of more enduring benefit to mankind than blue glass. Send 3 cent stamp for specimen copy.

The Michigan Democrats are for hard money; the Indiana Democrats for soft money. What a consistent party.—Ft. Wayne Enterprise.

The Indiana Democrats are not responsible for the suicidal policy of the Democracy of Michigan, yet we regard the action of the Democracy in the two states named equally as consistent as the greenbackers of the Fort Wayne district, who have nominated, and are now urging the election of, a banker and bloated capitalist for Congress. Studebaker, their candidate, always has been and is now (at heart) a radical of the true blue Sherman sort, and no doubt will be endorsed by his own party for the same place on the Republican ticket. The Enterprise which is now so enthusiastically engaged in Studebakers behalf was recently started as an independent-republican-Texas-land-advertising-surplusage of Fort Wayne journalism; and perhaps its publishers with their profits as Texas land agents, the "stake" received from the Republican party, the subscription paid by unsuspecting greenbackers and John Studebaker's MONEY, will be able to continue the publication of their Texas descriptive circular at least until after the October election. The following is a part of Studebaker's address to the people of the Twelfth District: "It has been about twenty years since I sold my store to George Arnold & Co., and started the Exchange Bank. I conducted this bank about four years, or until about 1862, when I started a National Bank, and run the same about five years. I then closed up the National Bank, and resuscited the Exchange Bank in which I am still doing business in the town of Bluffton. My reasons for closing the First National Bank of Bluffton, are as follows: The law regulating National Banks rendered it impossible for any one business man to borrow of so small a bank as ours as much money as was necessary to carry on his business, and he was compelled to negotiate loans elsewhere, and then the bank had more money than it could use at home and had to seek parties outside of Wells county to lend money to. After the National Bank was closed up, the business men of Bluffton could be accommodated in the Bluffton Exchange Bank with all the money they wanted."

Joseph Brackenridge, one of the elite of Fort Wayne society, for a number of years connected with the post office at that place as register clerk, was arrested last week by detectives who had been shadowing him for some time in the belief that he was guilty of opening registered letters and stealing the contents. A scheme was formed to ensnare him which proved successful. He made a written acknowledgment of his guilt, and gave bond in the sum of $3000 for his appearance in the United States Court at Indianapolis. He is supposed to have appropriated $2500 to $3000 in the last two years.

TOWN TALK.

The Star sells a fine unlaundried, all-linen bosom and cuff shirt for 75c that sells all over the town for $1.00.

Other clothing men keep pacing up and down in front of the Star Clothing House, and wonder "how" the thing is done.

"They can't sell at such and such a price. It's more talk," etc. Still our people get convinced on visiting the Star.

Brother clothiers engage men to buy up our cheap suits for them; still they say we are not offering bargains.

We again assert that we sell not sell our goods to merchants; our customers shall derive all the advantages of low prices.

Our sales in two days were $2,300.00.

All our citizens who study economy, quality and style, should inspect the stock of Sam, Pete & Max.

THE MODEL CHURCH.

Well, wife, I've found the model church! I worshiped there to-day;
It made me think of good old times, before my hairs were gray.
The meetin'-house was finer built than they were years ago;
But then I found, when I went in, it wasn't built for show.

The sexton didn't seat me 'way back by the door;
He knew that I was old and deaf, as well as old and poor.
He must have been a Christian, for he led me boldly through
The long aisle of that pleasant church to find a pleasant pew.

I wish you'd heard the singin'—it had the old-time ring—
The preacher said with trumpet voice, "Let all the people sing;"
The tune was "Coronation," and the music upward rolled
Till I thought I heard the angels striking all their harps of gold.

My [illegible] seemed to melt away, my spirit caught the fire;
I joined my feeble, trembling voice with that melodious choir,
And sang, as in my youthful days, "Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem, and crown Him Lord of all."

I tell you, wife, it did me good to sing that hymn once more;
I felt like some wrecked mariner who gets a glimpse of shore;
I almost want to lay aside this weather-beaten form
And anchor in the blessed port forever from the storm.

The preachin'! well, I can't just tell all that the preacher said;
I know it wasn't written, I know it wasn't read;
He hadn't time to read, for the lightnin' of his eye
Went passing 'long from pew to pew, nor passed a sinner by.

The sermon wasn't flowery, 'twas simple gospel truth,
It fitted poor old men like me, it fitted hopeful youth,
'Twas full of consolation for weary hearts that bleed,
'Twas full of invitations to Christ—and not to creed.

The preacher made sin hideous in Gentiles and in Jews;
He shot the golden sentences straight at the finest pews,
And, though I can't see very well, I saw the falling tear
That told me hell was some way off, and heaven very near.

How swift the golden moments fled within that holy place;
How brightly beamed the light of heaven from every happy face!
Again I longed for that sweet time when friend shall meet with friend,
When congregations ne'er break up and Sabbaths have no end.

I hope to meet that minister, the congregation, too,
In the dear home beyond the skies, that shines from heaven's blue,
I doubt not I'll remember, beyond life's evening gray,
The face of God's dear servant who proclaimed His word to-day.

Dear wife, the fight will soon be fought, the victory be won,
The shining goal is just ahead, the race is nearly run,
O'er the river we are nearin' they are throngin' to the shore
To shout our safe arrival where the weary weep no more.

THE BOX TUNNEL.

BY CHARLES READE.

The 10:15 train glided from Paddington, May 7, 1847. In the left compartment of a certain first-class carriage were four passengers; of these two were worth description. The lady had a smooth, white, delicate brow, strongly marked eyebrows, long lashes, eyes that seemed to change color, and a good-sized, delicious mouth, with teeth as white as milk. A man could not see her nose for her eyes and mouth; her own sex could and would have told us some nonsense about it. She wore an unpretending grayish dress, buttoned to the throat with lozenge-shaped buttons, and a Scottish shawl that agreeably evaded color. She was like a duck, so tight her plain feathers fitted her, and there she sat, smooth, snug, and delicious, with a book in her hand, and a soupcon of her wrist just visible as she held it. Her opposite neighbor was what I call a good style of man—the more to his credit, since he belonged to a corporation that frequently turns out the worst imaginable style of young men. He was a cavalry officer, aged 25. He had a mustache, but not a very repulsive one; not one of those subnasal pigtails on which soup is suspended like dew on a shrub; it was short, thick, and black as a coal. His teeth had not yet been turned by tobacco smoke to the color of juice; his clothes did not stick to nor hang to him; he had an engaging smile, and, what I liked the dog for, his vanity, which was inordinate, was in its proper place, his heart, not in his face, jostling mine and other people's who have none—in a word, he was what one oftener hears of than meets—a young gentleman. He was conversing in an animated whisper with a companion, a fellow officer; they were talking about what it is far better not to—women. Our friend clearly did not wish to be overheard; for he cast ever and anon a furtive glance at his fair vis-a-vis and lowered his voice. She seemed completely absorbed in her book, and that reassured him. At last the two soldiers came down to a whisper (the truth must be told); the one who got down at Slough, and was lost to posterity, bet ten pounds to three that he who was going down with us to Bath and immortality would not kiss either of the ladies opposite on the road. "Done, done!" Now I am sorry a man I have hitherto praised should have lent himself, even in a whisper, to such a speculation; "but nobody is wise at all hours," not even when the clock is striking five and twenty; and you are to consider his profession, his good looks, and the temptation—ten to three.

After Slough the party was reduced to three; at Twyford one lady dropped her handkerchief; Capt. Dolignan fell on it like a lamb; two or three words were interchanged on this occasion. At Reading the Marlborough of our tale made one of the safe investments of that day, he bought a Times and Punch; the latter full of steel-pen thrusts and woodcuts. Valor and beauty deigned to laugh at some inflamed humbug or other punctured by Punch. Now laughing together thaws our human ice—at Swindon it was a talking match—at Swindon who so devoted as Capt. Dolignan?—he handed them out—he souped them—he tough-chickened them—he brandied and cochinealed one, and he brandied and burnt-sugared the other; on their return to the carriage, one lady passed into the inner compartment to inspect a certain gentleman's seat on that side of the line.

Reader, had it been you or I, the beauty would have been the deserter, the average one would have stayed with us till all was blue, ourselves included; not more surely does our slice of bread and butter, when it escapes from our hand, revolve it ever so often, alight face downward on the carpet. But this was a bit of a fop, Adonis, dragoon—so Venus remained in tete-a-tete with him. You have seen a dog meet an unknown female of his species, how handsome, how empresse, how expressive he becomes; such was the Dolignan after Swindon, and, to do the dog justice, he got handsomer and handsomer; and you have seen a cat conscious of approaching cream—such was Miss Haythorn; she became demurer and demurer; presently our Captain looked out of the window and laughed; this elicited an inquiring look from Haythorn.

"We are only a mile from the Box Tunnel."

"Do you always laugh a mile from the Box Tunnel?" said the lady.

"Invariably."

"What for?"

"Why, hem! it is a gentleman's joke."

Capt. Dolignan then recounted to Miss Haythorn the following:

"A lady and her husband sat together going through the Box Tunnel—there was one gentleman opposite; it was pitch dark; after the tunnel the lady said, 'George, how absurd of you to salute me going through the tunnel.' 'I did no such thing.' 'You didn't?' 'No! why?' 'Because somehow I thought you did?'"

Here Capt. Dolignan laughed and endeavored to lead his companion to laugh, but it was not to be done. The train entered the tunnel.

Miss Haythorn—Ah!

Dolignan—What is the matter?

Miss Haythorn—I am frightened.

Dolignan (moving to her side)—Pray do not be alarmed; I am near you.

Miss Haythorn—You are near me—very near me, indeed, Capt. Dolignan.

Dolignan—You know my name?

Miss Haythorn—I heard you mention it. I wish we were out of this dark place.

Dolignan—I could be content to spend hours here, reassuring you, my dear lady.

Miss Haythorn—Nonsense!

Dolignan—Pweep! (Grave reader, do not put your lips to the next pretty creature you meet, or you will understand what this means.)

Miss Haythorn—Ee! Ee!

Friend—What is the matter?

Miss Haythorn—Open the door! Open the door!

There was a sound of hurried whispers, the door was shut, and the blind pulled down with hostile sharpness.

If any critic falls on me for putting inarticulate sounds in a dialogue as above, I answer, with all the insolence I can command at present, "Hit boys as big as yourself;" bigger, perhaps, such as Sophocles, Euripides, and Aristophanes; they began it, and I learned it of them, sore against my will.

Miss Haythorn's scream lost most of its effect because the engine whistled 40,000 murders at the same moment; and fictitious grief makes itself heard when real cannot.

Between the tunnel and Bath our young friend had time to ask whether his conduct had been marked by that delicate reserve which is supposed to distinguish the perfect gentleman.

With a long face, real or feigned, he held open the door; his late friends attempted to escape on the other side—impossible! they must pass him. She whom he had insulted (Latin for kissed) deposited somewhere at his feet a look of gentle, blushing reproach; the other, whom he had not insulted, darted red-hot daggers at him from her eyes; and so they parted.

It was, perhaps, fortunate for Dolignan that he had the grace to be a friend to Major Hoskyns of his regiment, a veteran laughed at by the youngsters, for the Major was too apt to look coldly upon billiard-balls and cigars; he had seen cannon-balls and linstocks. He had also, to tell the truth, swallowed a good bit of the mess-room poker, which made it as impossible for Major Hoskyns to descend to an ungentlemanlike work or action as to brush his own trousers beneath the knee.

Capt. Dolignan told this gentleman his story in gleeful accents, but Maj. Hoskyns heard him coldly, and as coldly answered that he had known a man to lose his life for the same thing.

"That is nothing," continued the Major, "but, unfortunately, he deserved to lose it."

At this, blood mounted to the younger man's temples; and his senior added, "I mean to say he was 35; you, I presume, are 21!"

"Twenty-five."

"That is much the same thing; you will be advised by me?"

"If you will advise me."

"Speak to no one of this, and send White the £3, that he may think you have lost the bet."

"That is hard, when I won it."

"Do it, for all that, sir."

Let the disbelievers in human perfectibility know that this dragoon, capable of a blush, did this virtuous action, albeit with violent reluctance; and this was his first damper. A week after the events he was at a ball. He was in that state of factitious discontent which belongs to us amiable English. He was looking in vain for a lady, equal in personal attraction to the idea he had formed of George Dolignan as a man, when suddenly there glided past him a most delightful vision! a lady whose beauty and symmetry took him by the eyes—another look: "It can't be! Yes, it is!" Miss Haythorn (not that he knew her name)! but what an apotheosis!

The duck had become a peahen—radiant, dazzling, she looked twice as beautiful and almost twice as large as before. He lost sight of her. He found her again. She was so lovely she made him ill—and he, alone, must not dance with her, speak to her. If he had been content to begin her acquaintance the usual way it might have ended in kissing; it must end in nothing. As she danced, sparks of beauty fell from her on all around, but him—she did not see him; it was clear she never would see him—one gentleman was particularly assiduous; she smiled on his assiduity; he was ugly, but she smiled on him. Dolignan was surprised at his success, his ill taste, his ugliness, his impertinence. Dolignan at last found himself injured; "who was this man? and what right had he to go on so? He never kissed her, I suppose," said Dolle. Dolignan could not prove it, but he felt that somehow the rights of property were invaded. He went home and dreamed of Miss Haythorn, and hated all the ugly successful. He spent a fortnight trying to find out who his beauty was—he never could encounter her again. At last he heard of her in this way: A lawyer's clerk paid him a little visit and commenced a little action against him in the name of Miss Haythorn, for insulting her in a railway train.

The young gentleman was shocked; endeavored to soften the lawyer's clerk; that machine did not thoroughly comprehend the meaning of the term. The lady's name, however, was at last revealed by this untoward incident; from her name to her address was but a short step, and the same day our crestfallen hero lay in wait at her door, and many a succeeding day, without effect. But one fine afternoon she issued forth quite naturally, as if she did it every day, and walked briskly on the parade. Dolignan did the same; met and passed her many times on the parade, and searched for pity in her eyes, but found neither look nor recognition, nor any other sentiment; for all this she walked and walked, till all the other promenaders were tired and gone. Then her culprit summoned resolution, and, taking off his hat, with a voice for the first time tremulous, besought permission to address her. She stopped, blushed, and neither acknowledged nor disowned his acquaintance. He blushed, stammered out how ashamed he was, how he deserved to be punished, how he was punished, how little she knew how unhappy he was, and concluded by begging her not to let all the world know the disgrace of a man who was already mortified enough by the loss of her acquaintance. She asked an explanation; he told her of the action that had been commenced in her name; she gently shrugged her shoulders and said, "How stupid they are!" Emboldened by this, he begged to know whether or not a life of distant, unpretending devotion would, after a lapse of years, erase the memory of his madness—his crime!

"She did not know!"

"She must now bid him adieu, as she had some preparations to make for a ball in the Crescent, where everybody was to be." They parted and Dolignan determined to be at the ball where everybody was to be. He was there, and, after some time, he obtained an introduction to Miss Haythorn, and he danced with her. Her manner was gracious. With the wonderful tact of her sex, she seemed to have commenced the acquaintance that evening. That night, for the first time, Dolignan was in love. I will spare the reader all a lover's arts, by which he succeeded in dining where she dined, in dancing where she danced, in overtaking her by accident when she rode. His devotion followed her to church, where the dragoon was rewarded by learning there is a world where they neither polk nor smoke—the two capital abominations of this one.

He made an acquaintance with her uncle, who liked him, and he saw, at last, with joy, that her eye loved to dwell upon him, when she thought he did not observe her. It was three months after the Box Tunnel that Capt. Dolignan called upon Capt. Haythorn, R. N., whom he had met twice in his life, and slightly propitiated by violently listening to a cutting-out expedition; he called, and, in the usual way, asked permission to pay his addresses to his daughter. The worthy Captain straightway began doing quarter-deck, when suddenly he was summoned from the apartment by a mysterious message. On his return he announced, with a total change of voice, that "It was all right, and the visitor might run alongside as soon as he chose." My reader has divined the truth; this nautical commander, terrible to the foe, was in complete and happy subjugation to his daughter, our heroine.

As he was taking his leave, Dolignan saw his divinity glide into the drawing-room. He followed her, observed a sweet consciousness deepen into confusion—she tried to laugh, and cried instead, and then she smiled again; when he kissed her hand at the door it was "George" and "Marian" instead of "Captain" this and "Miss" the other.

A reasonable time after this (for my tale is merciful and skips formalities and torturing delays), these two were very happy; they were once more upon the railroad, going to enjoy their honeymoon all by themselves. Marian Dolignan was dressed just as before—duck-like and delicious; all bright except her clothes; but George sat beside her this time instead of opposite; and she drank him in gently from her eyelashes.

"Marian," said George, "married people should tell each other all. Will you ever forgive me if I own to you; no—"

"Yes; yes!"

"Well, then, you remember the Box Tunnel." (This was the first allusion he had ventured to it.) "I am ashamed to say I had £3 to £10 with White I would kiss one of you two ladies," and George, pathetic externally, chuckled within.

"I know that, George; I overheard you," was the demure reply.

"Oh! you overheard me! impossible."

"And did you not hear me whisper to my companion? I made a bet with her."

"You made a bet! how singular! What was it?"

"Only a pair of gloves, George."

"Yes, I know; but what about it?"

"That if you did, you should be my husband, dearest."

"Oh, but stay; then you could not have been so very angry with me, love. Why, dearest, then you brought that action against me?"

Mrs. Dolignan looked down.

"I was afraid you were forgetting me! George, you will never forgive me?"

"Sweet angel, why, here is the Box Tunnel!"

Now, reader—fie! no! no such thing! you can't expect to be indulged in this way every time we come to a dark place. Besides, it is not the thing. Consider, two sensible married people. No such phenomenon, I assure, took place. No scream in hopeless rivalry of the engine—this time!

Another important improvement in connection with our Western lake commerce was completed on the Fourth of July—the Sturgeon Bay ship canal, which, by a short cut, connects Lake Michigan with Green bay, Wis., saving a long distance of navigation.

A PARIS MENAGERIE.

A Cage Full of Lions Fresh from the Jungle—Their Remarkable History as Told in Paris.

[Paris Cor. Boston Advertiser.]

An exhibition which will be of unusual interest is already near completion. In a vacant lot situated between the Hippodrome and the Champs de Mars, a menagerie—such as has never been seen in Europe—is to be open during the next three months. It will, undoubtedly, be curious and interesting, but I doubt if the capture of any one of its animals has such a history as the lions about to appear at Porte Saint Martin Theater. I am indebted to M. d'Ennery, one of the authors of the "Tour du Monde," for the following particulars: These superb animals have never formed part of any menagerie, and have retained all their terrible savageness. It is a hunter, and not a trainer, who accompanies them. Macomo, a large, powerful negro of Central Africa, made himself master of these superb animals in the following manner: He had been informed of the nightly presence of a lion in his neighborhood. He lost no time in arming himself with a long cutlass, and, dragging a young ox after him, arrived at the appointed place. At the usual hour his majesty appeared. The moon was at its full, and the strange trio saw one another as in broad day. The lion gave utterance to a deep, significant growl, looked from the man to the ox, and flourished his great tail. Macomo remained perfectly quiet for an instant, then, suddenly plunging his cutlass into the ox, he raised him in his vigorous arms and threw him at the lion's feet. The wild beast made a bound, sprung upon the bleeding body, caressing it for a moment as a cat does a mouse, and then, giving expression to stifled growls of joy, he drank the blood and crushed the bones. And Macomo, what was he doing all this time? Seated quietly a few steps from his guest, he opened a little sack from which he took a bit of corn bread and dry figs, and began his own frugal repast. When his hunger began to be satisfied, the lion raised his head and looked at the man. Their eyes met. Those of the lion were filled with surprise. Those of the man were calm and smiling. The lion returned to his supper. When he was completely satisfied he rose; Macomo did likewise. The lion made three or four steps toward Macomo, who remained motionless, and, looking once more at his ox, which was but partially devoured, his eyes seemed to say, "This belongs to me." Macomo bowed. A last glance, friendly this time, and the lion quietly went his way, leaving Macomo to return to his home. On the following evening, at the same hour, the African returned to the place of meeting, where the half-devoured carcass still lay, and, shortly afterward, the lion made his appearance, but not alone this time. As the hunter had foreseen, he came accompanied by family and friends. They were four in number, two lions, a lioness and lion's whelp. The repast was served, but not as on the previous evening, in the open air. Macomo had built an arbor covered with vines, banana and palm leaves, and into this pretty dining-room his guests entered fearlessly. Then crawling noiselessly within reach of a hidden spring, Macomo touched it and his four lions suddenly found themselves imprisoned in a strong iron cage, whose bars had been hidden beneath green leaves. Friends were near at hand to aid in removing the four lions upon a cart, and they were about to commence their work when they perceived a new lioness, crouched down upon the sand and licking her whelp between the iron bars. When the men raised the cage upon the cart, she looked at them beseechingly, and when they all marched on she followed at a short distance, with drooping head and tearful eyes; and thus it is that we have five lions instead of four at the Theater Porte Saint Martin, five terrible, ferocious beasts, ready to revolt at any moment; and, although Macomo enters their cage and dominates them to a certain extent, they have not forgiven him for having taken advantage of their confidence in him, and would ask nothing better than to treat him as Lucas was treated by his seven lions in the last days of the old Hippodrome—simply tear him to pieces.

Thurlow Weed on Lincoln, Clay and Greeley.

"Whom do you regard as the greatest men of your time?" "Well, that would be difficult to tell. All such things are comparative. I could name a great many men who have served their country and their time with eminent ability. But a man's public usefulness depends largely on circumstances. Mr. Lincoln, for instance, had a great opportunity, and he was equal to it. If circumstances had not found him, if he had not been the right man, at the right time, in the right place, he would have remained in obscurity all his life. I regard Henry Clay as foremost among the men laboring all their lives to elevate themselves, and who labored always for the object by promoting the welfare of the country and the interests of the people. Horace Greeley labored with equally pure motives, as I think, up to the point where he allowed his ambition to rule him. I knew him intimately for years. A truer, more useful and more devoted practical philosopher I never knew. He labored with a single eye and a single heart and both hands for the good, till he thought he could be still more useful in office. He was a frank, honest man, with nothing tricky about him. The very moment he found his aspirations in conflict with those of Mr. Seward, he wrote that well-known letter dissolving the political partnership which had existed between us."—Interview with Thurlow Weed.

Oleomargarine.

The microscope is summoned to the defense of oleomargarine. Prof. Arnold, of the University Medical College in New York, testifies that he has made a careful examination, and finds "the oleomargarine butter to consist of exceedingly clear and beautiful oil globules, a sufficient proof of its purity," while some ordinarily rancid butter "shows very nicely the granular and irregular oil-globule character of decomposing fat." Prof. Brewer, of Yale College, goes still further, and declares that, "So far as chemistry and common sense suggests, I see no reason why it should not be as wholesome and as nutritious as cream butter, and will so believe unless its actual use demonstrates to the contrary." Yet we suspect that, in spite of the carelessness and filth of many dairies, it will be long before the popular prejudice in favor of cow's butter will accept the purest and most wholesome oleomargarine as its equal.

Consumption---A New Remedy Suggested.

Medical men have known for a long time that the best remedies for consumption were plenty of pure air, sunshine, and exercise, and also food that contained much carbon. Cod-liver oil has been a favorite remedy, and has done good in prolonging the lives of consumptives, and putting off the approach of the grim monster. The virtues of other remedies are in proportion to the amount of carbon they can infuse into the system to feed the consuming flame that wastes the body. The theory is that the internal fever burns up the carbon in the blood faster than the food eaten can replace it. The disease then preys on the fatty substances of the body, and destroys the lungs, and eventually life. In short, there is not oil enough in the lamp for the wick, and the latter is burnt and the light goes out. The Chicago Tribune prints an interesting letter from Dr. D'Unger, of Minneapolis, Minn., on this subject, in which he makes public a prescription which he declares has produced excellent effects, to his personal knowledge. This is his prescription:

One-half pound finely-cut-up beefsteak (fresh);
One drachm pulverized charcoal;
Four ounces pulverized sugar;
Four ounces rye whisky;
One pint boiling water.

Mix all together, let it stand in a cool place over night, and give from one to two teaspoonfuls liquid and meat—before each meal.

I have used this preparation very frequently, and have never found it act otherwise than beneficially. The dose should be small at first, until the stomach becomes used to it, and then gradually increased.

This remedy has, at least, the merit of simplicity. Any one can try it.

A Philosophical Tramp.

* * * The younger tramp appeared to be somewhat disheartened, and was grumbling that he did not like to be kicked about like a dog. The elder tramp, a large man with a rather cheerful face, but very ragged exterior, rebuked his companion in a way that showed how the average professional tramp views his situation. "I tell you," said he, with a careless glance at the apparently inattentive Craig, "you ought to be glad to have such good times. Here, take a drink and don't be a fool. I've been on the road now several years, and I don't want a better life. I get a living, and that's all a man wants. Now, look at those poor devils hurrying along to and from work. They slave all day, and worry about it if they don't get a chance to do it. They work all day, year in and year out, and give all the grub we need to such chaps as me without thinking much about it. You and I lay here and sun ourselves, for this is the chilliest June I ever saw, and sleeping out this forenoon near the river made me feel cold. Will I catch cold from last night's rain? Well, suppose I do; I'm drying off and warming up now, and if I have whisky enough I'll drive out the cold. I tell you there's no danger of any man starving to death in this country if he ain't ashamed to wear ragged clothes and has cheek enough to ask for grub. These folks will toil and slave to support us, and why shouldn't they if they are fools enough?" And the tramp laughed heartily and passed the bottle to his companion, who was soon also in the best of humor.—Reading (Pa.) Eagle.

A Russian Solomon.

A Solomon has arisen in one of the Baltic provinces of Russia to reconcile a pair of wrangling women—fish-women at that. He is a Lieutenant Colonel, assigned to duty as Chief of Police. He knew that preaching would be of no use whatever where the hearers were two women, who were cursing one another at the rate of 120 words a minute, and who were only prevented from tearing one another's faces by the strong arm of the policeman. "You must be locked up in one and the same cell until you have kissed each other." This was invariably the sentence of the new magistrate in every case of female broil which was brought before him. He knew that, although kissing one another is a habit with male Russians, it is not so with the women of Muscovy, least of all with the fishwives. The women were hurried off, railed for a time louder than ever, protested that they would die sooner than give this humiliating sign of reconciliation, and then, after a few hours' confinement, called the jailer and informed him that they had kissed. They were informed that they must repeat the kiss publicly in the open market-place. A small fine was taken from each, and they were compelled, in the midst of their sisters in trade, to kiss each other three times.

Persecution of Jews.

The town of Kabich, in Russian Poland, has just been the scene of a massacre of Jews. A mob of the Christian population, instigated by a lot of men in debt to the Jews, who circulated the story that the Jews performed unholy and horrible rites at their feast of the Passover, took possession of the town, rifled the shops and dwellings of the Jews, maltreated the women, killed eight or ten men who attempted to defend the honor of their wives, beat and wounded scores of others, forced open the doors of the two synagogues, destroyed the ark and the scrolls of the law and fired the building. This is not the first time that the Christians there have taken this method of paying their debts.

Thurlow Weed is one of the largest and most muscular of the editorial fraternity. This remark of course applies to his earlier days, for he now feels the effect of time. He is just three years younger than Bryant, having been born in 1797, and considering his age, he is in remarkable preservation.

Spain has again commenced to use the island of Cuba for her pecuniary benefit. A loan of 20,000,000 francs, just negotiated with the French Syndicate, is secured by pledges on anticipated Cuban customs, from which source little or no revenue has been derived for ten years or more.

WHEN YOU WERE SEVENTEEN.

BY JOEL BURNS.

When the hay was mown, Maggie,
  In the years long ago,
And while the western sky was rich
  With sunset's rosy glow,
Then hand in hand close-linked we passed
  The dewy ricks between,
And I was one-and-twenty, Mag
  And you were seventeen.

Your voice was low and sweet, Maggie,
  Your wavy hair was brown;
Your cheek was like the wild red rose
  That showered its petals down;
Your eyes were like the blue speedwell,
  With dewy moisture's sheen,
When I was one-and-twenty, Mag,
  And you were seventeen.

The spring was in our hearts, Maggie,
  And all its hopes were ours;
And we were children in the fields,
  Among the opening flowers.
Aye; life was like a summer day
  Amid the woodlands green,
For I was one-and-twenty, Mag,
  And you were seventeen.

The years have come and gone, Maggie,
  With sunshine and with shade;
And silvered is the silken hair
  [illegible]
In many a soft and wayward tress—
  The fairest ever seen—
When I was one-and-twenty, Mag,
  And you were seventeen.

Though gentle changing Time, Maggie,
  Has touched you in his flight,
Your voice has still the old sweet tone,
  Your eye the old love-light.
And years can never, never change
  The heart you gave, I ween,
When I was one-and-twenty, Mag,
  And you were seventeen.

An Irishman was told by a teacher that his charge for tuition was two guineas the first month, and one guinea the second. "Then, be jabers," said Pat, "I'll begin the second month now."

When Beau Nash was sick, the doctor asked him if he had followed his prescription. "No, doctor," said Nash, "if I had I should have broken my neck, for I threw it out of the second-story window."

Edison is accused of being the father of invention. We have no desire to open up a fresh scandal, but if Edison is the father of invention it is the duty of necessity to show her marriage certificate, if she has one.

"Speaking of the different kinds of taxes," queried the teacher, "what kind is it where whisky is taxed?" "I know," said one boy, holding up his hand. "Well, what is it?" "Sin-tax," shouted the young grammarian.

A wag tried to annoy a popular preacher by asking him whether the fatted calf was male or female. "Female, to be sure," was the reply, "for I see the male"—looking the questioner full in the face—"yet alive in the flesh before me."

He was a school-boy of 11, and had a mind full of interrogation points. When he asked his teacher, "Who was Ocles, and what was he cursed for?" his instructor nearly split his head thinking before it occurred to him that his pupil referred to Damocles.

Married, in Chicago, Mr. William Blatt to Miss Frances Lamm:

A little Lamm has got her Blatt,
  No more a Lamm is she,
But she Will Blatt in spite of that—
  Her nature 'tis, you see;
And if she'd lost her lovely Blatt,
  A Lamm she still would be.

David Trumbull, the Yale oarsman who was drowned while trying to save a child, was a student of the Theological School, aged 25, had pulled seven in the college boat only a couple of days before, and was a remarkably swift runner. He came of the same Connecticut stock whence sprung Jonathan Trumbull, of Revolutionary fame; John Trumbull, the painter; and ex-Senator Lyman Trumbull.

SABBATH READING.

The Foreshadowing.

Some thought flies, day by day,
Of coming rest,
As birds that far away
Seek their true nest;
'Tis but a feeling, yet
It sounds within,
That all sad hours will set
And joy begin.

We know how much we feel
Wearied, yet sure
That all pain can reveal
Returns no more;
That, like a journey done,
The tired feet
Shall, with the fading sun,
Find rest complete.

We toil on, day by day,
For others' good,
To find ourselves astray,
Misunderstood;
And still the thankless task
Goes on each hour,
And all that we can ask
Is grace and power.

Grace to contend with wrong,
And power to toil;
To lift, though worn, a song
Above the soil;
And when our earthward gaze
Sees rocks and scars,
Our upward glance we raise
To worlds of stars.

And oft the good we do
For others here
Is ever kept in view,
And held most dear.
The after-time shall show
Its fruit to Thee,
Whose faith and love could throw
Bread on the sea.

And music in the soul
Sings soft and low,
That, under Time's control,
All troubles go;
That here where shadows fall
Toward darkest night,
That there the voices call
To cloudless light.

Four Sermons.

Sermon I.—To Preachers. So thou, Oh son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me. When I say unto the wicked, Oh wicked man, thou shalt surely die, if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his ways, that wicked man shall die in his iniquities, but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it, if he does not turn from his way he shall die in his iniquities; but thou hast delivered thy soul. Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live. Turn ye, turn ye, from your evil ways, for why will ye die, Oh house of Israel?

Sermon II.—To Christians. Therefore, thou son of man, say unto the children of thy people, The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression. As for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth. When I shall say to the righteous, He shall surely live, if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it.

Sermom III.—To Sinners. Again, when I say to the wicked, thou shalt surely die, if he turn from his sin and do that which is lawful and right; if the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity, he shall surely live, he shall not die. None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him. He hath done that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live.

Sermon IV.—To Our Wise Men. Yet the children of thy people say: The way of the Lord is not equal; but as for them their way is not equal. When the righteous turneth from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, he shall even die thereby; but if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby. Yet ye say the way of the Lord is not equal. O ye house of Israel, I will judge you every one after his ways. Chap. xxxviii. 7-20.—Central Christian Advocate.

Christianity and the Children.

God, in all ages, has manifested a special interest in, and care for, the children. We may well call Him "Father." At the giving of the law from Sinai the little ones were remembered: "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk about them when thou sittest in thine house," etc. Deut. vi. 7. Oh, that Christians would speak more to each other in their own home about spiritual things, and especially in the presence of the children. God manifest in the flesh took an equally intense delight in the children. We can see them in imagination climbing on his knee, and nestling in his bosom, while he smiles sweetly on them and permitted them to feel the beatings of his loving heart. We cannot forget his parting command to Peter, and through Peter to every disciple: "Feed my lambs."

Christianity is the only religion in the world that lovingly cares for the children. Mohammedanism despises them. Brahmanism and Hindooism were wont to leave to die, or willingly destroyed them, until British law intervened for their protection. Nearly all the superstitions and forms of heathenism treat them with barbarity. The religion of Christ alone lavishes on them tender affection, claims them for God, and seeks to train them for eternity.

The Christian church ought to be the spiritual nursery for the young. She ought to provide for them first, and not last. It is the grandest and most productive work to which the church can lay its hand, and should not be done anyhow or by anybody. It demands the highest and most efficient instrumentality.

But, after all, the home is the place where the young character is molded and formed. And the most potent force in the home is the mother's influence—her teaching, her example, her prayers, not only for but with her children.—Rev. W. Marshall, London.

London Thieves.

A fashionably-dressed man went into Hunt & Roskell's large jewelry store in Bond street, London, selected articles worth $4,000, and tendered a £1,000 note in payment. Mr. Roskell ascertained that the note was a forgery. Just as he was about to summon assistance a cab was drawn rapidly up and two men in police uniform hurriedly entered, saying that the man was an old offender, of whom they were in search. Directing a porter to place the jewelry in the cab and to come along with them as a witness, the men in uniform said that they would inform the firm when their attendance would be required to press the charge. Then they drove off with their prisoner, leaving the jewelers loud in their praises of the proficiency of the police. Next day, however, their porter, brutally beaten, returned with the information that the two supposed police officers were thieves in disguise.

Drunkenness in Australia.

Sydney is now an irregularly laid out and an irregularly built city of about 200,000 souls; with its suburbs, the population is estimated at 250,000. A careful calculation would place one saloon (hotels they call them here) to every twenty inhabitants of Sydney and suburbs. If this should be called exaggeration, it can be met with the reply that the evil needs desperate measures for its correction. Well, these "hotels" are the most prosperous concerns in New South Wales—not alone in Sydney, but in every place I have been. I found it the same in Queensland, and I expect to find it the same in Victoria. It is no unusual thing to see drunken men and women staggering about the streets. I have seen not a few, but a great many, nearly every evening I have been out.

Persons who have read the pen-pictures of low life in England, as delineated by Charles Dickens, only have to come to this place to realize that Dickens did not exaggerate. I have seen a little 6-year-old girl trying to lead her besotted grandmother home, and that venerable woman so drunk she could not stand except against a house side. Women frequently appear adorned with two black eyes. Of course, these are very low and very poor people, but they frequent the principal streets and mingle with the general throng. Drunkenness is the saddest feature of this beautiful country, and one gladly turns from its contemplation to a consideration of those features of the colonies that it is a pleasure to chronicle, and such, too, they are, as we in America would do well to imitate.—Sydney Cor. Chicago Tribune.

The Flying Machine.

About 50,000 people assembled on the common to witness the first exhibition of the flying machine in open air. The plan was to sail around the tops of the houses and over the principal streets and demonstrate to a wondering multitude the possibilities of air navigation. When everything was ready the machine was let go, but instead of flying up gradually and gracefully, as intended, it shot up like an arrow to a distance of 2,000 feet. Every one came to the conclusion at once that it was unmanageable, and the poor aeronaut was the object of much symathy as he floated upward. He soon let off some of the gas, but did not descend. He went up higher and higher, and it was soon evident that he was as much at the mercy of the currents as any balloonist. He sailed over Brookline, Boston Highlands, and out through Norfolk county, and landed at the little town of Farnham. Here he was an object of wonder to the inhabitants, and after they had gazed on him he essayed to fly back to Boston, but on reaching Dover gave it up, and, packing his machine on the train, he came home by rail. He explains his failure by saying that the gearing got out of order. The steering apparatus would not work, and one of the rods was disarranged. He says he had to tie it with a cord and strap his foot to the pedal.

The belief is that the machine is incapable of navigating any except the air confined in a hall, and that any current will carry it away just as it does the old-style balloons.—Boston Cor. New York Herald.

The Growth of London.

An important return has just been issued by the Metropolitan Board of Works, showing the "number of inhabited houses, population and ratable annual value of the parishes and districts comprised within the metropolitan area in the years 1856 and 1876, or as near those dates as can be accurately stated." According to this return it appears that the total ratable annual value has more than doubled itself within twenty years. In 1855 the amount was £11,283,663, and in 1876 it was £23,111,313. The total number of inhabited houses has increased from 306,086 in 1851 to 419,642 in 1871, but in this column a decrease is shown in respect of the city of London. The number of inhabited houses in the city of London in 1851 was 14,483, but in 1871 there was only 9,235. In 1851 the population of the metropolis was 2,362,405, and in 1871 it had increased to 3,267,987.—London Times.

Something New.

"Got anything new?" inquired a Chicago reporter of a city official, in the City Hall, one morning, recently. "I should say I had," was the reply, as the official clasped his hands to his face and rushed off as if in agony. "What is it?" anxiously inquired the reporter, following up his man. "Oh, please don't bother me just now, sir," pleaded the functionary, as he tore around the hall. "I guess you better let me have it," urged the item vulture. "I wish to heaven I could," muttered the official. "Yes, yes, do; what is it?" said the newspaper fiend, gaining hope. "Well, if you must know, I suppose you must," said the victim, as he buried his jaws in his hands again; "I'll tell you what I've got new." "What is it?" "I've got the neuralgia!" And the ungrateful reporter, having learned what it was, said that he did not want it.

A Drunkard's Liability.

The theory that drunkenness does not excuse a man for crime seems to apply to liability under a contract made by a drunken man, provided he gets drunk untarily. In the case of O'Connorvol against Rempt, the New Jersey Court of Chancery has decided as follows: "A deed made by a person while in a state of intoxication will be set aside if advantage has been taken of his situation, or his drunkenness was produced by the act or connivance of the person to be benefited by the deed. Courts cannot protect the rash against the consequences of imprudent contracts, if they enter into them voluntarily, and not through fraud or artifice."

THE PHONAUTOGRAPH.

Absolutely the Latest Invention of Prof. Edison's.

[From the New York Tribune.]

Inquiry was made at the Metropolitan Elevated Railway Company's office yesterday regarding the means which Thomas A. Edison will employ to lessen the noise of trains; "Oh, that is all settled," was the reply: "Mr. Edison is going to put instruments on the cars which will absorb the noise. The sound made by the trains will be collected and bottled up until the cars get to the end of the road. Then it will be discharged up through a tall chimney."

Mr. Edison was found in his office at No. 267 Broadway, last evening, and laughed heartily at the statement of his plan to bottle up sound. He had been at work all day, he said, along the line of the road, taking observations. He had not yet found all the sources of the noise produced by the trains, and, until he had fully determined what the causes of the noise were, he could not decide upon remedies. He was making an instrument, which would be finished in a day or two, by which he could determine the character of the sound vibrations, and thus get at the causes of the offensive roar. This instrument Mr. Edison described. It consists, in part, of a funnel to condense the sound vibrations. At the small end of the funnel is a diaphragm, which is made to vibrate by the sound. A cylinder, similar to that used in the phonograph, is placed near the diaphragm. About the cylinder is wrapped a piece of paper which has been blackened by being held over the fumes of burning charcoal. A straw is fastened to the funnel diaphragm in such a manner that the point falls on the blackened paper. As the cylinder is turned, the sound vibrations are traced by the straw on the paper in such a manner that they are plainly visible. The instrument is called the "phonautograph." By its use records of sound vibrations, for any desired length of time, can be easily made. These records, Mr. Edison, believes, will enable him to determine the causes of the peculiar roar produced by the trains on the Metropolitan road. He intends to use the phonautograph both in the cars and on the ground under the track.

One great source of noise has already been discovered by Mr. Edison to be the vibration of the iron-lattice stays of the girders. These stays cross each other, but are not joined where they cross. At every passage of a train these stays vibrate with so much force that the strength of a man's hand is not sufficient to keep them steady. Their vibrations are rendered very sonorous by the ties of soft wood on which the rails are laid. The entire road is thus made an immense sounding apparatus, and might, Mr. Edison says, be compared to a piano if the noise produced were not so inharmonious. By fastening the lattice stays where they cross, their vibrations will be checked in a measure and the noise lessened. A change from spruce and pine ties to oaken ties would also have an effect in lessening the noise.

A Real Mermaid.

There is a real live mermaid in the Westminster Aquarium, London, a specimen of the manatee having been recently received from Demarara. This is the little animal that has given rise to the prettiest legend of the sea. The glass tank in which it is placed is entirely above the level of the floor, and the water, which is fresh, as the animal, though marine, often swims far up rivers, is kept very clear. The depth of water given to the Aquarium specimen hardly allowed of its full display in the mermaid position, as the tail ought to be able to get quite free from the bottom of the tank. One flipper slightly thrown up gives the traditional looking-glass, and the gentle paddling of the other, when seen in clear water, gives the hand holding the comb. The harp introduced in some drawings, however, does not exist. A similar specimen was received a few years ago at the Zoological Gardens, but could not be kept alive, and only afforded a naturalist a fine opportunity for dissection, and the subsequent preparation of a scientific paper.

Henri de Tourville, the rich London lawyer who was convicted by an Austrian tribunal and sentenced to death for murder, by pushing his rich wife, whose heir he was, over a precipice in the Tyrol, and whose sentence was afterwards commuted to one of twenty years' penal servitude, has been disbarred, and his name removed from the list of members of the Middle Temple.

Good health is a blessing only attained by careful attention to the real wants of the body; but by how many ways do we aggravate symptoms and produce diseases it is difficult to cure, frequent among which is Heart Disease, Nervousness, Sleepless or Wakeful nights. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. These troubles can be cured by the use of Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR. Send to the sole agent, F. E. Ingalls, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet of testimonials, etc.

THE OBJECT OF OUR ESTABLISHMENT.
Our Newspaper Advertising Bureau, No. 10 Spruce St., New York, is an establishment intended to facilitate the convenient and systematic placing of advertisements in newspapers. It is conducted upon the principle which we conceive to be the right one for securing the best results to the advertiser.
We undertake to represent American newspapers, not only the newspapers of the city of New York and of all other American cities—Religious, Agricultural and other class newspapers—but also the small country journals. We receive regular files of the daily and weekly newspapers of every description throughout the land.

CONFINED STRICTLY TO NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING AND TO AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS.
We confine our transactions to newspapers, and do not undertake to deal in other classes of advertising, such as books, sign-boards, posters, art or job printing.
By adhering to one branch of advertising we make ourselves masters of it.
We also restrict our dealings to newspapers published within the geographical limits of the United States and Dominion of Canada.

THE NATURE OF THE SERVICE WHICH IT IS OUR BUSINESS TO RENDER TO THE ADVERTISER.
We undertake to maintain an established credit with every newspaper, and to have at hand a schedule of charges for advertising space in each paper, to be able to quote the rates to the advertiser who wishes one or several, and to procure the prompt insertion of the advertisement without delay, with charges for the services rendered; which service consists of quoting the price, printing or writing as many duplicates of the advertisement as may be required; forwarding the copy for insertion at our own expense for postage or passenger service; examining the papers to see that the advertisement appears, when, and in the manner that it ought to: checking such subsequent issues of the advertisement, in each paper, in a book kept for that purpose, at all times subject to the inspection of the advertiser, and rendering plainly to each paper the advertisement as it appears, so that when the advertiser comes (or sends) for the purpose of having the files examined, the same may light promptly upon an announcement, without the labor of searching a whole page or paper.

If errors or omissions occur, it is our duty to notify publishers, at our own expense for postage or messenger, and to see to it that the publisher of the paper actually does render the agreed service for which the advertiser contracted.

OUR PROMISE.
We promise those advertisers who intrust their advertising patronage to our management that we will not allow them to be charged, in any instance, any more than the publishers' schedule rates; that we will procure for them the acceptance of any advantageous offer definitely made to them by any newspaper publisher, advertising agent or canvasser of responsibility. We are unwilling to do work without a profit, and never offer to do so; yet, in conformity with the promise made above, we sometimes find it advisable.

THE SYSTEM OF ARRANGEMENT FOR NEWSPAPER FILES.

We have a perfected system for filing newspapers, a separate space being accorded to each, and labeled with the name of the place of publication, so that a stranger can place his hand upon any paper he wishes to examine with the same readiness with which he would find a word in a dictionary, a name in a directory, or a book in a library catalogue.

THE AMOUNT OF MONEY TO BE EXPENDED.
Persons who have had little experience as advertisers often have a pretty clear understanding of what they would like to do, but are entirely ignorant of the probable cost.
We have made out for such a person a plan of advertising calling for an investment of $5,000, and on submitting it for approval, found our customer dismayed at the magnitude of the expense, he not having contemplated an expenditure exceeding $200 or $300. In such a case labor would have been saved if, at the commencement of the negotiation, the question had been asked: "How much money are you prepared to devote to this advertising?"

THE CONFIDENCE OF OUR PATRONS A MATTER OF PRIME IMPORTANCE.
It is a matter of prime importance to us, for the purpose of maintaining our position with publishers, that it shall come to be understood among them that our statements about the advertising to be done, or not to be done, are to be relied upon, and to this end our dealings with our advertising patrons must be upon a basis of mutual confidence and good faith.

OUR CUSTOMERS ENTITLED TO OUR BEST SERVICES.
Whenever we are doing the advertising for any individual, or firm, we consider them entitled to our best services. If they suggest using a paper which we know to be not the best for the purpose, we say so and give the reasons. We often expend a good deal of time for very small advertisers, much more than the profits on their patronage would warrant; but we are content, as they intrust to us what they have to disburse, and influence in our direction the patronage of their friends and acquaintances.

Extract from New York "Times," June 14, 1875.
Ten years ago Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co. established their advertising agency in New York City. Five years later they absorbed the business conducted by Mr. John Hooper, who was the first to go into this kind of enterprise. Now they have the satisfaction of controlling the most extensive and complete advertising connection which has ever been secured, and one which would be hardly possible in any other country but this. They have succeeded in working down a complex business into so thoroughly a systematic method that no change in the newspaper system of America can escape notice, while the widest information upon all topics interesting to advertisers is placed readily at the disposal of the public.

A Terrible Doom—How Criminals Are Punished in New Zealand.

Louis Tregance, a French sailor, long a prisoner among the Sapuans of New Guinea, thus describes the Serpent's Valley:

It was a dangerous undertaking to travel through this opening, and no other way to K'ootar was known. As we stood here to give our ponies a blow my guide volunteered to take me back to the entrance of the valley, that I might get a better idea of the way we had come. I consented, and, on my approaching its mouth, I was struck very much by the height and size of the trees. Their clear stems ran up nearly a hundred feet before the limbs began to appear on them and were very thick. Here, too, were many palm trees, whose feather-like plumes gave a graceful appearance to the whole valley. There was also a large tree flower in this valley, which was now in full bloom. The flower was a bright scarlet, which hung suspended in the long, folding pendants from the branches.

At a distance one might easily imagine these scarlet trees to be trees of fire, whose pendants, as they moved in the wind, were the flames jumping and leaping. I was lost in admiration as I contemplated these things; and as we continued to advance up the valley new beauties opened out before us.

"Stop! beware, Tregance!" cried my guide, in warning tones.

I stoped at once, and looking forward under his direction, saw a vast snake curled up at the foot of a tree in front of us. I could not Judge of its length, yet it must have been very great. Another and another of these coils were pointed out by him, and I had an unpleasant sensation of cool prespiration oozing out of the pores of my skin.

"Take care, take care!" he cried out in terror, and, catching my pony by the head, he pulled me back toward the mouth of the valley.

After we had got away some twenty yards, I saw an immense boa-constrictor curled round the stem of the tree near which we had been standing. The beast's neck was stretched some ten or twelve feet over the pathway, and its head kept rising and falling in much the same way as I have seen that of a turkey wiggle about.

The terrible reptile had evidently been sunning itself, and, having been awakened by our approach, had proceeded to uncoil its immense body in order to obtain its mid-day meal. It was not less than sixty feet long, I am sure, for I counted at least six coils round the body of the tree—allowing seven feet for the length of each coil, and fifteen for the head and neck, I made it out about sixty feet long.

After this we hurried back to the guard and reported what we had seen.

Several of the prisoners expressing a wish to see the serpent, they were permitted to approach the mouth of the valley to catch a glimpse of the boa, with whom they were quite satisfied. I learned afterward—some few years afterward—that this valley was never traversed by any persons; that the escorts really made a considerable detour and came out by a secret channel, whose approaches were carfully hidden by trees and rocks. This fact was concealed from the mining population, to hinder their return to K'ootar. They knew of no other path than that through the boa valley, and were too fearful of its horrors to dare an attempt through it. Some had, indeed, attempted to pass through it, but as they had never been heard of again it was universally believed that they had been destroyed by the serpents; and there can be little doubt that such was the case.

I have heard somewhere that an army was once stopped by a great snake, and I can readily believe that the boas in this valley would hinder the progress of the bravest army if not completely obstruct it. From this point the road lay along a well sheltered plain, the track running by the side of tall, thickly-folliaged trees. In about an hour from our leaving the valley I was startled by hearing a cry for help, the sound coming, as it seemed to me, from directly over my head.

On looking upward I was horrified to see an unfortunate wretch fastened to a tall tree by means of ropes, and near him was a small snake about eight feet long. The snake was standing erect and hissing at the unfortunate man, who was beating his hands wildly and trying to avoid the fangs of the serpent.

"Can we not help him?" I asked, greatly excited.

"No, he is a criminal, and must die. Better to die thus than wait to be starved or torn to pieces by the birds. He is fortunate."

The snake had now bitten the man—at least so I Judged, for he gave a scream of fear and pain, and he seized the serpent's head with his half-loosened hands. The venomous beast curled itself rapidly round the neck and arms of the poor man, and strove to draw its head to the man's face. But desperation gave the poor fellow strength, and for a long time he resisted successfully. At last his strength failed, and we saw, to my great horror, the snake's fangs steadily approaching the man's mouth, for he was nearly suffocated.

I could look no longer, and, turning my head away continued my journey. Again, I remarked that the old chief was indifferent, and gave no more than a single glance at the unfortunate criminal, who was suffering so terrible a death.

In another half-mile we saw a number of birds hovering over a tree, and, on our reaching it, saw another unfortunate chained in its upper branches. He was vainly trying to defend himself from the attacks of an immense eagle, which sailed backward and forward, every now and then descending upon the poor wretch and striking him with its powerful talons.

When we were seen the poor fellow cried to us in piteous terms to save him. This, however, was impossible. The old chief was immovable, so we were compelled to ride on and leave him to his fate. Another and another tree contained the corrupting corpses of men who had shared similar fates.

These things made me look upon the Governer of the gold mines with feelings of distrust, and I began to regret that I was so completely in the power of such a cruel despot.

A Curious Missouri Custom.

[Kansas City Times]

Last Sunday was the day of the annual "bonnet show" in Clay County. It was not what might be termed a fine day for new bonnets, for the rain fell mildly in fitful gusts during the day, and the winds were quite raw for gauzy muslins and spring millinery. But it was "bonnet day" in Clay County, and all the youth, beauty and elite of all the regions adjacent to Little Shoal Creek and Big Shoal Creek assembled to show off the spring bonnets. It is a strange custom, but it is one that is annually adhered to by the Clay County people with the strictest punctuality. It originated in a feud between the two Baptist congregations of the Big Shoal Creek and Little Shoal Creek meeting-houses. This rivalry was established years ago and has been kept up ever since, with varied results, sometimes the Little Shoal Creekers getting off with the best bonnets, and then the next year the Big Shoal Creekers carrying off the ribbons. The custom, as established, is as follows: On the first Saturday and Sunday in May the Baptist congregation on Little Shoal Creek, in Clay County, have a "bonnet show." This is a picnic at which the ladies appear in the best bonnet their means and the Kansas City milliners can produce. The young men come there, of course, and not a few carriage loads of young ladies and gentlemen from Kansas City and adjacent cities go to the annual exhibition of bonnets in Clay County. Big Shoal Creek meeting-house holds its "bonnet show" on the second Saturday and Sunday in May, and there is a sensation all over the adjacent country, for Big Shoal Creek has seldom been surpased for bonnets at the annual bonnet show. Last Sunday, however, was a bad day for nice, new spring bonnets, and those who were present at both picnics say that Little Shoal carried off the premium this year for fine bonnets. The Big Shoal meeting-house had bad weather on Sunday, and the rain prevented many fine bonnets being placed on exhibition. It is the first time in many years that Little Shoal Creek has won a victory.

It is a pleasant rivalry, and very profitable to the milliners. Each lady attending church or the picnic endeavors to appear in a neat, handsome bonnet, and those who appear in the best bonnets receive the praise and encomiums of all those in attendance. The people assemble for miles around to look at each other's bonnets, and while the preachers expound the laws laid down in the Gospel the ladies criticise each other's spring bonnets, while the boys and old men mentally comment upon the faces beneath the bonnets. The Clay County "Bonnet Show" is a custom long established, and is growing in popularity every year. Nowhere, perhaps, is such a strange, interesting and harmles custom perpetuated, except in the neighboring County of Clay.

Animal Sagacity.

[Boston Traveller.]

Colonel Miles, now of General Miles' Fifth United States Infantry, was in company on Tuesday last with a gentleman of our acquaintance, and the conversation naturally turned on Indian warfare and frontier experiences, the day being the aniversary of the Custer massacre. Colonel Rice, who had seen service in Indian Campaigns, related a striking anecdote concerning the sagacity of a horse which lost its rider in that fatal fight. Some months after the battle a steamer having on board a portion of the Fifth Infantry was pursuing her voyage near the mouth of the Powder River, on the Yellowstone. The men on the lookout, one of whom was the famous scout, Buffalo Bill, who was scouring the surrounding country for indications of hostile Indians saw in the distance an object moving slowly toward the boat. They anxiously scrutinized it as it continued to approach, supposing that it might be the evidence of a body of hostiles. Their suspicions were not lessened when they discovered it to be a horse, which might be that of a scout watching their movements or signaling the advance of the enemy in force. When the animal came to the bank of the river, however, it was seen to be unmounted and alone, and on approaching the boat it neighed and pranced, manifesting every sign of its joyful recognition. The boat was stopped, and the horse was taken on board it was found to bear the brand, "Seventh Cavalry." The place where it was found was seventy or eighty miles in a bee-line from the scene of the Custer fight. The animal had evidently seen or heard the boat in the distance, and recognized it as a sign of civilization, and, being tired of its free life in the wilderness, gladly embraced the opportunity of returning to its accustomed duties.

Another kindred incident, showing the strength of the second nature implanted by human companionship in domestic animals, was related by Col. Rice. Upon one of the steamers used in the campaign against the Sioux was a small dog belonging to General Miles, which one day fell overboard and was given up for lost. Six months afterward, as the same steamer was returning, the singular sight was witnessed of a small dog and a wolf trotting along the shore in friendly companionship. The dog was recognized as that lost overboard. The steamer was stopped, and the dog taken on board, delighted to meet with his old friends, while the wolf, on the approach of the vessel, ran back into the bush. The intelligent animal had apparently anticipated the return of the boat, and patiently awaited his restoration to his master.

Never Too Late to Learn.

Socrates, at an extreme old age, learned to play on musical instruments.

Cato, at eighty years of age began to study the Greek language.

Plutarch, when between seventy and eighty, commenced the study of Latin.

Boccaccio was thirty-five years of age when he commenced his studies in light literature; yet he became one of the greatest masters of the Tuscan dialect—Dante and Plutarch being the other two.

Sir Henry Spelman neglected the sciences in his youth, but commenced the study of them when he was between fifty and sixty years of age. After this time he became a most learned antiquarian lawyer.

Doctor Johnson applied himself to the Dutch language but a few years before his death.

Ludovico Monaldesco, at the great age of 115 years, wrote the memories of his own times.

Ogilby, the translator of Homer and Virgil, was unacquainted with Latin and Greek till he was past fifty.

Franklin did not fully commence his philosophical pursuits till he had reached his fiftieth year.

Dryden, in his sixty-eighth year, commenced the translation of the Iliad, his most pleasing production.

Thousands of examples of men who commenced a new study, either for livelihood or amusement, at an advanced age could be cited. But every one familiar with the biography of distinguished men will recollect individual cases enough to convince him that none but the sick and indolent will ever say: "I am too old to learn."

Mammoth Cave.

What Can be Seen While Traveling Eighteen Miles in Natures Curiosity Shop.

A LETTER WORTH READING.

MR. EDITOR, Sir:—In my travels through Kentucky, I have always had a strong desire to visit the Mammoth Cave, but attentiveness to business, supported by a degree of avariciousness, forbid the waste of time until last Sunday, when I so arranged matters as to visit with a friend living seven miles from the cave who was desirous of having me visit it with his family on Sunday, and thus satisfy my curiosity. After spending a very pleasant evening with the family and a few of their visiting friends, where the various topics of the day were the subject of discussion, we retired for the night. Next morning bright and early the first ding of the breakfast bell was heard and quickly responded to. Breakfast being over and everything in order, a lofty-headed team and carriage were reined up at the door by the colored servant who announced all in readiness for the trip. All being ready, away we went over the rough rocky hills in which that section of the country abounds. Upon reaching the cave we were kindly received by the courteous landlord and landlady. We did not tarry long, and soon a company of nine persons was formed for the tour. Before entering the cave each person was furnished with a cave costume which consists of a pair of overalls, a loose jacket and a red cloth Scottish cap for the men, while that of the ladies consist of a costume on the order of a bloomer, usually of very flashy colory with contrasting trimmings. The object in that suit is to protect your clothing while passing through those narrow cavities and crevices in the cave, where you come in contact with sharp points and rugged edges of the rocks. At times the visitor is climbing almost perpendicular walls, assisted at intervals by the aid of ladders, sometimes crawling on your hands and knees and again sliding down hill from rock to rock. Then again you are in the most beautiful avenue you have ever witnessed—the floor of solid rock and as smoothe as if it had been chiseled. The walls in places are vertical, and composed of white lime stone in cumulous veriegations. The ceiling in places is lined with alabaster flowers of every conceivable specie, and when illuminated with Bengal light the visitor would be fully impressed with an entrance to an earthly paradise. Each company visiting the cave is furnished with an experienced guide; some of which have been employed there thirty-five and forty years, and who manifest great interest in the welfare and comfort of the visitors, and are ready to answer all questions propounded. When the visitor first approaches the mouth of the cave and takes a survey of the overhanging cliffs of rocks which seem to be on the point of falling and crushing their unfortunate victims into dust or falling in after them and closing forever the avenue between them and the light of the outer world, it produces a sensation of tremor which is soon expelled by the excitement of the various attractions brought to view, and being informed that no portion of the cave has been known to fall in since its discovery. The first thing to be observed at the mouth of this Subterranean monster is a fog which arises all seasons of the year except when the temperature of the external and internal elements are the same. The fog is produced by the condensation of the moisture of the higher by that of the lower temperature. The temperature of the cave is fifty-nine degrees winter and summer without any variation. The cave is remarkable for its purity of atmosphere It is free from all that miasmatical effluvia which the external atmosphere is impregnated with. There is something in the cave atmosphere that exerts a wonderful influence over the physical system. It is remarkable the amount of physical exertion a person will undergo—and it is a fact without doubt, unreasonable as it may seem, that persons in delicate health who think themselves scarcely able to walk two miles on the surface, will accomplish the whole journey of the long route, a distance of eighteen miles, with very little fatigue. On the day of our visit to the cave the themometer showed ninety two. I would have regarded it as a very oppressive task to walk five miles on the surface, while I performed the journey of the long route without suffering from fatigue. There is but very little current of air in the cave except perhaps, in the narrow passages between the large avenues, the avenues serving as reservoir. A short distance from the mouth of the cave (in the entrance) we were confronted by a large iron gate which was firmly locked to prevent foul-hardy persons from entering who would undertake a trip through the cave on their own responsibility, and who having no knowledge of the different avenues and their relative connection with the main cave, would inevitably get lost, as a great many unfortunate have. Here each person was provided with a small hand-lamp. After passing through an archway which is walled up the sides with rock, we entered the main cave which is about six miles long, and termed the short route. This cave is from fifty to a hundred feet in height, and from fifty to three hundred feet in width. The first thing of interest is the Rotunda, the ceiling of which is about one hundred feet high, and the width about two hundred feet. On the floor are the remains of vats and water pipes used in the saltpeter works in 1812, and strange to say, the wooden pipes, some of them as I am informed, are poplar and in the same state of preservation as timber cut down two year ago. Oxen and wagons were taken down into the cave and used at the saltpeter works, and although sixty years ago, the impression of the feet of the oxen and the wheel tracks are yet visible. The earth at the time these impressions were made was moist, but now it is of a stone substance. Leading off from the Rotunda is Audubon's avenue. At the entrance of the avenue is some small cottages built for persons afflicted with consumption, who in their tenacity to life, thought to derive some benefit from the purity of the cave atmosphere; but it proved fatal, as part of them died at the cave and the balance died in a short time after reaching home. The next place of note is the Methodist church. This place is in a semi-circle form, about fifty feet in height and one hundred feet in diameter. The pulpit, as it were, is fronting the circle and is a large projectile from the side of the rock which has a large base and an upright part presenting a marked resemblence of a pulpit, and was used as such in 1812. Some of the logs use for benches still remain there. Next place of interest is the Giants Coffin. This is a large rock about twenty-five or thirty feet long and eight feet in depth, and from the point where the guide takes his stand to cast the reflection of his light upon it, it has the resemblence of a coffin. You can rest assure that the guides will understand how, when and where to use their lights to the best advantage to carry out the illusion. A short distance from the coffin on the ceiling, is a groupe of figures representing the family of the giant. These figures are composed of black gypsum. Next is the Wooden Bowl cave. It derives its name from the fact that a wooden bowl of ancient origin and Indian ingenuity was found in it. Several more places are passed of not much note such as Martha's Palace, Side Saddle Pit, &c., till the bridge of Sighs is reached. Here the visitor comes to a pause and takes a long, still, breathless look down into the dark recesses of the bottomless pit. This bridge is stretched over the pit and is secured with a good iron railing on the sides to guard against any accident. Balls of fire are thrown over into the pit and their downward course watched with great curiosity. Next of importance is the Scotchman's Trap, which is at the end of a low archway, between four and five feet high. Over this narrow passage is a hugh rock suspended and supported by the corner of another rock in the manner of a dead-fall, and should it fall the avenue would be completely closed, however, I understood there are other chances of escape in case it should close the avenue. Next thing we appreciated was Fat Mans Misery. This I suppose derived its name from the distress a fat man would necessarily incur in forcing his way through this narrow passage. This avenue is about two hundred feet long and from fifteen inches to three feet wide. Imagine some of our DeKalb county fat men squeezing through a fifteen inch space. The depth of the lower part of this avenue (width above mentioned) is from three to five feet, but the part above it is from five to ten feet in width and ten to twelve feet high. The lower cavity in this avenue and the place where the visitor passes through, has been cut out of the solid rock by the solvent action of the waters containing carbonic acid. Lime stone constitute the bed of rock through which the cave runs, and is not soluble by waters unless the water coming in contact with it is possessed of a certain portion of carbonic acid in solution in which case the rock becomes soluble, and this is supposed to be the agency by which all the pigeon holes and cavities are cut in the rock. In some instances they are of such uniform regularity as to nearly convince the spectator that they have been chiseled out. From here we pass on to Bacon Chamber. This is so called from the fact that a great mass of rocks hang down from the ceiling, and from the size and shape look very much like hams in a vast smoke-house. Next in order is the Dead Sea. This is a dark dismal hole with perpendicular walls about forty feet high, the sea is about twenty-five feet wide and fifty feet long, and I am informed the water is about fifteen feet deep. The next thing of note is the Natural Bridge over the river Styx.—The bridge is about twenty five feet above the water. This river is from fifty to one hundred and fifty feet in width and about forty feet deep.—From the river Styx we had a long walk not meeting with anything worthy of note until we approached the shore of Echo River. This is one of the most attractive portions of the cave, and the visitors usually take a good rest at this point. This river emerges from under a great wall of rocks and disappears in the same manner. The visible portion of this river is about three quarters of a mile long, from twenty-five to two hundred feet in width and from twenty to twenty-five feet deep. Boats are provided on the river for the transportation of visitors across it, the greatest portion of the cave being beyond the river. The boats cannot land directly opposite to where they start in, as a wall of rocks form the opposite bank, but have to move down the river about one-half mile to the landing, I say down the river by way of explanation, but the current on certain occasions would not warrant this expression, from the fact there seems to be a tidal motion in the river, governed by the rise and fall of the water on the outside During a rise in the rivers on the surface, the current in Echo river it forced in the opposite direction from that when the outside rivers are falling.—When there is no variation in the surface waters, there is but little current in Echo River.—One of the curiosities of the cave is the blind fish and crawfish in Echo River. Both are white and the fish are very transparent. They have a depression in the location for the eye, but no optic nerve to perform the functions of sight. On leaving the shore in a boat we passed under a low archway about three feet from the water, distance of about one hundred and fifty feet, until we reached an opening where the boat was brought to a stand still, and the party soon began to indulge in a little lung exercise, shouting and whooping in order to hear the sound echo and reverberate in the various avenues. While sailing down the river they joined in an old familiar song. On leaving the river we entered Sillviman's Avenue, which is one and a half mile long, there is not much of interest to be seen in this avenue except a number of stone stalactites and stalagmites, the stalactites are formed by the slow dropping of water from the ceiling which is charged with the bicarbonate of lime in solution, when this water drops slow, by which it is exposed to the air long enough to allow the escape of carbonic acid gas it is formed in the manner of an icicle, the protocarbonate of lime adhering to the bottom, this is called a stalactite, but when the formation starts from below, accumulating upwards, it is called a stalagmite. The stern of the Great Western ship is seen in this avenue. This is a large rock which very much resembles the stern and rudder of a ship. Next we come to the Fly Chamber, the ceiling of the chamber is studded with spots of black gyprum about the size of the common house fly. Next of note is Martha's Vineyard, the ceiling of this vineyard is covered with small stalactites of a dark color, being very much the sized and have a marked resemblence of grapes, but the most remarkable object in the vineyard is a stalactite about three inches in diameter from the ceiling to the floor, which is colored with black Oxyd of iron and called the grape vine. From here we passed along to Washington Hall, which is used as the dinning room of the cave. It is seven miles from the entrance and is usually reached about twelve o'clock, on this occasion we were furnished with a bountiful repast by a negro who accompanied us with a large basket of provisions, this place is used as a depot for oil cans to replenish the lamps. After leaving Washington Hall we next entered Snowball Room, here the visitor begins to realize the grandeur of the cave. The ceiling is covered with white nodules of gypsum, which vary in size from one to three inches, and by the assistance of the Bengal light the resemblence to a collection of snow balls would exceed description. The walls are covered with the crystals of gypsum and sulphate of lime. The floor is composed of white lime stone and very smooth. Throughout this room, with the aid of a light, it presents sublime scenery. The next point, and one of the most picturesque scenes in the cave is Cleaveland's Cabinet or Flower Chamber, here the ceiling and walls are covered with stone flowers of every form and variety, when the spectators cast their eyes on the rosettes of gypsum and beautiful alabaster flowers, they look with amazement and are suddenly impressed with the wonderful work of nature. These flowers in form are nearly as regular as could be moulded, the little pit in the center, the natural fold of the leaves, with the scalloped and fringed edge, contribute to them a remarkable resemblence to natural flowers. The floor is very level and covered with white crystals of limestone. This room like that of Register Room, is used by those desiring to leave their autograph and place of residence, some writing with a pencil while others cut their name with a knife on the stone walls. Various inscriptions are to be seen, some indulge in poetical effusion. One verse which usually excites a great deal of comment and laughter I will give you. The writer was from Tennessee and from near the Jackson hermitage, and an enthusiastic young friend of Gen. Jackson, who was on a visit to the cave about the time Jackson was running for the Presidency, and became so enraptured that he gave vent to the following effusion, which he cut on the walls of the cave with his knife.

> God Almighty what a spot,
> In summer cold, in winter hot,
> Ye powers above, Great God I wonder,
> Andrew Jackson, hell and thunder.

From here we pursued our journey until we reached the Rocky Mountain, which is one hundred feet high, and a very steep craggy hill, rather dangerous to climb. On the top of the mountain is a centennial monument, built by the visitors in that year, each person placing a stone on it. On the other side of the Rocky mountain is a long dismal hallow and a few more avenues until Geoghan's Hall is reached, which is the terminus of the cave on the long route, and nine miles from the entrance. A portion of the hall is covered with stalactites of a very hard substance semi-transparent and is susceptible of very fine polish, they are cut in divers shapes, trimmed with gold and makes elegant jewelry. After visiting the hall, visitor is ready to retrace his steps the same route is traveled back unless the visitor desires to take a shorter route through Cork Screw, but a very difficult one to travel, it is a very narrow passage almost perpendicular, sharp corners of rocks protrude on all sides, and for a burly person to get through it would require a great amount of exertion. On our return to the cave hotel which was reached at 6:30 P. M., we were favored with a sumptous repast, which I assure you was heartily relished by the hungry company. The cave hotel is well furnished, the table will compare favorably with the best first class hotels and can comfortably accommodate two hundred guests. The Landlord and Clerk are very courteous and social gentlemen, the Landlady is a worthy lady, who takes great pleasure in the comfort and happiness of her lady guests. The Mammoth Cave is ninty-five miles south of Louisville and within seven miles of the Louisville & Northville Railroad. The nearest point on the railroad to the cave is Glasgow Junction, where a first class hotel is located called the Mentz House. This house is under the superintendency of an accommodating gentleman, who informed me that any person desirous of visiting the cave, and can arrange to stop over Sunday with him. he will furnish them a conveyance gratis to carry them to the cave and back. The Landlady is an amiable lady who attends closely to the wants of her lady guests, and who will do her utmost to make her an agreable home for the sojourner. An admission fee of three dollars is charged for the long route and two dollars for the short route throgh the cave. To the end of the long route and return it is eighteen miles while that of the short route is twelve. There are over one hundred and fifty avenues that have been explored besides a number that have not been. The total length of cave and various avenues is estimated at one hundred miles. The distances which I have given were gathered from others, as the visitor looses nearly all comprehension of distance and time in that dark subteranean world. In fact we may say there is no elementry change in time, there is no change in temperture by which to signify the season, there is no light to aid in the discrimination of night and day. Summer and winter, night and day is the same dismal darkness.

Very respectfully,
J. C. JACKSON.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

JOHN G. TAPPAN, treasurer of the Boston Belting Company, is short in his accounts upward of a million dollars. In consequence of this little "irregularity," the corporation has collapsed.

A BILL for the punishment of tramps has passed the New Hampshire House of Representatives. It provides for punishment by imprisonment from fifteen months to five years, the former penalty being provided for any person proved a tramp.

THE WEST.

THERE were 254 deaths in St. Louis from sunstroke for the week ending Saturday, July 20.

PRESIDENT HAYES and Attorney General Devens attended the soldiers' and sailors' reunion at Newark, Ohio, last week.

CAPT. V. A. SEAVEY has been appointed Superintendent of the Chicago police force, vice M. C. Hickey. The new Superintendent is spoken of as an honest, efficient officer.

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL., was the scene of two violent disturbances on the 23d of July. In the forenoon a sanguinary riot came near being precipitated on account of an attempt, on the part of a railroad company, to lay a track through the town. A body of citizens, headed by Mayor Bowman, attacked the working party, and, after some fighting, in which no one was seriously hurt, drove them off, heaped up the ties that were to be used in laying down the track, saturated them with coal-oil, applied a match, and reduced them to ashes. In the afternoon there was a fresh outbreak of the old feud between the Bidler and Bowman factions, during which over a hundred shots were fired, and several persons wounded. It is said whisky had a good deal to do with the origin of the latter disturbance.

REPORTS from Indian sources say that Sitting Bull lately visited the Sioux at Standing Rock agency, and remained there in disguise several days. It is added that eight different bands of Sioux are pledged to join in a general war whenever the signal is given, the bands now in Canada coming over to open the ball.... The discovery of rich placer deposits in the gold-bearing streams of Arizona is turning a lively tide of immigration to that promising Territory.

THE SOUTH.

THE Potter sub-committee in Louisiana has signified its willingness to summon and hear all the witnesses on intimidation requested by Secretary Sherman.

THE entire business portion of the town of Cattlettsburg, Ky., has been swept away by fire. The loss is estimated at $250,000, upon which there was but a small insurance.... The land upon which the New Orleans Mint has been built has been deeded to the Government, and the final steps for putting the mint into active operation will soon be taken.

WILSON HOWCHINS, living near Fluvanna Court House, Va., murdered his wife, mother-in-law and one child, and then himself. A son 7 years old, who saw his father attack the mother, took the baby out of the cradle and fled to a place of safety.

DURING an affray in the streets of Nashville, Tenn., between Samuel Hicks and Edwin, Nathaniel, Jere and Jones Baxter, sons of Judge Nathaniel Baxter, Democratic nominee for re-election as Judge of the Circuit Court, Hicks and Jones Baxter were fatally shot and the other two Baxters slightly wounded.... Yellow fever has made its appearance in New Orleans in an extremely virulent form.

THE PRESIDENTIAL INVESTIGATION.

The Potter sub-committee, consisting of Representatives Potter, Butler, Hiscock, and Springer, met at Atlantic City, N. Y., on the 23d of July. Representative Danford, of Ohio, was the first witness examined. He testified that he was a member of the Morrison committee that visited New Orleans, and there met James E. Anderson and talked to him about East Feliciana; Anderson said it was the worst bulldozed parish in the State, and related how he had been shot at one night by concealed assassins. He spoke of having put in circulation the story that during the period of registration he came to New Orleans and informed the Republican committee, including Gov. Kellogg, that his parish was going Democratic, the colored vote being largely on that side, and that he had been advised by Kellogg and the Republican committee that he should either not return to the parish at all or come away and make such a protest as would throw the parish out. He said he had put the story in circulation in the hope that the Democratic committee would make him an offer of money, and when by the offer of money he had them good and fast he would expose the authors and blow them sky-high. The witness did not hear Anderson question the truth of the protest.

HON. WILLIAM D. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, testified before the committee on July 24. Said he visited New Orleans to witness the Returning Board count at the request of President Grant. A committee of distinguished Democrats proposed to the Republican "visiting statesmen" that the two bodies of visitors organize and participate in the business of the Returning Board, but the Republicans declined, on the ground that they were there as private citizens, with no official power. Witness said he never heard any conversation among the Republican committee involving an interference with the official duties of the Returning Board; never heard of any suggestion to manipulate the parishes, nor that affidavits were signed with fictitious names.... Cortlandt Parker, of New Jersey, was the next witness. He testified that he visited New Orleans solely at the request of President Grant. He did not, while in Louisiana, hear doubts thrown on the protest made by Anderson as to East Feliciana, or that it was interlined, or that Anderson wished to withdraw it.... Representative Eugene Hale, of Maine, testified that all the Republican visitors maintained the position that they should be careful to abstain from any attempted influence on the Returning Board. Witness thought if Hayes was elected President, Packard was elected Governor of Louisiana.... Ex-Congressman J. Hale Sypher, of Louisiana, testified that he was in New Orleans during the sittings of the Returning Board, and that he was shown by Weber the alleged Sherman letter to Weber and Anderson, and had no doubt of its genuineness. Witness did not read it carefully, and could not swear positively either as to the handwriting or the substance of the document, but believed the copy that has been printed is correct.... Secretary Sherman was called to the stand, and testified that he went to New Orleans at the solicitation of President Grant. On his way he stopped at Columbus and saw Gov. Hayes. Said his conversation with Hayes was general about the election, all then being in the dark.

THE examination of Secretary Sherman was resumed on the 25th. The witness stated that, while in New Orleans, he was never, privately or alone, with any member of the Returning Board; that he treated the members the same as he would have treated any other court or tribunal before which he appeared as a witness or advocate. He denied emphatically the truth of the testimony of James E. Anderson and E. L. Weber, and certain conversations alleged to have taken place between them and him (Sherman); said he never suggested to these men payment for any services that they might render in connection with the Returning Board or in any other way, nor was any promise toward ever intimated. In regard to the celebrated "Sherman letter" to Anderson and Weber, the Secretary asserted positively that he did not write it, although "there were things in it that he would have written to these or any other men who were engaged in the performance of their duty." In reply to a question, Mr. Sherman said that while in New Orleans he wrote a letter to Mr. Hayes, in which he said:

> The action of the Returning Board has thus far been open and fair, and only confirms the general result as known before. We are now collecting testimony as to the bulldozed parishes. It seems more like a history of [illegible] than of civilized and Christian communities. The means adopted are almost incredible, but were fearfully effective upon the ignorant and superstitious people [illegible] a large majority in Louisiana, [illegible] did not receive a majority is equally clear; but that intimidation of every kind and nature provided against by Louisiana law did enter into and [illegible] election in more [illegible] than would change the result and give you the vote, I believe as firmly as I write this. The truth is palpable that you ought to have the vote of Louisiana, and we believe that you will have it by an honest and fair return according to the letter and spirit of the law of Louisiana. Very truly yours,
>
> JOHN SHERMAN.

This letter was dated Nov. 23, 1876, and on Nov. 27 Gov. Hayes responded as follows:

> I am greatly obliged for your letter of the 23d. You feel, I am sure, as I do about this whole business. A fair election would have given us about forty electoral votes at the South—at least that many—but we are not to allow our friends to defeat one outrage and fraud by another. There must be nothing "crooked" on our part. Let Mr. Tilden have the place by violence, intimidation and fraud rather than undertake to prevent it by means that will not bear the severest scrutiny. I appreciate the work doing by the Republicans who have gone South, and am especially proud to acknowledge the honorable conduct of those men from Ohio. The Democrats made a mistake in sending so many ex-Republicans. New converts are proverbially bitter and unfair toward those they have recently left.
> R. B. HAYES.

The witness was interrogated by Gen. Butler in regard to the part he and the President played in the appointment of certain Louisiana Republicans to office. The Secretary replied: "You touch on delicate ground. I ought not to tell you what the President said to me, or what I said to the President." Gen. Butler—"I don't ask you for Cabinet secrets, but I have come to the conclusion that there ought to be no secrets in a free Government." The Secretary—"I will give you the exact facts when we reach Washington." Gen. James A. Garfield was the next witness examined, but nothing of importance was elicited. He was questioned at length as to the testimony of E. L. Weber, denying the general statements of the witness in regard to events in Louisiana in connection with the visiting Republicans. Many of his statements were utterly inconsistent with truth.

WASHINGTON.

THE Attorney General of the United States decides that it would be illegal for the Secretary of the Treasury to attempt the resumption of specie payments before the time provided for by law—Jan. 1, 1879.... Orders have been issued to all sub-treasuries and United States depositories to pay out silver dollars, and in connection with this to restrict the use of $1 and $2 bills as much as possible, to force silver dollars into the place they now occupy in the circulation.

THE case of disputed jurisdiction which has arisen in South Carolina relative to the indictment in a State court of four internal revenue officers upon a charge of murder was considered at a Cabinet meeting a few days ago, and it was determined that firm and vigorous measures be taken to assert the supremacy of the Federal over the State law.... The President left Washington last week for a trip to Ohio.

GEN. CHARLES K. GRAHAM, of New York city, has been appointed Surveyor of Customs at that port, vice Gen. E. A. Merritt, appointed Collector of Customs.

SECRETARY SCHURZ is informed through a letter from Ogden, Utah, of the existence of an extensive system of supplying hostile Indians with ammunition through the Mormon co-operative stores throughout Utah and Southern Idaho. It is represented that the Mormon priesthood are vigorously engaged in converting the Indians to that faith, and that the savages, upon being taken into the Endowment Temple, are sworn to become the allies of the Latter-Day Saints.

IT is stated from Washington that the Postoffice Department has virtually acceded to the request of Secretary Sherman to undertake the transportation of gold coin for the Government. It will be necessary to put up the gold in four-pound packages avoirdupois, which will, therefore, contain about $1,000, the postage upon which, at third-class mail rates, will be 64 cents. The present express charges are in the neighborhood of $5 per $1,000.

THE Commissioner of Agriculture has appointed Prof. Low, of Ithaca, N. Y.; Prof. H. J. Detmars, of Chicago; Dr. Dyer, of Ottawa, Ill.; Dr. J. W. Voyles, of New Albany, Ind.; Dr. Albert Dunlap, of Iowa City, Iowa; Dr. Hines, of Kansas; and Dr. Salmon, of Ashville, N. C., as examiners to investigate the origin of, and devise a remedy for, the hog cholera.

POLITICAL.

THE Republican nomination for Congress in the Toledo (Ohio) district has been declined by Charles Foster, who has concluded to stand for re-election in his own district.

THE Republican State Central Committees of Alabama, Arkansas, and North Carolina have met and formally resolved that it is inexpedient to nominate State tickets at the present time.... In the Texas Democratic Convention, which met at Austin, there were 1,500 delegates, and it required a two-thirds vote to nominate. There were two prominent candidates before the convention for Governor—Hubbard and Throckmorton. After balloting for nearly a week without effecting a nomination, a compromise was effected and the "dark horse" came in, in the shape of P. M. Roberts, Chief Justice of the State Supreme Court, who was chosen by acclamation.... The State Convention of the National Greenback party of Ohio was held at Columbus, Ohio, on the 23d of July, about 250 delegates being present. Robert Shilling, of Cleveland, presided. The following State ticket was nominated: Secretary of State, Andrew Roy, Jackson county; Judge of the Supreme Court, Chilton A. White, Brown county; member of the Board of Public Works, J. R. Fallis, Lucas county.

EX-ATTORNEY GENERAL WILLIAMS, in an interview with a New York reporter the other day, expressed the opinion that Gen. Grant would be renominated for President by the Republicans.... The Nationals, of New York, held their State Convention at Syracuse July 23-4. The convention was largely attended. Gideon J. Tucker was nominated for Judge of the Court of Appeals.

GENERAL.

CONGRESSMAN HUNTON, of Virginia, recently challenged Columbus Alexander, of Washington, to mortal combat. The letter replied in severe terms, neither accepting nor declining the challenge.... During a spree in Washington the other day, George H. Butler, late Consul to Egypt, and a nephew of Ben Butler, took a suit of clothes out of a tailor's store, and was in consequence arrested for larceny, convicted in the Police Court and fined.... Canada is now having an exciting controversy, as a sequel to the recent Battle-of-the-Boyne anniversary at Montreal. Several Orangemen were arrested on that occasion, and are now awaiting trial on a charge of a riotous disturbance of the peace. The question involved is whether the Orangemen's society is included among the organizations and associations which are permitted by the law to march in procession in the streets.

THE decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington upon the Kansas Pacific railroad lands is a very important one. The Commissioner rules in favor of a settler who has pre-empted a tract of railroad land which remained unsold at the end of the third year after the completion of that road. This decision will affect the status of many thousand sales which have been made by the several Pacific railroad companies, whose charters contained the same clause as that of the Kansas Pacific, providing that if any of the lands granted by the Government remain unsold by the railroad company at the expiration of three years from the time the road was finished, such lands should be subject to homestead entry at $1.25 an acre.

MINNIE WARREN, the well-known dwarf, is no more. The little thing died in child-birth, at Fall River, Mass.... The Navy Department at Washington has recently received a communication, from which it appears that Mr. James Gordon Bennett contemplates a double expedition to the North pole, one vessel going by way of Behring's straits, and another by way of Spitzbergen. He has been in consultation with Petermann, the great German geographer, and other Arctic experts abroad, and now proposes to fit his well-known yacht, the Dauntless, for an Arctic expedition, putting in her an auxiliary engine, screw, and otherwise making her complete for an expedition by way of Spitzbergen. The Jeannette is on her way to San Francisco and will pass through Behring's straits early next year. The owner will spend not less than $120,000 on the Jeannette expedition.... Advices from Mexico report the capture of Gen. Escobedo by Diaz troops.... An American schooner recently encountered a Japanese junk, loaded with corpses, about 100 miles north of San Francisco. Not a living soul was on board. The junk had evidently drifted from Japanese waters—the voyagers, some of whom were dressed in rich clothing, dying of starvation.... The Commissioner of Agriculture at Washington reports that the wool clip of 1878 is about 3 per cent. greater than that of last year.

A LETTER from Wilkesbarre, Pa., to the New York Tribune says preparations are being made for a simultaneous strike all over the country—on the railroads, at the mines, and in many of the largest manufacturing establishments. The 15th of August is the day agreed upon, according to the Tribune correspondent, for the inauguration of the strike.... A shocking tragedy was enacted near the village of Rockford, Canada, a few days ago. A young man named James Smith murdered his father and sister by clubbing them with a wooden pump-handle, and then committed suicide by hanging himself.... Intelligence has been received of the loss of the bark Palestine, of Baltimore, near Albaco, West Indies. There were ten persons on board, all of whom were drowned.

FOREIGN.

A PIGEON-SHOOTING match between Capt. A. H. Bogardus, of the United States, and Mr. Wallace, of England, took place at London last week. The terms were to shoot at 100 birds for $100 a side and a silver cup. The match resulted in a draw, each man killing ninety-seven birds.... Gortschakoff has returned to St. Petersburg to thwart the intrigues which are on foot for his retirement and the promotion of Schouvaloff.

THE programme agreed upon by the Liberals in the English Parliament is outlined in the cable dispatches. The plan is to attack the Ministry upon the policy of neglect and indifference pursued toward the Greeks by England in the congress, as well as to criticise the terms and liabilities upon which the acquisition of Cyprus was secured, upon the ground that grave responsibilities have been incurred without the previous knowledge of Parliament in the undefined engagements relative to a better administration of the Asiatic provinces. While Disraeli is quite certain to carry the day in both houses, it will not be without receiving some hard knocks in the course of the fray.

AT the anniversary of the establishment of the Liberal Association in London, Mr. Gladstone made a long speech, in which he begged to decline resuming the leadership of the Liberal party. He powerfully attacked the manner in which the people had lately been governed. No despotic Government in Europe would have dared to do what the Cabinet had done—accepting such responsibilities unknown to the people. He criticised the treaty of Berlin, whereby England consented to replace under the despotic rule of Russia, Bessarabia, which belonged to free Roumania. He denounced the convention with Turkey as an insane covenant, odious to every valuable feeling of the country.

ENGLAND has taken formal possession of the historic little island of Cyprus. Queen Victoria greets her new subjects as usual in a motherly spirit, and informs them that "Rule Britannia" will be the standing order of the day in the island for an indefinite period.... The island of Cuba is to be represented in the Spanish Parliament by forty Deputies and ten Senators.... Earl Beaconsfield has received the highest decoration possible to an Englishman, the Order of the Garter, which was conferred upon him by Queen Victoria in recognition of his distinguished services in connection with the deliberations of the Berlin congress.

THE betrothal of the Duke of Connaught, Queen Victoria's third son, with the Princess Marie Louise of Prussia, daughter of Prince Frederick Charles, has been officially announced in the British Parliament.... Capt. Bogardus has again defeated Capt. Pennell, the English pigeon-shot, in a match for $1,000 a side.

THE Turks have evacuated and the Russians occupied the fortress of Shumla.... A London dispatch announces the death of Sir Hastings Reginald Yelverton, Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom.

Starvation in Labrador.

A Labrador correspondent of the Journal de Quebec gives a heartrending account of the condition of the people along the Labrador coast. The fisheries failed them last fall, and the traders who gave them provisions in barter for their fish and oil abandoned the territory, not caring to let the wretched people have goods on credit. Thus before the winter set in the population was left to starve, or subsist on fish offal, for crops are impossible on that sterile shore. Whole families have lived through the winter on rotten, half-frozen carcasses of seals driven ashore by the ice floes. Others have kept body and soul together by devouring the flesh of the loup-marin, a species of seal, which in prosperous times would be shunned even by the dogs. Many deaths occurred from sheer starvation. Of five families, containing forty souls, in one settlement, only five survive. Scurvy is epidemic. The women haunt the shore like specters, picking up the dead seal, while the men and boys gather sea moss and shell-fish. The correspondent, a French missionary, says: "I know several families who have eaten not only the salted sea fish put away for the winter provender of their dogs, but even the dogs themselves. Those who happened to have a stock of provisions have been compelled to go on short rations and share with their gaunt neighbors. The people have been shut out from the outside world since September. When they found death staring them in the face it was too late to make their wants known, for navigation had closed and they were 200 leagues distant from Quebec, without any means of overland communication in winter." The Lieutenant Governor at Quebec, in answer to this appeal, has ordered a quantity of provisions to be sent to the coast, and clothing, medicine, etc., will follow immediately.

AFTER THE TREATY.

The Dismemberment of the Turkish Empire.

At the beginning of the Turko-Russian war, in April, 1877, says the Inter Ocean, Turkey in Europe, including the tributary states of Roumania, Servia and Montenegro, extended from the river Pruth and the Carpathian mountains on the north to Greece and the Ægean sea on the south, and from the Black sea on the east to the Adriatic sea on the west. The territory under the direct government of the Sultan was 182,340 miles in extent; including the tributary states, the extent of the territory was 197,000 square miles.

Turkey in Asia measured 664,000 square miles in extent, and Turkey in Africa, including Egypt, 1,089,000 square miles. Among the principal islands of the empire were Candia, or Crete, with an area of 3,300 square miles; Samos, with an area of 250 square miles; Cyprus, with a length of 148 miles and a width of forty, and Rhodes, 420 square miles in extent. Crete is south of Greece, in the Mediterranean, and Cyprus just off the coast of Syria in the Mediterranean. The other islands are in the Ægean sea or the Archipelago.

In Europe, Servia acquired the right of self-government in 1829. This was confirmed by the treaty of Paris, which erected Moldavia, Wallachia, and a part of Bessarabia into the tributary state of Roumania. The same treaty made Montenegro a tributary state under the protection of Russia. The area of Roumania, as fixed by the treaty, was 46,140 square miles; Servia, 16,820 square miles, and Montenegro, 1,700 square miles. All the other provinces in Europe, including Bosnia, Herzegovna, Thessaly, and Albania were under the direct rule of the Sultan.

By the terms of the treaty of Berlin, and as a result of the Russian war, Bulgaria, from the Danube to the Balkans, and from Servia on the west to the Black sea on the east, is made a tributary state, as was Servia before the war. The Prince is to be elected by the population, and the new kingdom is to have its own Government and army, and be under the protection of Europe. The area is about 39,000 square miles, and the population 2,500,000.

Eastern Roumelia, extending from the Balkans southward to the Ægean sea, and as far east as Adrianople, is made a province, with a Christian Governor, and certain rights as to self-government, but is to be under the political authority of the Sultan. In the copy of the treaty published the limits are not given, but the discussions in the congress contemplated the South Balkan country in which Bulgarians or Christians preponderated, and this has an area of from 15,000 to 20,000 square miles.

Roumania gives up Bessarabia to Russia, gains the Dobrudscha and other territory south of the Danube, and is made absolutely independent. Servia gains territory about 200 square miles in extent on her southern border, and becomes independent. Montenegro is given new territory, and is made independent. Bosnia and Herzegovina, with an area of about 23,000 square miles, are to be occupied and administered by Austria.

The treaty of Berlin takes away from Turkey absolutely 65,000 square miles of territory, gives the right of self-government to over 50,000 square miles more, and virtually transfers 23,000 square miles more to Austria. This leaves the Sultan in direct control of about 60,000 square miles of territory in Europe, this not including the Christian state south of the Balkans.

In Asia the Russians hold the territory taking in Batoum, Kars, Ardahan, and extending as far west as Olti, in all about half as large as the State of Illinois. All the remainder, over 600,000 square miles in extent, is placed virtually under the administrative control of England. The island of Cyprus is transferred directly to England.

Religious liberty is guaranteed in the states made independent, and in all the remaining provinces of Turkey. If Russia was honest in the declared purpose for which she made war she has succeeded in every particular. She declared that the object of the war was not the acquisition of territory, but the amelioration of the condition of the Christian population of the Balkan peninsula. In this she has succeeded in instituting a sweeping reform. In the treaty of San Stefano she claimed no territory for herself but Bessarabia, taken from her in 1856, and Batoum, Kars and Ardahan in Asia. All these claims were allowed.

Russia has succeeded virtually in destroying the Turkish empire. And while allowing Austria to shape the administration in one section and England in another, she exercises administrative influence herself only in Bulgaria. So far the record of Russia has been consistent. She has accomplished the purpose of the war, and, after fighting all the battles, has not exhibited more greediness than Austria or England in grabbing territory.

Eggs as an Article of Diet.

There is no article of food more wholesome and nutritious than that supplied by eggs. There is a difference in their flavor and quality, owing to the difference in the diet of the birds; yet there are no eggs of winged creatures which are unfit for nourishing the human body. Their chemical composition is nearly the same, for the white and yelk are almost invariably present; and these consist, in the first case, of albumen and water. Eggs require for digestion about as much time as mutton—that is, from three to four hours. They are most readily digested when boiled until the white becomes partially consolidated.

An ordinary hen's egg weighs from one and a half to two ounces; a duck's egg from two to three ounces; the egg of the sea-gull and the turkey from three to four ounces, and the egg of the goose from four to six ounces. The solid material and the oil in the duck's egg exceed those in a hen's egg about one-fourth.

According to Dr. Edward Smith, in his treatise on "Foods," an egg, weighing an ounce and three-quarters, consists of 120 grains of carbon and eighteen and three-fourths grains of nitrogen, or 15.25 per cent. of carbon, and 2 per cent. of nitrogen.

A writer in the Scientific Farmer estimates that the value of one pound of eggs as food for sustaining the active forces of the body is to the value of one pound of lean beef as 1.584 to 1.900.

As flesh producer, one pound of eggs is about equal to one pound of lean beef.

A hen may be calculated to consume one bushel of corn yearly, and to lay twelve dozen or eighteen pounds of eggs. This is equivalent to saying that three and one-tenth pounds of corn will produce, when fed to a hen, one pound of eggs. A pound of pork, on the contrary, requires about five and one-third pounds of corn for its production. When eggs are 24 cents a dozen, and pork 10 cents a pound, we have a bushel of corn feed producing $2.66 worth of eggs and $1.05 of pork.

Judging from these facts eggs must be economical in their production and in their eating, and especially fitted for the laboring man in replacing meat.

Russian Tactics.

The Russians are copying Prussian tactics in their main feature of company columns and an extended firing line. Their fighting formation is a line of groups of skirmishers, four men in each group, with supports and reserves; and such a line may be extended till the groups reach the limit of forty paces apart, or closed to not less than six paces apart; and the parts of such a line need not be uniform, but so varied as to adapt the troops to the features of the ground. This skirmish line is always followed by part of the same company, unless the whole company is extended, as support. When the whole company is extended, other companies of the same battalion form the supports. In attacking, few skirmishers are extended at first, which are gradually reinforced to requisite strength during the advance. The supports follow in companies, either entire or broken up, according to the extent of the line or the nature of the ground. The instructions for the Russian field maneuvers are fairly level with the military science of the time, and they grapple sensibly with the most important problem of minor tactics offered in these days, namely, how to form troops for the attack of an enemy in position. Defense is comparatively easy; there is, of course, plenty of scope for judgment in placing troops to defend ground, but it is not difficult to do this fairly well, and even troops with small training and little power of maneuvering may be formidable on the defensive. But for a successful attack it is necessary not only that the arrangement of the troops shall be good, but that they shall have received that thorough training in the art of regulated advance under rifle fire over all sorts of ground which can alone give them confidence in themselves and each other. Now, from all that has been related of the Russian attacks in practice, as at Plevna, it would appear that, however good their theory of instruction, officers and men have been far too sparingly exercised in this most essential particular.—Gen. Harnley, in Nineteenth Century.

The Last of Mrs. Gray.

A Mrs. Gray, of Fort Worth, Tex., took her three children to the Trinity river and drowned them and herself. James Mixon was attracted to the river bank by the cries of a child, and arrived in time to see the little fellow sink beneath the surface, and Mrs. Gray just going under. She left the following note to her husband:

> I write a few lines to tell you good-by. You said I must leave you, and I could not give up my darlings to be slaves of others. You accuse me of a crime I am innocent of, and, if I ever was guilty, I would be as good as you are, and unless an accident happens I will never trouble you again. So good-by, my darling husband; good-by, pa and sisters; don't shed a tear for me, just think one heartbroken wretch is gone. You all know what a life I have lived lately; but God knows I am innocent of the charge against me, so don't look for me at all.

The note was plainly written, though evidently with a nervous hand. The house was in perfect order. The clothes of the children and her own were carefully laid away, or hung up, and Mr. Gray's supper had been carefully prepared and laid away in the cupboard. The beds were made, the chairs in their proper places, and all things indicated deliberation.

Rules of a Successful Farmer.

The successful life of Mr. Jacob Strawn, the prince of American farmers, is attributed to the close observation of the following maxims, originated by himself:

Make your fences high and strong, so they will keep cattle and pigs out. If you have brush, make your lots strong and secure, and keep the hogs out from the corn.

Be sure to get hands to bed by 7 o'clock; they will rise early by force of circumstances.

Pay a hand, if he is a poor hand, all you promise, and if he is a good one pay a little more; it will encourage him to do still better.

Always feed your hands as well as you feed yourselves, for the laboring men are the bone and sinew of the land, and ought to be well treated.

I am satisfied that getting up early, industry and regular habits are the best medicine prescribed for health.

When rainy, bad weather comes, so you can't work out of doors, cut, split, and pile your wood, make your racks, and fix your fences or gates.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Eating Their Weight in Ice.

The heat in the California and Consolidated Virginia mines is at present so intense and the demand for ice so great that the consumption of ice amounts to ninety-six pounds per day per man. The heat in great part is caused by the unavoidable obstruction of the draught in the Consolidated Virginia shaft by the platforms on which the men stand while engaged in re-timbering. The heat in the lower levels is also aggravated by the heat on the surface. A man who can eat his weight in ice every day ought to be a good one to send in search of the North pole.—Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise.

A YOUNG man, on being asked by his sweetheart why the continued flow of so many rivers into the sea did not fill up the sea and make it run over, replied, "Why, it's the sponges, my dear." "Why, what have the sponges to do with it?" she asked. To which he responded: "Why, the sea is full of sponges, 'way down at the bottom, and they suck up the water—don't you see?"

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Failures for the First Half of 1878.

According to the semi-annual circular of R. G. Dun & Co.'s mercantile agency, the failures for the first six months of the present year show an enormous increase. The public mind has in some measure become prepared for this revelation by the frequency with which these misfortunes have been chronicled by the press, but it remains for the agency to put into shape the final results of the period under review, and to draw from the compilation such inferences as appear to be warranted by the facts presented. This has been done in the usual exhaustive manner, and we condense the following from the elaborate document before us. For the purpose of comparison we group together the following statement, which will illustrate at a glance the significance of the figures for the past six months:

	No. of Failures.	Amount of Liabilities.	Average Liabilities.
1st 6 months in '75	3,563	$ 76,844,266	$21,567
1st 6 months in '76	4,600	106,418,429	23,888
1st 6 months in '77	4,749	99,606,170	20,974
1st 6 months in '78	5,825	130,592,755	22,420

The failures for the half year just closed are thus shown to be in number over 25 per cent. greater than in 1877, while the liabilities indicate a percentage of increase still greater.

These figures are of very grave import, if taken as an indication of the state of trade, for, according to the agency, never before in an equal period, in the history of the country, have business misfortunes been so numerous or aggregating an amount of loss by bad debts so great. But, before accepting these statistics as a true test of the present condition of business, the circular before us urges some considerations in mitigation of the unfavorable conclusion which would otherwise be inevitable. These considerations are briefly synopsised as consisting of an unusually open winter, retarding sales, deliveries of produce and collections; the discussions in and out of Congress of financial measures, and the necessary condition of uncertainty that resulted; the possibility of important changes in the tariff; the postponement of the date of the repeal of the Bankrupt law, and finally, the steady decline in prices of merchandise and the general shrinkage of values, which, it is said, have been more apparent in the past six months than ever before, especially whenever it became necessary to realize. In relation to these points, which are set out at length, the circular says:

"We have thus briefly endeavored to enumerate five leading considerations, which, combined with others always existing, have had a prevailing influence in the past six months toward increasing the figures of failures given above. When it is considered that there are now over 700,000 persons and firms reported in active business by this agency, and of this vast army only a limited number possess a surplus sufficient to withstand such a lengthened period of depression, disappointment and loss as it has been the fate of the country to undergo, it need not be considered as a measure of great disaster that additional circumstances so unfavorable should swell the failure lists to the extent recorded. That these circumstances were only temporary in their duration, and that certain of them may have a tendency to lessen the number of failures hereafter, are points in favor of the future; and, therefore, however discouraging the figures above presented may at first appear, it would be unfair to regard them as an index to the real or permanent condition of the country."

The Story of a Bullet.

The following strange case is reported by the Dansville (N.Y.) Advertiser: "In the war of the Rebellion, John Slater, of this village, was a member of Company B, Thirteenth New York regiment, and in the seven days' fight before Richmond, in June, 1862, was struck by a rebel bullet, which penetrated his head just behind his left ear. The bullet was split in two by the concussion, and half of it broke his jaw and came out of his mouth. The other half passed in some mysterious way down into his left lung, and has troubled him there more or less ever since until Sunday, when he coughed it up! It is now in the possession of Dr. Blake."

THEODORE REED, Editor.

BONDS, SYNDICATES, TAXES.

It is always a good thing to count the cost of any luxury before indulging too extravagantly in it, especially so when one has to mortgage himself, his farm, his future, his life, and his daily earnings to pay that cost.

United States bonds, it was thought when they were issued, were absolutely essential as a means of raising money. Men had not comprehended the great truth that a people who will not rely on themselves will not be trusted by others. Bonds had long been the means of loaning money, and the past not only favored the plan, but the men who had money to loan favored it. They knew the United States would pay all they agreed to pay. They knew that the demand for money was so urgent, to meet the alarming expenses of the war, that capital, by holding back, by magnifying dangers, increased by the daily increasing necessities for money, and by hourly conjuring up the difficulties and dangers of civil war, could demand any usury the wildest apprehension of a bankrupt treasury could justify. Gold, as it always does when it is required, at once disappeared, even what there was of it; but there was not gold enough in the United States, or which could have been forced from all the coin resources of England, to meet the war expenses of 1862-3-4 for two months. Money had to be raised. It was the price of constitutional liberty, and, whatever the cost, it must be procured. No difficulty was found in using and negotiating our treasury certificates or interest notes; and if the statesmen of the time had possessed the courage to defy and put down the senseless clamor of capital against paper money there would have been no necessity for the issuing a single bond outside of the United States. With the money held by savings banks and the disposition to invest in United States securities by men of moderate means, if we had dared to have relied upon ourselves, and issued greenbacks as absolute money, to meet any and every emergency, we should have saved to the United States more than $3,000,000,000, and would have been stronger as a Government, more united as a people, more prosperous in our enterprises, than ever before; but we dared not trust ourselves, and the question comes up, Why was it that the people of the United States dare not trust themselves to issue their own money?

In answering this question I shall hope to show not only the exact fallacy of the fear, but the enormous cost the yielding to the derisive clamor of capital has imposed upon us.

The old idea upon which capital has made labor its slave was that gold and silver were the only safe basis as a medium of exchange; that all bills issued, and circulated as money, must be redeemable in gold and silver, and that any issue of bills beyond the power of redemption in gold and silver would be dangerous; that to issue bills to meet the war expenses, and to pay for all we required, would soon create an excess of paper—an excess so great as to preclude any possible idea of finding gold and silver to redeem it; that this excess would create distrust, distrust depreciation, and that the result of the depreciation would be that the money issued by the Government of the United States would become as worthless as the French assignat—the paper money issued by France during the French Revolution—or as valueless as the Continental money issued by the colonies before they had consolidated into governmental unity and power, or again as destitute of reliability as the paper money issued by the Southern Confederacy while rebels were attempting to disrupt the Union.

Timid men, ignorant of all the reasons which led to the failure of the assignat of the French, the Continental currency of the colonies, and the baseless bills of the Southern Confederacy, placed the United States in the exact position of the Revolutionists without Government, constitutional power, or resources. As France, at the time the assignat was issued, was without a Government, the colonies were united by no political or governmental obligations, and, as the Southern Confederacy was a mere revolutionary experiment, the bonds given by either of these merely revolutionary combinations would have been as utterly valueless as the currency they issued. With the United States Government it was admitted that the bonds would be good, while at the same time it was insisted that the bills they might issue as money would be as worthless as the French assignat, which at first had no foundation for a basis but jobbery, which was killed by forgery.

It was upon this baseless fallacy that the bonds of the Government were forced upon the market at the price of gold. To convince the communities and to create a political excuse for issuing bonds, gold, which could not be obtained and which by no possibility could be procured, was made the standard of value by which the standard of the value of the greenback was to be measured. Gold at one time went to a premium of 247 for 100, so that, according to the standard, the greenback was 40 to 42. They then fixed the value of the bond at the price the greenback would bring in gold. Congress was duped into aiding this trick to reduce the value of the bond to the standard of the greenback measured by gold in that way. If the greenback was issued as a full legal tender for all purposes, it would be absolute money. If absolute money, then it would do what gold would do. Bankers and brokers and usurers and capitalists combined to prevent this. They appealed to the Senate. They said: If the greenback is issued as a full legal tender, you will soon destroy its value, for you will have to issue so many bills and so large amounts that you will glut the market, and they will depreciate and become as valueless as the assignat. To prevent this they provide that they shall not be received for revenue duties, nor for interest on the public debt, for unless you do this you cannot sell your bonds, for to make your bonds available you must make the interest payable in gold, and you cannot get the gold to pay the interest unless you require your revenue duties to be paid in gold. The Senate was duped by this cut-throat argument.

The result was just what was anticipated. As the Government repudiated its own money, and would not receive it for duties, and as it would not pay interest on the public debt, bankers, brokers, and usurers depreciated the greenback till they reduced its comparative value, as measured by gold, down to 42 up to 40. This, these same Shylocks made the measure of the value of the bonds. Then everybody who had money bought the bonds, getting $2 for $1, in bonds made payable in coin, with interest payable in gold.

A more monstrous swindle never was imposed on the people. The credit of the Government, forced down by depreciating the greenback, was so low that capital also forced Congress to exempt the bonds from taxes before it would consent to take them. And yet, all the time, while the whole brood of Wall street sharps was at work to depreciate the greenback, they insisted that the bonds was the true way of saving the credit of the Government; they slandered the greenback, and lied it into depreciation, to get the bonds measured in value by the greenback at half their nominal and absolute value.

Keeping up their assault upon the greenback, continually prophesying that they would be as worthless as Continental money, and declaring that they were being printed by steam power, and in such quantities as to have to keep all the paper-mills in the country at full head to supply the paper for the rag money, these same bankers, brokers and usurers finally said: "Well, we will not take your bonds unless you will make them the basis for banking, and give us an issue of bills equal to the amount of the bonds, and grant us a monopoly of banking privileges. Your greenbacks will soon be good for nothing, and unless you enlist the banking capital of the country to give character and credit to the paper money of the country, the credit of the nation will be ruined." Again Congress became the dupes, and added to the purchasers of bonds the further inducement of giving them $90 of bills, guaranteed by the Government, with every $100 of bonds, to lend out as money at compound interest.

Thus the bankers, brokers and usurers, by depreciating and causing the Government to repudiate its own greenback money—every dollar of which was intrinsically as good as gold, as they represented absolute solvency and absolute ability—they got for every $42 $100 in bonds, an interest payable in gold, and equal to 9¼ per cent. and equal to 25 per cent. on the investment, and 90 per cent. in bills at compound interest, which facts show have earned 9¼ per cent., which would be 19 per cent. more, which, added to the 25 per cent., makes 44 per cent. Add to this the interest received on bank deposits, which averaged the full amount of the capital of the banks in bonds, and equals 18 per cent. more on the actual investment, and aggregates 62 per cent. annual income on every dollar invested, so that the amount stands as follows:

Amount actually invested $42,000.

Amount realized in bonds bearing gold interest	$100,000
Amount national-bank bills to lend	90,000
Amount of deposits, on which banks made loans	120,000
The $42,000 realizes the use of	$310,000

Amount of income on above:

Interest, payable in gold, average 60 per cent. premium at 6 per cent. in gold	$ 9,000
Interest on bills loaned, being compounded on 30, 60 and 90 day paper, equal to 9½ per cent	8,550
Interest on deposits—the deposits being nearly double the capital—is shown to have been equal to the whole capital, at 9½ per cent	9,500
Total annual income (on original $42,000)	$27,050

Thus showing that an investment in United States bonds by the bank usurers of $42,000 earned an annual profit of $27,050, and that without taxation, or about 62 per cent. dividends to be paid by the tax-burdened people, without the slightest earthly benefit, to a monopoly of bank aristocrats, who now proclaim it to be their duty and mission to reduce American labor to the lowest standard of European pauperized wages.

All of this time the standard of responsibility of the Government was exactly the same for greenbacks as it was for bonds, except only that the bonds bore interest and the greenbacks did not.

The banks have in this way filched from the people of the United States, in the fourteen years, the sum of $1,559,285,941.34, making an aristocracy of power, of wealth, and of associated impudence and privileges which to-day defies the Government and threatens civil liberty.

Every dollar of this monstrous leech would have been saved to the people and to the Government if the Government had issued greenbacks as full and absolute legal tender for all debts, public and private, in place of issuing bonds.

Again, if the Government had issued greenbacks instead of bonds, and made a sinking fund of the sum paid for interest on the bonds, we should to-day have gold enough in the treasury or its equivalent to have redeemed every dollar that would have been issued, and have thus been free from any national debt.

These are not random statements, they are concrete facts.

The interest-bearing debt, April 1, 1876, was as follows:

Principal.	Interest.
$984,999,650 at 6 per cent	$59,099,979 00
$710,037,000 at 5 per cent	35,501,850 00
$23,184,360, miscellaneous at 6 per cent	1,391,001 60
Total annual interest	$95,992,830 60

This is about the present amount of annual interest we are paying for the enjoyment of the bond luxury. The interest-bearing debt has been steadily decreased since 1866, and is now $482,431,080 less than it was then; so that, taking the average for fourteen years, the interest has been at the rate of $111,494,779.20 yearly in gold. Had this sum been funded it would have been hundreds of millions more than our national debt.

This is a proximate estimate of what it has cost the Government to build up a bond-banking aristocracy at the expense of every interest but money, making the laborer a slave to capital, industry a hireling to money-bags, and the Government a dupe to usurers.

But this is far from all. The taxes on $1,600,000,000, at 2 per cent., is $32,000,000 annually, which has been taken from the bond-aristocracy to be imposed on the betrayed and insulted producer.

All of the capital and all the profits—all the exemptions grown, by fourteen years of outrage, into immense proportions of capital and power—are now consolidated to secure the continuance of bond and bank monopolies. It is the absolute duty of Congress to put an end to the infamous extortion from the people. It must be the issue in every Congressional district: Bank monopolies or no bank monopolies; tax exemptions or no tax exemptions; syndicates and bonds or no syndicates and no bonds; the sovereign money of the people—the greenback—absolute as a universal legal tender and irredeemable, or national-bank sovereignty. These are questions and issues that cannot be skipped over or neglected.

We want no more bonds; we want no more syndicates. The American people can get along without any red-shield dictation as to who shall buy their bonds, or who shall dictate the expenditure of their money; and they will not submit to any system of finances which will place the Government or the people in subjection to Jews, to syndicates, or to corporations.

Bonds and syndicates are the curse of the land. The people demand an issue of greenbacks as absolute money adequate to pay all the bonds—adequate to sweep away all the national banks, all monopolies, all privileges, all syndicates, and if the present Congress does not understand the demand we will elect a Congress that does. It is such outrages that give birth to revolutions. The outrage must cease or it will be made to cease.

STEPHEN D. DILLAYE.

TRENTON, N. J.

GREENBACKS.

The Superiority of a Paper Over a Metallic Currency Is Due to the Progress of Civilization, for Which the Metals Are Too Slow.

When during the war it was proposed to issue Government bonds for loans of money I strenuously opposed the project, and urgently advocated the continued issue of greenbacks. I pointed out then, as I do now, that a greenback is a non-interest-bearing bond, and a bond is an interest-bearing greenback; that as it would be the aim of Government, like all others, to pay as little interest as possible on its bonds, it could not do better than issue bonds on which no interest whatever need be paid; or, in other words, confine itself to putting out the non-interest-bearing bonds known as the greenback currency; that, excepting the distinction of interest, of usury, there was no difference between the two obligations; that if the nation could pay off interest-bearing greenbacks (alias bonds), principal and usury combined, it would be still better able to pay off a non-interest-bearing greenback debt when the principal alone need be provided for; that a thousand or fifteen hundred millions of greenbacks would ultimately prove a much smaller debt than an equal amount of bonds, since the former called for no interest, while the latter would, within sixteen years, exact in the shape of usury a tribute from the earnings of the people equal to the entire bonded debt, and we would still owe the debt; that the non-interest-bearing greenback would ultimately not be a national debt, but, like gold and silver, would become a currency, carrying with it so many blessings that the community would sternly forbid its withdrawal, even though the Washington treasury were filled with gold; and that if the nation did wish to regard the greenbacks as a debt, and desired to pay it off, the feat could be much more easily and speedily accomplished than if it were a bonded debt, since the usury exacted by the latter would in sixteen years suffice to retire every greenback dollar.

A few leading journals of the day good-naturedly opened their columns to the ventilation of my heterodox and bizarre opinions, as they were then deemed, more, however, as a source of amusement to their readers than with any idea that even the writer could seriously entertain such notions in view of the fate which had overtaken our Continental money and the French assignats.

Whenever the advocates of an exclusively metallic currency are hard pressed by the adherents of a national greenback currency, they retire upon the Continental money and French assignats as upon two impregnable fortresses whence they may assail their foe with impunity and in perfect safety. They can do this because the upholders of a greenback currency are obliged to admit that both the American and French paper money came to grief—an admission which seems to carry with it an acknowledgment that the greenback currency they so ardently advocate is open to a similar disastrous experience. Both sides are led astray by a common error; the one openly proclaims and the other secretly believes that the Continental money and French assignats came to naught because they were paper money; hence the hard-money side confidently flourish the lamentable financial experience of our forefathers and their good allies, in the faces of their greenback opponents as a final, unanswerable argument; while the latter, more than half assenting to what seems an incontestable historical truth, evade the issue by falling back upon the far greater intrinsic merits of the greenback over its earlier prototypes. Now, neither the Continental money nor the French assignats failed because they were paper money, for had they been gold and silver, while the rest of the world recognized nothing but paper money, the result would have been the same; they failed because neither nation was in that condition of social, mental, and political industry and commercial development which is essential to the profitable utilization of such a currency.

What a currency of cowry shells is to simple barter, and what a metallic currency is to one of cowry shells, so is a paper currency to a metallic one; each marks a higher grade of civilization in the masses of the people over those who are confined to the earlier, to the more primitive methods of representing values and of effecting exchanges. Thus it is evident that those who support the greenback currency on the ground that it is intrinsically superior to the Government paper money above referred to, or to any other Government paper money, assumes an unstable position which exposes them to attacks not easily parried; for really there is very little distinction between them, certainly not enough to warrant the substitution for a metallic currency of a greenback one in preference to any other Government paper money.

On the other hand, the greenback supporters will intrench themselves in an impregnable position by taking the ground that the superiority resides, not in the currency, but in the civilization—in the mental, social and political progress of the people, who, because of their progress, require such a currency. This will at once transfer the discussion from what is little better than a squabble about the relative merits of the currencies on the score of the materials with which they are composed, up to the higher plane where it properly belongs, concerning the relative conditions of people who can properly and profitably use such a currency, and those who have failed and will fail in the attempt.

In our eagerness to proclaim the advantages derivable from our greenback currency we should be careful not to arrogate for it the distinction of a grand panacea that ought to be universally adopted; this is simply impossible; we must confine ourselves to demonstrating that greenbacks are in an eminent degree the best suited for a people in a certain geographical position and progressive condition, and that we, if no others, fulfil these requirements.

WILLIAM HOWARD.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.

The Pivot Man.

Like Figaro in the opera, John Sherman appears to have been in every part of the Louisiana conspiracy. He was recognized by the chiefs and their subordinates of all degrees as the master spirit and director of the work to be done by them; as the responsible agent of Hayes, and as the man of all others who knew the situation best, and was ready to meet its demands, of whatever kind they might be. Hence he was looked up to by Wells, Anderson, Kellogg, and the rest of that crew, as the pivot upon which the whole machine turned.

From the highest to the lowest, they all knew him, and his word was law to their acts and movements. That he was entirely familiar with every part of the operations of the Returning Board, when in secret session, and sometimes singly, as when Wells ordered the original return of Vernon parish to be destroyed, they falsified figures, forged returns, inserted manufactured protests, and rejected whole parishes upon affidavits fabricated by the cart-load at the Custom House, is no longer doubtful.

In the part he played then ignorance was impossible, and the part he has played since that time makes it certain, when taken in connection with the proofs that have been produced in a variety of forms, that he must have had intimate knowledge of every phase of the conspiracy, as he certainly had acquaintance with the actors who appeared on the stage, and the machinists who shifted the scenes behind it. No detail was too small for his attention, and, from the day he entered New Orleans as a visiting statesman until the hour when the great fraud was consummated, he was the head and front of the conspiracy to steal the Presidency. When it was achieved, he got the reward which he chose to ask, and has utilized it, as he did the Chairmanship of Finance in the Senate.

After Tom Anderson returned to New Orleans in December, 1876, with the irregular and illegal certificate of Louisiana, which he carried there as a messenger appointed for that purpose, it was necessary, without delay, to get up another in due form. That was done, as has been proven, in the case of Levissee, by forging the names of some of the electors who were not present and could not be reached within the time allowed by law. Charles Hill, a carpet-bagger from New Jersey, and an officeholder of course, was detailed to take the forged certificates to Washington, though he had no legal appointment to that effect.

Hill was examined by the sub-committee in New Orleans on the 1st of July, and he was required to relate his experience in delivering the forged certificates to the President pro tempore of the Senate. After stating that he had seen Zach Chandler, to whom he bore a letter from Kellogg, he testified:

> I went at once to Mr. Ferry, who was in his office at the Capitol. His secretary was there—Mr. Moses, I think, was his name. No one else was in the room. I told him I had brought the returns from Louisiana. Mr. Ferry asked me if I had any one to witness the delivery of the documents to him. I told him I knew Mr. Sherman, for I had me him there. In a few minutes Mr. Ferry, after stepping out, came in with Mr. Sherman. I then delivered the documents. This delivery was witnessed by Mr. Sherman. He then went to the room of the Finance Committee and there wrote me a letter to Gov. Kellogg, acknowledging that the returns had been delivered to the Vice President. The letter was a private letter, and I don't know what the contents were.
>
> Q.—How was it Mr. Sherman was handy to witness the receipt of the returns when you gave them to Mr. Ferry? A.—I don't know except that he was in the Senate chamber or room adjoining.
>
> Q.—How often did you see Mr. Sherman when he was here with the visiting statesmen? A.—I saw Mr. Sherman some five or six times here.
>
> Q.—Did Mr. Sherman say anything else to you in Washington? A.—When I was coming away I called on him to bid him good by, and he gave me to understand that the party would stand by us.
>
> Q.—Did you inform Mr. Sherman or any one else of the fact that the second returns or certificates you had carried on had cured the defects of the old ones? A.—I did not indicate to either Mr. Sherman, Mr. Hale, or Mr. Frye anything about curing the defects of the first. Mr. Sherman knew that better than I did.
>
> Q.—How did he know that? A.—He must have known.
>
> Q.—Have you got any ground for supposing it? A. (Hesitating)—I've not got any ground for supposing it.

Hill was undoubtedly right. Sherman knew better than he did what his agents had been doing in Louisiana; for no move was made and no act of importance was done without his knowledge or advice. From the beginning to the end he was the mainstay of the conspiracy; and it is now made clear, that but for his presence in New Orleans, and the support given to the Returning Board after their first false count, which left out two of the Hayes electors, the iniquity would never have been completed. By promises of reward and of protection the second count was made.—New York Sun.

"I Know All About You, Capt. Dennis."

Of all the persons who have given testimony concerning the frauds in Louisiana and Florida, Dennis seems to have had no motive to testify untruthfully. Some of the "squealers" have involved themselves in tangled nets in which they have been convicted, not only of inexplicable contradictions, but have laid bare a personal animus concealing a little disappointment. Dennis' testimony there is neither an intrinsic nor extrinsic reason to doubt. He had "been taken care of." He wanted less than he got. He wished to work and to be paid for it; he was paid handsomely for doing nothing, and his only complaint, if he made any, was that the administration insisted on supporting him in luxurious but disagreeable idleness. The manner of Dennis' employment, told by him with great simplicity, and with unfeigned anxiety not to censure Mr. Hayes, is one of the most explicit of many of the condemnations which the latter has placed upon his own professions of civil-service reform.

It is a fundamental principle of civil service that fitness for specific duty shall be the prime reason for appointment under the Government. When Dennis called on the President, the latter said to him: "I know all about you, Capt. Dennis." What did he know? That Dennis was a linguist, and would be useful in the State Department? No, Dennis' literary attainments are limited to one language, and are meager in that. That he was familiar with army matters, and would do good work in the War Department? There was no pretense of that, on either side. He was not an expert in anything. There was no reason for his appointment so far as intellectual qualifications went. The President did not profess to be misinformed; he added: "You are one of the few men whom this administration can afford to take care of." Why? Simply because he had rendered effective service in defeating the wishes of the people of his State in their choice of Presidential electors. For this reason, and this only, Mr. Hayes considered Dennis "one of the few men whom this administration can afford to take care of." The President made a personal request of Secretary Sherman to give Dennis "the first good place," and subsequently wrote to Sherman that Dennis would make "a capital special agent of the treasury," although the duties special agents are called upon to perform require sagacity, experience, and technical knowledge of treasury workings. It was evident, however, that Capt. Dennis was not expected to do any work. Sherman had friends of his own for the vacancies in several of the divisions, and Dennis, although as ignorant of architecture as a mule, was made assistant to the Supervising Architect, with a salary of $7 a day. He had nothing to do; he could do nothing. He was expected to do nothing. But this is a civil-service reform administration! He was given a leave of absence—perhaps on account of his long and ardent toil—or for some other reason, and went visiting to Massachusetts, where he remained three months, drawing $7 a day, Supervising Architect Hill doubtless signing the pay-roll which lyingly declared that this man was giving the people of the United States an equivalent for their money. Dennis grew tired of idleness, went back to Washington, was given a commission in the Secret-Service Bureau, although wholly unfitted for its duties, and went home to Florida, with nothing to do except charge the Government his expenses, and continue to draw his pay. Then he was transferred to the Internal Revenue Bureau, although innocent of all knowledge of the Revenue laws, and his pay went on regularly as usual.

He, therefore, had every reason to thank Mr. Hayes, and no reason whatever to testify to aught which would reflect on the President or his advisers. On the contrary, he had the strongest motives for coloring his testimony in their favor. He lacked the courage or the baseness to commit perjury before the visiting investigating committee, and as soon as his description of the manner in which the electoral vote of Florida was stolen for Hayes reached Washington he was notified—but not until then—that his pay should be forthwith stopped. "I know all about you, Capt. Dennis," was a most unfortunate speech for the President to make, since all that he could know about Dennis was his part in the corruption of that scandalous period. "You are one of the few men whom this administration can afford to take care of" is still more unfortunate, in view of the indefensible manner in which the President proceeded to take care of him.—Chicago Times.

All Hands Provided For.

It was John Sherman's promise to the hesitating Anderson and Don Weber that if they would only "stand firm," and make false returns, a grateful party would never forget it of them, and they should be well "cared for."

All hands have been provided for.

Let us see. There are a good many of them, first and last, who were concerned in the Florida and the Louisiana iniquity, but they have all been quietly looked after and "cared for." Only look at the lists, for the two States:

FLORIDA.

Noyes, of Ohio	Minister to France.
Kasson, of Iowa	Minister to Austria.
McLin	Justice in New Mexico.
Gov. Stearns	Com'r of the Hot Springs.
Dennis	In Sup. Architect's office.
"Judge" Cessna	Postmaster.
Black	In the treasury.
Vance	In Postoffice Department.
Clark Howell	Collector of Customs.
Bowles, of Leon	In the treasury.
"Judge" Bell	Governm't Timber Agent.
Elector Humphreys	Collector, Pensacola.
Stearns' Secretary	In the treasury.
Striker Maxwell	Lieutenant in the army.
Phelps	Commissioner to Paris.
Varnum	Receiver Land Office.
Taylor, County Clerk	In Land Office.

Truly a good list; and here are a few of the Louisiana arrangements:

LOUISIANA.

Kellogg	United States Senator.
Tom Anderson	Collector of Customs.
Marks	Tax Collector.
Brewster	Surveyor General.
Clark	In the treasury.
Hill	Naval Store-keeper.
Campbell	U. S. District Attorney.

There are others. And now not one of them can remember how the returns were forged. But they have been "well cared for." John Sherman seems to have taken a liberal share. We find no fewer than eight that he has taken under his wings. He might, at a pinch, take the whole lot. In that case he would be like the hen that was made the subject of a boy's experiment. Having gathered all the eggs in the barn and put them in the nest of a sitting hen, and being asked what he was doing, he replied that he "just wanted to see the old hen spread herself." Sherman can spread himself, and is ready to do it, rather than have any more of his eggs addled. But what a picture these lists present! And it looks as if Mr. Hayes had "had an eye" on things.—Hartford Times.

Democratic Congressional Convention.

Notice is hereby given that a delegate convention of the Democrats of the 13th Congressional district, and all others in said district who subscribe to the principles enumerated through the Democratic state platform, adopted at Indianapolis on the 23nd of last February, will be held at Kendalville, Indiana, on Tuesday August 20th, 1878, at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Congress, and for the transaction of such other business as may be presented. In accordance with the basis of representation heretofore established, the several counties are entitled to send the following number of delegates to said convention. DeKalb, 26; LaGrange, 19; Elkhart, 34, Marshall, 28; Kosciusko, 27; Noble, 27 and Steuben, 8.

By authority of the Congressional Central Committee.

CHAS. A. O. McCLELLAN,
Chairman.

The Republican county convention will be held at the Court-House next Saturday. Work among the candidates has been lively during the last week, more than simply calling on people to "let them know that they are candidates" has been indulged in, and it is intimated in some quarters that a combination has been formed by these same fellows that advocate "no electioneering." Murder will out, gentlemen.

Anderson, the political dead-beat whom the Potter committee relied upon to upset the Louisiana election by false swearing, is in bad repute even among his own relatives. He was a wandering young tramp in 1864, and arrived at Wooster, O., where he fastened himself for a time upon an uncle, who now refers to the event by remarking: "I fed him for about three months until he stole my watch, when I drove him off." —Indianian.

And yet this is one of the men who shaped the election returns so as to count in Hayes.

The Democracy of the 12th district are not the least alarmed about "Colerick's chances" being "complicated" by Studebaker, as the Waterloo Press puts it. The inconsistency in the Studebaker nomination is from the fact that the greenback men are fighting the very interests that their candidate represents, while in this district the greenback party has nominated a man who has long been known to be in sympathy with the principles advocated by that party, and who was nominated by a convention that passed resolutions in harmony with the platform adopted by the Democracy of Indiana. In one case the greenbackers are supporting a banker and bondholder contrary to their teachings, in the other case the Democrats, by endorsing Tousley, would be supporting a greenback candidate who advocates greenback principles, the very same principles that the Indiana Democracy advocate.

Are they equally consistent?

Why Should They?

Why should a Democrat want to leave his party at this time, when that party is about to realize, after a long period another lease of power, through which it is to accomplish what the people have so long demanded. We have had control of but one branch of Congress lately, and a Republican Senate has opposed almost every move made by a Democratic House for the relief of the people. The repeal of the resumption act would have been accomplished long ago had the Senate concurred. The soldier would have had the benefit of his labor for three or four long weary years had the Senate passed the House bill. The expense of the government would have been materially reduced had the Senate approved of the appropriation bills as they came from the House. Since the Democrats came into power in the House, they have accomplished all that was possible, with the Senate and an administration against them. Why then abandon them until they have a fair chance to demonstrate whether they will be true to the interests of the people. We will soon have the Senate and a Democratic President, and then if they do not meet the popular demands it will be time enough to leave them. Give them half the chance the Republicans have had in the last sixteen years, and then judge from the result. Now is the time for every Democrat to stand true to his colors and win a victory, out of which we never again can be swindled. Remember the fate of '72, when Democrats were led off by the Greeley movement. Let us not repeat it, but be guided by the experience of the past, and stand by a party that is strong and vigorous, and pledged to the interests of the people.

* * *

The hard times still continue and the Republican party is still in power. For three years we have had splendid crops and yet no relief has come. A Democratic House has struggled to reduce the extravagance of a Republican administration, and its efforts have been defeated to a great degree by a Republican Senate. Factories still remain idle, and the workshop is silent—care and trouble cloud the brow of the poor, while the rich man spends his thousands at fashionable resorts. While the bondholder has repeated legislation in his interests, the masses have been ignored. Hundreds of workmen to-day are demanding work, and many are penniless. Sherman's contraction is crushing out the industrious who have struggled and are vainly struggling to get free of debt. Government property is being used by officials on pleasure tours while the laborer wanders weary and foot sore in search of employment. At the Capital of our nation, the government has indirectly cut down the wages of laborers from $1.50 to 75 cents a day and expects the people to submit to starvation wages. Though an abundance, through a blessed Providence, is realized in the agricultural districts, want and penury is rife among us. Daily suicides and crimes untold are being committed, by those who, under employment would make good, industrious, lawabiding citizens. And yet the Republican party asks for a further lease of power that these evils may be multiplied, and a reign of terror inaugurated. Why should a Democrat hisitate for a moment to stand firmly by his post, the only means now left the people to avert the disaster threatening us, and bring peace as well as plenty to our borders and crown all with an active, prosperous industry. Why?

* * *

The following are the resolutions passed by the Greenback Convention of this county:

The National Greenback Labor Party of DeKalb county, Indiana, do declare and publish the following principles, which shall indicate its purpose:

1st. That we proclaim the right and duty of the United States Government to create a legal tender paper money, the same as gold and silver money, should be a full legal tender for all debts both public and private.

2d. We demand the repeal of the National Bank law.

3d. We demand the repeal of the Resumption Act.

4th. We demand the calling in of all the interest bearing obligations of the United States, at the earliest possible period, and the payment of them in the legal tender money of the United States.

5th. We demand that the rate of interest shall be brought down to the average rate of the annual profits of the farming industries, say 3 per cent.

6th. That inasmuch as the lucrative spoils of office cause corruption in the scramble for them, and in justice to the tax-payers we demand that all salaries and fees of Federal, State and County officers be reduced to a fair and reasonable compensation for services rendered, and when practicable such compensation should be fixed by law.

Stoll, of the Ligonier Banner, takes exception to a little sarcasm made use of to express our disapproval of the cowardly manner in which Tilden sacrificed a popular majority of a quarter of a million Democratic votes, and intimates that Tilden is a greater man than we are. We do not question Mr. Tilden's "acknowledged ability." As to the "contemptuous fling" in question, we have no retraction to make, neither do we desire to enter into any discussion at this time, relative to Tilden's claim upon the Democratic party for renomination. At the proper time, however, we will exert what little influence we may have in favor of western Democrats and western interests, rather than eastern men and a bonded aristocracy. The gratuitous advice of the BANNER to the contrary notwithstanding.

Daily Economy.

Not from advice given in well written articles by men of great ability, nor from words of caution uttered by those whose bitter experience in the loss of fortune has taught them a sorrowful lesson, do people learn to economize; but in most cases to successfully practice economy stern necessity must be the ruling cause, as indicated in the following well written article from the Indianapolis Sentinel: It seems like cruel sarcasm to advise economy when there are few in the land outside of the absolutely wealthy who have aught to save, and yet just at the moment economy is the one great lesson the "hard times" will enforce. For years, in fact, ever since the war changed the habits and the business lives of the great majority of men, it has seemed as if nothing short of thousands and millions of dollars was worth the estimating, and speculations involving almost fabulous sums were as frequent as the minutes of the day. But as the fever heat began to subside, as the current of trade resumed its wonted channel, the bubbles of suddenly acquired riches bursted and left their owners with empty purses and blighted lives. Corporations, firms, individuals felt the panic alike, and were swept away, not only with their own possessions, but with that which was held as trust funds for others. The commercial world grew unsteady, confidence was shaken, and there was a cessation of all dealings beyond the bare transactions necessary in strictly legitimate business. Men saw the storm approaching, and, powerless to save themselves, or to grasp any proffered aid, lost all—reputation, position, wealth. And this, frequently, through no fault of theirs; it was but the natural outgrowth of years of prodigality in getting and in spending. Money was easy to obtain, labor and capital were in demand, and were well paid, and the same expedition that marked the accumulation of wealth accompanied its expenditure. The necessities as well as the luxuries of life were costly, high prices were asked and given, and in direct ratio to the salary and income of an individual was the cost of his living, of his expenses. Large salaries were the rule of the day, money was loaned at high rates, investments paid, real estate was valuable, the mechanic trebled his ante-war wages, the laborers' hire was ample. But things have changed, are daily changing, and experience is turning the thumb-screw of economy, and the day of small things has arrived, literally and practically. Reduction has been and is the rule of the day, but even this, to be just, must but keep pace with the lower expenses of life; beyond this it becomes cruelty. There are now, as there ever has been and ever will be, thousands of persons who, under all circumstances, but square their accounts year after year, and this with close economy. The lesson is not for them. The extremely rich, whose desires are satisfied before they are spoken will not heed the teaching of the present. They do not understand its import, but the great middle class the very foundation of our national strength, is the one that heeds, that must heed, the precept so forcibly repeated. Ranging from the scantily paid laborer to the moderately rich, through the rank and file of the people, there are enough to so apply the practical lessons of constant, daily economy, as to elevate them from the anxiety and worry of debt to the blessedness of independence. When the debt is regarded as the great evil to be shunned by those who know fully their incapacity to meet its demands, then, and not until then, will it be avoided, and safety and confidence again rule. There are not a few, who, having once tasted poverty's cup, can not bear the reversions of life, can not dare to be honestly poor. They can not, will not, face bravely the change of fortune and life, and, beginning again at the bottom, crawl to the ladder's top. For them the days of small things holds only annoyance and shame and they resort to anything, from petty deceit to skillfully executed crimes, to reinstate themselves in their lost places. The penitentiaries, the dishonored graves of suicides, the list of abandoned, fleeing criminals, tell the story of the finale of such lives. These are being cleared away and men are beginning to steer their course in accordance with the new tide of affairs. Dollars are now saved where formerly thousands were squandered, pennies appreciated where dollars were once wasted, and economy established where prodigality reigned. Men are doing business on the small profit system, but speculation will no longer wait for the earnings, small as they may be. Real estate is not held so high that to buy a grave outside a potter's field would bankrupt an honest man, but there is a chance that by perseverence every human being may win that possession that comes next to heaven—a home—a place where he may stand upon ground purchased by honest labor, enjoyed by honest hearts. Bank books will multiply but the entries will be small, but rightfully gained. Debt and taxation will decrease and municipal expenses are reduced by prudent economists.—Millionaires will grow less in number, but men free from debt, and with homes and sure occupations, will increase. The people will cover the acres of the farther west with villages, farms and homes; the south will be a vast garden of beauty and the north will revive in every energy, and this, too, at no remote day. Its coming is retarded only by the delay of those who fail to make personal application of the true principles of economy, live within their income, and to so use their advantages as to have the power to save from year to year enough to meet possible loss and trouble, when men are willing to abide by trades or business that are certain, even if slow, when being in haste to grow rich, will be deplored as a mistake not only individually, but collectively.

Southern Claims.

The following article from the Springfield, (Mass.) Republican, the leading paper of that State, will show very clearly what there is in this subject: "The promising 'revolution' bugbear having had the life quite knocked out of it, and the outrage mill being plainly beyond possibility of repair, the republican managers, who are trying to carry on a campaign without issues, are generally falling back upon southern claims as the only available clap-trap left them. Several of the platforms already adopted make it a chief plank, and the average republican stump speaker will be pretty sure to devote most of his breath to it. The uncertain voter will have it persistently dinned into his ears that, unless he helps elect a republican house, the national treasury will be bankrupted to pay "rebel claims." Already the old cry is being again raised of how the democrats will certainly pay the south for its slaves as soon as they get full control of the government.

So long as there must be a lot of humbuggery in the campaign, it might, perhaps, as well be over southern claims as anything else. But the fact that it is humbuggery is to patent for many voters to be deceived about the subject. As for any danger that payment for the slaves will be attempted, the idea is simply preposterous. In the first place the fourteenth amendment to the constitution distinctly and unequivocally provides that "neither the United States or any state shall assume or pay any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave," and this prohibition could only be got out of the constitution by the votes of three-fourths of the 38 states, which they will give about the same time that they vote to abolish the whole constitution and establish an empire. In the second place, the constitutional prohibition aside, no party would ever dare to ask the support of the country on the record of having increased the public debt by the hundred millions. The house of representatives is made up of men who mostly seek a re-election, and a majority can never be induced to commit political suicide.

As for the southern claims in general, the record of the last congress, and of the one preceeding shows that the democrats have not done so much in that line any session as the republicans did when they controlled the house. The republican organs have made a great display over the hundreds of bills introduced, but it is the bills that pass which count. And these foot up a total of less than $50,000 for the whole session. Even the bill for the relief of William and Mary college, in Virginia, which passed the republican house of the Forty-second congress by a large majority, was withdrawn last spring because its friends feared to risk a vote. Republican congressmen themselves, however they may rant on the stump, will privately admit the fact that it was never so difficult to get even a good claim through as at the last session.

The simple fact is that southern congressmen are all alike on this question. Republican or democrat, carpet bag or native, it makes no difference—they will present these claims because their constituents are interested in them. For example, one representative who has introduced as many of these bills the last session as anybody in the house is Congressman Dibrell, of east Tennessee, a democrat and ex-confederate, but representing a district in a majority of whose counties the Union sentiment predominated. Consequedtly, while all the bills are blazoned at length in the republican campaign sheets as "rebel claims," the applicant in almost every case is a Union man, and probably a majority of them were in the Union army. An investigation which Mr. H. V. Redfield, of the Cincinnatti Commercial, has made, shows that in the case of nearly all these "rebel claims," introduced by 'ex-confederate brigadiers,' the applicant was a Union man during the war and is generally a republican now. Of course nothing would be gained in this respect by substituting republican congressmen for democrats from the south; the rebublicans would push these claims quite as zealously as the democrats, as experience has proved.

As regards northern congressmen, experience has also shown that there is no danger of their ever being inveigled into any very deep extravagance in this line. There are too many close districts in the north, whose representatives well know that wholesale votes in favor of doubtful claims means nothing more nor less than the end of their congressional careers. The growing demand for public economy will prevent any party from sanctioning gross extravagence in this line as well as any other. There are undoubtedly a great many southern claims that ought in justice to be paid, but they will have to stand close scrutiny. The true way is to refer this whole business to the southern claims commission, and put a limit on the time within which claims may be presented. The drift of public opinion is plainly in favor of such a disposition of the question, and it is quite possible that the measure proposed at the end of the last session, looking to this result, may be passed next winter. Meanwhile, however, the independent voter need feel under no obligation to vote for an objectionable republican candidate instead of a good democrat, on the ground of "rebel claims."

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

vs.
John Mellan. }

Whereas the plaintiff in this entitled cause has filed with me his affidavit and bond in attachment, and a summons having been issued and returned not found, a writ of attachment having also been issued thereon and returned, and a summons in garnishment has also been issued against the Baltimore, Ohio & Chicago Railroad Company, and they having answered that they are indebted to the defendant in this entitled cause to a certain amount, and it also appears that said defendant is a non-resident of the state of Indiana.

Therefore the said defendant and all persons interested are hereby notified that said case is set for trial on the 2nd day of September, A. D. 1878, at 9 o'clock in the forenoon, before me the undersigned, at my office, in the town of Auburn, Union township, DeKalb county, Indiana.

After a desperate struggle he finally reached home convinced that chances are better here than in the boundless west.

The Fort Wayne Gazette will gain nothing for the Radical party in Allen county by falsely attributing sentiments expressed in the Sentinel while under management and control of Mr. Scudder several years ago, to Mr. Flemming the present owner, and Democratic candidate for Treasurer. Mr. Fleming's position is fully explained in an article in another column of this paper.

The people of South Bend certainly deserve some credit for not allowing themselves to be swindled by that old "peace disturber," Hank Beecher. They would show much better sense in getting Schuyler to repeat his little Lincoln lecture than to spend five hundred dollars on Beecher, the way his record now stands. It is simply a premium on lust and rascality to pay the enormous prices to hear such men get up and repeat the same old lecture over a thousand times at five hundred dollars a night. Good for South Bend.—Goshen Democrat.

No Special Session.

We are authorized to state that there will be no special session of the DeKalb Circuit Court on account of the illness of Judge Tousley. He has been suffering with billious fever for several days, and has been confined to his home.

C. C. Boyer, of DeKalb county, was in town last Monday on business. Speaking of the greenback convention at Auburn on Saturday, he is of opinion that the party made a grave mistake in not endorsing Mr. Shull, the democratic nominee for Representative, and says there is scarcely a doubt of that gentleman's election, at any rate.—Angola Herald.

J. B. CASEBEER, M. D.

An excursion to Chicago, over the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Tuesday, August 6th, 1878, will leave Auburn Junction at 6:05, A. M. The fare for round trip will be reduced to $8 00. The company will run passenger coaches up to the Saginaw depot for the accommodation of those going from this city.

The COURIER will be furnished to new subscribers in DeKalb county from now until November 1st. 1878, for the small sum of 50 cents, payable in advance.

There are fears that Judge Tousley cannot accept the nomination for Congress, on account of his poor health. His inability to hold a special session of court, on account of sickness, may induce him to decline. We understand that he has prepared a letter for the press which will appear this week, but whether it is one of acceptance or declination we cannot tell.

Grand Pic-nic.

A special invitation is hereby given to each and all the Sabbath Schools of Auburn, to attend a pic-nic to be held near Concord, on the second Saturday in September, 1878. Let all come and enjoy a good time in what were "God's first temples." Over twenty-five schools are invited and a good time is anticipated. COMMITTEE.

Editors.

Pierceton Free Press.

The Editor has the hardest place on earth to fill. If he omits anything he is lazy, and if he steals 'round and gathers the facts, then tells things as they actually exist, he is a busy-body. If he puts on varnish, and says anything nice about anybody, then they say he has been bribed, payed for it; and if he says anything mean he is liable to get his nose smashed. If he does not furnish his readers with jokes, he is a dull paragraphist. If he occasionally gets off a "good one," he is irreverent and indecent; and so it is, all that one can do, is to be an editor in the true sense of the word. Be firm and please yourself.

COFFEYVILLE, KANSAS, July 22, '78.

ED. COURIER,—I receive the COURIER on the Tuesday following its publication, and would not do without it for many times its price. The weather has been warm and dry, no rain for three weeks. Wheat all secured. Commenced harvest here on May 20th. I helped to cradle 30 acres of wheat and 10 of oats. Wheat will average 15 bushels per acre, oats 40. Had a mess of roasting ears to-day from the field. I have 28 acres of corn which I cultivated and 12 acres of sod corn. Blackberries and plums plenty. Peaches very plenty, at 20 cents per bushel, new potatoes 25 cents. A drove of Mexican ponies past here the other day for Kansas City, worth from 13 to $15. Five train loads of stock shipped from here last week. W. W. Humes was here a short time, but has returned east. A grand Indian celebration on the 4th of August at the Indian Nation, some 25,000 red skins to be present. G. H. PICKER.

Notice to Trustees.

The poor who are in need of medical aid in this county, must apply to the following physicians, appointed by the county physician and endorsed by the Board of Commissioners: For the south half of Union, south half of Richland, Keyser, Butler and Jackson townships, Jared Spooner, Auburn, Ind. For north half of Richland and Fairfield townships, Dr. William Mener, Corunna, Ind. For north half of Union west half of Franklin and Smithfield townships, Dr. J. N Chamberlain, of Waterloo, Ind. The Lawyers' Pic-nic.

We presume to say that one of the pleasantest and most enjoyable picnic gatherings ever held at that popular place of resort, Pleasant Lake, occurred last Wednesday afternoon and evening, under the auspices of the DeKalb Bar Association. The weather was exceedingly warm, but the cool shade of Simmons' park on the north side and Messrs. Woodhull & McClellan's park on the south side of the lake, both of which were occupied by the company, was not only acceptable and refreshing but was also made to contribute to the enjoyment of the fine company of ladies and gentlemen. As the twilight fell, the boats were filled and pushed out upon the quiet, beautiful surface of the lake. Never was there a more exquisite time or delicious treat to a joyous party than when the large round moon rose and spread its splendor over the glassy waters and gave the boaters their pleasantest ride. The "S. H. Hooper" steamed around the lake in fine style and acquitted itself with the usual credit, not only in carrying its happy freight but also in towing a number of the lesser crafts laden with merry occupants. This evening ride upon the lake was certainly not the least of the enjoyments of the occasion. In the evening, also, the hall at Simmons' park was brilliantly lighted, and those who felt so inclined spent a brief but pleasant hour in dancing. Fine music was furnished by C. V. Tuttle and his boy band. The lads were the wonder and admiration of all. At 10:30 o'clock, the happy company left for their homes, all well pleased with their half day's enjoyment at Pleasant Lake.

Those present and engaged in the pleasures of the occasion, were, C. A. O. McClellan and wife and daughter, R. W. McBride and wife, D. Y. Husselman and wife and Mrs. James I. Best, all of Waterloo, James E. Rose and wife, E. D. Hartman and wife, H. C. Peterson and wife, Mr. Emanuel and wife and others from Auburn, the names of which we have not at hand.

The above is from the Steuben Republican of last week. Mr. Emanuel and wife is good.

Mrs. Nancy S. VanAuken, of Pleasant Lake, Wife of Jacob H. VanAuken and mother of J. J. VanAuken and Frank VanAuken, of this county, died on July 19th, in the 64th year of her age.

In an article in the Angola Herald we learn that Mrs. VanAuken was born at Morristown, Morris county, N. J., on the 22nd day of November, 1814; was married at Sandyston, in Sussex county N. J. Soon after marriage Mr. and Mrs. VanAuken started for what was then the "far west," and after a long and wearisome voyage, by stage and canal, they settled at Deerfield, Portage county, Ohio. Here without money or friends, they began life on a farm of forty acres—heavy timbered, clay land—with a board for a table, a bench for a seat and a trough for a cradle—for the three eldest children, was nearly the extent of their household furniture while at Deerfield. They subsequently moved to Orange township (afterwards changed to Chagrin Fall), Cuyahoga county. Here they remained until they removed to Steuben county, in the fall of 1860, and from that time up to the date of her death many have enjoyed a personal acquaintance with the deceased, and her life and history is better known by her many friends than we can write it. She was the mother of sixteen children—nine sons and seven daughters. Four of the daughters died in childhood, as did also one of the sons. Another son, Amos, was killed by lightning in Iowa, and had he lived he would have been 31 years old on the day of his mother's death.

The funeral was held at the old family residence, one of the most lovely spots on the earth, a spot made beautiful by her own hands.

St. Joe Items.

—Will Hamford is on the sick list with billious fever.

—Cyrus Walters has a very sick child

—H. Maxwell is on the sick list with his old disease.

—Gossip has it that Jim Hamilton, at the ripe old age of 50 years, has concluded to take unto himself a wife. A Miss Hutchins, of the town of Orange, is to be the happy one. So mote it be.

—O. H. Widney sold to the St. Joe mill, 10 poplar trees for the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars.

—The first new oats brought to market this season, were brought by J D. Leighty, on Saturday. Price 21 cents.

—Farmers are commencing to thresh their grain in this vicinity. The average yield of wheat being about 18 to 20 bushels to the acre.

—H. Miller, of Auburn, is making St Joe his headquarters at present, engaged in hauling logs for the St. Joe mills. If there is any one man in DeKalb Co., that can beat Miller driving four mules let us hear from him. If Miller is not the champion he should be.

—Preaching at the Center School house Saturday night, August 3d, at early lamp lighting, by a Dunkard minister. Also the following Sabbath at the Sodom School House at 10 o'clock. All are invited.

A Contemptible Attack.

Fort Wayne Sentinel.

The Gazette, in order to gratify a bitter personal animosity against Mr. Fleming, proprietor of this paper, and Democratic candidate for Treasurer of State, which is as malignant as it is unmerited by anything he has ever done, to-day prints an attack upon him which could only emanate from a man who has no scruples about employing dishonorable means to injure a political opponent. The Gazette, in brief, charges him with having opposed the election of Wm. Allen, Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio in 1875, and having rejoiced over his defeat. The only evidence which is offered to sustain this charge, consists of some head lines which are said to have appeared in the SENTINEL over an account of the election. It is immaterial to the point at issue whether these head lines are correctly quoted or not. It is well known to the people of Fort Wayne—and to none better than the author of the Gazette article—that in 1875 Mr. Fleming was not the proprietor of the SENTINEL; that he had no control of the paper, and no part in its management; that it was owned by a corporation in which he held comparatively a small amount of stock; and that he was not in the slightest degree, responsible for its course. It is equally known, to the editor of the Gazette, as well as to the public at large, that Mr. W. H. Scudder was the sole editor of the SENTINEL at the time referred to, and that he had the exclusive control of its columns. The deacon of the Gazette is also aware that when Mr. Fleming became the proprietor of this paper, its financial course was changed, and that, since it has been under his control, it has constantly and to the extent of its ability, opposed the Republican resumption policy, upon that, as well as other subjects, in full accord with the Democratic party of Indiana.

It is unnecessary to enlarge upon this state of facts, and we only rehearse them in order to apprise the public that Mr. Keil, through his paper, deliberately makes an attack which he knows is entirely unwarranted, and attempts, in order to gain political capital, to place upon Mr. Fleming's shoulders the burden of utterances for which he is in no way responsible. Mr. Keil may deem this honorable and decent, but no respectable man of either party, will, we feel assured, sustain him in his unmanly course.

LaOtto Items.

—LaOtto is to have another blacksmith shop.

—Rev James Hogue has taken up his residence in this village.

—J. B. Ross, of Cedar Creek, starts for Texas the first of October.

—Steve Parrish realized 250 bushels of wheat from seven acres sown.

—Preaching at Lee Chapel next Sunday by the Rev. Hogue at 11 A. M.

—Like Job of old, Johnie Stonestreet is so afflicted with boils that he fain would sit in sack cloth and ashes, but he can't sit.

—Early apples are selling in LaOtto for 20c per bushel; blackberries 5c. per qt.; wheat 95c.; oats 20c.; butter 7c. per lb.; eggs 5c. per doz.

—LaOtto is the stopping place of a modern Jacob. His expectant father-in-law having only one daughter, the M. J. is all safe—no chance for "Shenanigans."

—Mrs. John Drake, who has been suffering with a diseased foot for some time, had it amputated by Dr. Bowker last Saturday. She is gradually improving contrary to the expectation of her friends.

"STIVER."

Senator Voorhees opened the Indiana campaign at South Bend on Saturday. He spoke of Civil Service Reform as manifest in this Administration. He spoke of the investigation of the methods by which the Republican party is now in power in the Executive Department. He declared that from the conquest by Cortez till this hour Mexico had been a land of lawless turbulence and revolution—a land where fraud and violence were monarches, and proves that the Republican party, if any party, is the party of Mexicanization and revolution. Best of all, he defends the money of the United States. He defends the greenback and the peace greenback. On all the phases of the currency question he is in harmony with the western Democratic belief and the conquering idea. Senator Voorhees has rendered, and will render, splendid service in the Indiana canvass.

THE RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION.

What Has Been Proved So Far by the Potter Committee.

[Washington Post.]

The Potter committee have proved, beyond successful retributal, things believed to be true, but not absolutely proven to be true before, to-wit: That the electoral votes of Florida and Louisiana, which were given to Hayes, belonged to Tilden. Leaving out of consideration that the State of Florida, which no honest man will deny to have been stolen, we will take up Louisiana. As to this State the Potter committe has clearly proved:

1. That a conspiracy was entered into by certain republican leaders, the object being to hold no election in East Feliciana, Grant, and other democratic parishes.

2. That the fact that no republican votes were cast in East Feliciana was not due to intimidation, as alleged, but was owing to Anderson's advice to the republican leaders not to vote, as it would have a better effect than all the affidavits that could be produced.

3. That for a period of two days after the election the republican leaders admitted that Tilden and Nicholls had carried the State by a heavy majority.

4. That when it became evident that the election of Hayes depended upon the result of the State, deliberate preparations were made for the purpose of defeating the will of the people, as expressed at the polls.

5. That in pursuance of this plan, protests, forged and altered to suit the occasion, were made for the parishes of East and West Feliciana, whereby a democratic majority of over 2,800 was changed to a republican majority of 500.

6. That the supervisors of the above named parishes were prevented by promises of reward made by John Sherman and others from exposing such forgeries.

7. That on the 28th day of November, when the returning board proceeded to sum up the result of their labors, it was discovered that while Packard and a republican legislature were elected, Hayes was defeated.

8. That after the above date, and in order to secure the electoral vote for Hayes, forged protests were made for Richland and other parishes, and the returns from Lafayette and other parishes so changed as to increase the republican vote.

9. That affidavits bearing fictitious names, and the names of dead men, were manufactured in the custom house, and upon such affidavits various democratic polls were thrown out.

10. That the acts above recited were known to some of the visiting statesmen and received their approval.

11. That the electoral vote of the State as counted before the two houses of congress, was forgery.

12. That John Sherman, now secretary of the treasury, and at the time the personal representative of Mr. Hayes, was guilty of subornation of perjury.

13. That the leading parties necessary to a completion of the fraud were promised by him protection and reward.

14. That the fraudulent president in fulfillment of Sherman's and Noyes' promises has rewarded with office every scoundrel connected with the crime in both Florida and Louisiana.

15. That Stanley Matthews, a republican Senator from Ohio, and Justice Harlan, a judge of the supreme court had guilty knowledge of the fraudulent transactions by which the vote of Louisiana was stolen, and personally interested themselves to reward and protect the criminals.

16. That Senator Morton and Gen. Garfield, both members of the electoral commission knew when they voted to count the vote of Louisiana for Hayes that it was both fraudulent and a forgery.

17. That Senator Kellogg, who assisted in the forgery of the Louisiana returns has since been guilty of secreting the witnesses.

18. That not one of the criminals who assisted to perpetrate the colossal crime of the age, has been punished; but that all but two—numbering over a hundred have been provided with offices by Mr. Hayes' direct order or request, and in every case by and through his continued and persistent interference.

With few exceptions these facts are proved, exclusive of the testimony of either Anderson or Weber, notwithstanding that the committee has only fairly entered upon the task.

TOWN TALK.

The Star sells a fine unlaundried, all-linen bosom and cuff shirt for 75c that sells all over the town for $1.00.

Other clothing men keep pacing up and down in front of the Star Clothing House, and wonder "how" the thing is done.

"They can't sell at such and such a price. It's mere talk," etc. Still our people get convinced on visiting the Star.

Brother clothiers engage men to buy up our cheap suits for them; still they say we are not offering bargains.

We again assert that we will not sell our goods to merchants; our customers shall derive all the advantages of low prices.

THE GRUMBLER.

He grumbles in the morning
  On rising from his bed,
He grumbles at his breakfast
  While spreading butter on his bread,
He grumbles at his napkin,
  He grumbles at his knife,
He grumbles at the tablecloth,
  And grumbles at his wife.
He grumbles at the paper
  While reading o'er the news,
He grumbles at the cobbler
  When he buys a pair of shoes.
He grumbles at the clock
  When it strikes out the hour,
And he grumbles at the "deluge"
  When there comes a little shower.
He grumbles at the children
  When they're playing in the street,
He grumbles at the butcher
  At the way he cuts the meat.
He grumbles at his little dog,
  If it only wags its tail,
And when the wind gently blows
  He grumbles at the "gale."
He [illegible],
  No matter how very small,
He grumbles at the servants,
  He grumbles at us all.
He grumbles at the darkness
  When he has to light the gas,
And he grumbles at the matches—
  The unhappy grumbling ass.
[illegible]
  He grumbles at his stocks,
He grumbles at his feet
  When he buys a pair of socks.
He grumbles at the summer
  When the sun is rather warm,
And he grumbles at the "winter"
  Every time we have a storm.
He grumbles at a question,
  He grumbles at a smile;
At church, he grumbles at the people
  Who are standing in the aisle.
He grumbles at his daughter
  When she wants a little money,
And he grumbles when she laughs
  At anything very funny.
He grumbles at the rich man,
  He grumbles at the poor,
He grumbles at the beggars
  When they knock upon his door.
He grumbles at the rent-day
  When the landlord's to be paid,
He grumbles in the sunshine,
  He grumbles in the shade.
He grumbles at his neighbor
  When he's getting in his coal.
He grumbles at the cartman
  Who dumps it down the hole.
He grumbles at a wagon
  If it stands before the door,
And he grumbles at a crumb of bread
  If it falls upon the floor.
He grumbles in his little room,
  He grumbles on the stairs,
He grumbles all the way to church;
  He grumbles after prayers.
He grumbles in his sleep
  While he's lying in his bed,
And I often fancy to myself
  He'll grumble when he's dead.

RUNNING "PILOT."

"Who is standing pilot this evening," said the superintendent or "boss," as he was called.

"Seth Martin," was the foreman's reply.

"Tell him to come here, will you? and hurry up!"

The foreman hastened away, and both he and Seth Martin must have "spread themselves," as the former said, for in a few minutes the engine-driver stood before his chief.

The great man took a comprehensive look at the engineer, who flinched not a muscle. His clear, steady eyes were as blue as the sky; a handsome brown beard ornamented his face, which, albeit rather dirty, was full of character and determination. To use the popular expression, "he was pure gold down to bed rock."

The superintendent, satisfied with his scrutiny, nodded to the engine-driver, and said:

"There's a specie train up out of Collinsville to-night, Seth."

"I know that," was the curt response.

"And it will require close watching," continued the chief.

"I s'pose so—I know that," repeated Seth.

"You are mighty knowin' this evening," said the superintendent, smiling; "but there is one thing you don't know, Sonny. You don't know that you are going to run pilot to that train."

"Yes, I do," replied the engine-driver.

"Who in thunder told you, then? I didn't know it myself till ten minutes ago!"

"You told me this minute, then I knew it," replied Seth, smiling, and disclosing his white, even teeth. "I'm ready, boss."

"Seth Martin, you ought to be a Judge; your talents are thrown away on this line. But listen; we've no time to split straws in chaff. There's a very festive gang of desperadoes hanging about up Dartford way. They nearly wrecked the through Pacific last week. Fortunately, the passengers was handy with their shootin'-irons and bullets was rainin' pretty thick, else there would have been something unpleasant."

"Wa'al," said the engine-driver, "go ahead."

"Now you must run pilot to the specie train and see that the line's clear up as far as Dartford City. Ye can shunt at the Trestle-Bridge siding and wait to pull the wagons up the Bunker incline through the cutting. Once safe there ye can rattle along, and mind ye keep a good lookout."

"You bet!" was Seth's reply. "I'd better take my six-shooter, I suppose. We'll have to fight, maybe?"

"Most likely," replied the superintendent, coolly. "Keep this quiet. I've got men on the lookout along the line. Who's your mate?"

"English Tom Atkins," was the reply. "He's grit!"

"All right, then," said the chief. "Now don't drink; keep a full head of steam; bring back the specie safe, and——"

"Wa'al?" drawled the other, coolly.

"I'll provide for your family if you're hurt or shot; if not, I'll reward you."

"Is that all, then? Well, good night, boss, and thank ye."

"Good luck," was the answer; "I'll not forget you."

Seth Martin turned away with a nod of acknowledgment and directed his steps to the shed where his engine was "standing pilot." This means that the engine had steam up (or was "in steam," to speak technically) and was ready for any sudden emergency. The driver was just as well pleased to run a couple of hundred miles on a dark night, even when the chance of being shot, as to have an invitation to the "White House" itself.

"Tom!"

"Hallo!" came back in an unmistakable English voice.

"Fire up a bit; we're bound west; specie pilot; 10 o'clock. Keep it quiet."

A man, unseen by the driver, put up his head to listen.

Seth was a man of action, and so was his mate, Tom Atkins. They looked to the engine and their revolvers; put a dozen cartridges in a tin can; filled a similar can with some old Bourbon whisky at a saloon close by, whither they were followed by the man who had been listening to their conversation, and who noted their preparations.

After communicating with some accomplice, this mysterious individual left the saloon and made his way toward the signal box, which stood some distance down the line.

As soon as the engine driver and his mate were recognized they were warmly welcomed, for they were favorites. Many drinks were tendered for their acceptance, and declined on various pleas, till at length one man declared the Britisher wanted to fix an insult on a freeborn citizen. He offered Seth and Tom a glass apiece, saying:

"What's up, mate? Swore off, eh?"

"For this evening," replied Seth, "but, as I'd rather drink than fight just now, I'll take your treat." So the two each took the proffered glass, but scarcely tasted it; and soon afterwards Seth, fearing that some inkling of his intended mission might leak out, beckoned to his fireman to follow as soon as possible, and then left the saloon. He lit a cigar, climbed up into the "cab" of his engine (all American locomotives are protected and closed in), and began to smoke.

He smoked in comfort for about half an hour, then he felt "queer." "These is stronger cigars than usual," he muttered, and he threw it from him. But the oppression on his brain became heavier; he felt very sleepy now.

"I think I'll have a nap; it's only about 9 o'clock. I must; there's an hour yet. I wonder where Tom is. It's my opinion Tom will drink too much or—"

His train of thought was suddenly interrupted. All at once it flashed upon him that he himself had been "drugged" in the saloon.

"That's it; what a thundering idiot I am!" He essayed to rise, but felt quite bewildered. He made hopeless attempts to stand upright, but could do nothing. He was as useless as a child; but, worse than all, he was conscious of his inability to do his duty. Ten o'clock rang out. He struggled to his feet. His head was spinning round, his feet were heavy as leaden weights. He opened the sliding-door, but, ere he could descend, a blow from behind sent him flying into space—a splash, and down he sank into a large pond containing a quantity of surplus water for the locomotive tanks.

At the same moment three men climbed up on the engine, and, with a low but hearty chuckle, started it out from the siding.

"I think we did that neat," said the shortest of the party. "I didn't listen to the boss for nothin' this time. The specie train will run after all, this time. Oh! they couldn't catch me tripping. No, sir!"

"The Savage will do the bridge, I suppose," said another. "He's to work on the up line, isn't he?"

"Aye, only on that side. Ye did that Britisher pretty, I must say. He and Seth was kinder cautious, too."

"I mixed it strong," said the other, with a savage laugh. "Did you settle the signals, Abe?"

"Aye; telegraphed ourselves on special, and then cut the wires and smashed the instruments. We're clear now to Dartford City. What's that?" he added, hastily, as the engine lurched for a second and lifted.

"Only the points. We're out now. We can run easy, I s'pose. She won't bust, I hope. Here goes."

The speaker, who knew a little about engine-driving, turned on the steam and away they went. He turned his head for a moment. There's something moving yonder; they've found Seth, likely."

But this portion of the gang of desperadoes had met their match in English Tom Atkins. For a moment or two he had been overcome by the drugged whisky, but a simple and very effective remedy cured him at the cost of a few moments' sickness. Creeping along the ground, for he could not walk, he conceived the idea of following these men, so he held the points open and sent the "bravoes" away into the night on the up line. He proposed to give the alarm and follow (on the down metals) with a superior force. But fate was drawing the fugitives to destruction. The up line was cut at the bridge.

"Lend a hand, mate, I'm drowndin'!" This is what Tom heard as he crawled rather than walked across the metals to seek assistance.

"Seth—Seth Martin; what's happened to you?"

"Them varmint tossed me in here when I was half stupid, but the water has done me good. Help me out, Tom, and we'll fix them yet."

Tom, who was rapidly recovering, lent all the assistance he could; and then the dripping driver, quickly wringing the water from his clothes, said, when his mate had told him what he had done——

"Don't breathe a syllable to mortal man. I know Bob Franklin's engine is in steam by now for the cross traffic. We'll fire her up and run them down. We may save the specie yet. Hurry down to the signal-box while I get out the engine."

Tom hastened away as desired, but soon came back with the intelligence that the box was empty and the wire cut.

"We daresn't say a word now," said Seth. "What fools we were to take them drinks! Now, Tom, shove in some wood while I oil the cranks. I'll leave word for the foreman; we must trust him."

All these preparations were made almost as quickly as they are here described. In ten minutes the engine was ready, and as noiselessly as possible the great locomotive was brought out of the shed, but tender first.

"Never mind," said Seth, when Tom objected. "We can run about as quick. Now, are ye ready?"

The foreman came up at that moment. "If ye do succeed," he said, "your fortunes are made. If you fail I wouldn't answer for your lives. Take my revolver," he added, "and be off."

Seth thanked him, adding gloomily, "If we fail, we'll never come back alive. For us to be hocussed with 'bourbon' is disgrace enough."

A whistle! The foreman opened the points and the engine sped away on the down line in full pursuit of the desperadoes to save the specie train if possible.

"We've no head lamp!" exclaimed Tom, suddenly.

"So much the better; we don't want to advertise ourselves to-night. There's a flash of something; guess we'll have a storm."

The remark was not uncalled for. The gleam of lightning every now and then appeared to rest upon the steel handles and glint along the rails. There was a moaning sound in the air, a feeling of oppression, while occasionally a heavy plash of rain would drop upon the roof of the "cab" in which the men journeyed.

They absolutely flew along the track. Over the apparently boundless prairie the line was laid. Not a station for miles. A few watering-places at intervals alone broke the level character of the prospect when the fitful lightning lit up the surroundings. Pitch dark overhead except when the flashes came; and the only light below the rapidly moving glare of the furnace fire on the "road."

"It's past eleven," said the driver. "We ought to have pulled them up. We've run this thirty miles in the half hour. There's Buffalo creek," he added, as they skimmed past.

"Well, then, Dartford is only another thirty, and the trestle siding on the top of the cutting is only twenty-five."

"We must pass them at the curve, below. Hallo! look out, mind that hand-lamp."

Tom turned the slide and looked ahead. Seth shut off steam.

"There they are! Lucky we are running tender foremost, or they would have seen our fire. We'll wait on them gently till they get to the trestle curve. Then we'll 'wire in' and drop them. Steady, mate!"

The engine came silently to a standstill. The gentle hiss of the steam, which was just raising the valves, was the only audible sound. Broad flashes of sheet lightning lit up the heavy masses of cloud, but no thunder followed. Seth looked to his revolver.

Tom fed the fire, and they waited; it was their only chance—a surprise.

For quite twenty minutes the men waited; the engine in front had long ago disappeared. At last Seth said, "Now, Tom, is our time! I'll run them a race down to Dartford City, and, if I get there first, there'll be scalps to sell to-morrow. We'll round that curve before they see us, and come in all flying. Are you ready?"

Tom signified his consent, and away darted the ponderous engine across the boundless prairie at top speed. On! on! never mind the rough track; it's death if you leave it; it's death, most likely, if you remain. There is one chance, and only one—if you reach Dartford City and give the alarm!

"Press on, Seth, it's nigh midnight." So whispered Tom, as the engine swung round the sharp curve. There, seemingly motionless, was the other engine. Faster and faster rattled the pursuer. They were seen at last. The men were visible through the glass for an instant.

"Lie down!" roared Seth.

Only just in time. Two bullets came crashing overhead; another hit the handle of the steam whistle and sent out a scream of defiance into the night. Seth rose slowly, and, pistol in hand, watched the foe.

"He's going to race us, but he don't know the trick of firin' 'No. 200,' Tom. We'll pass him and then—"

Seth's face, as he spoke and clutched his revolver, was sufficient to explain his meaning without words.

On, on, speeding across the prairie! Now Seth was gaining, now the others shot ahead. "More wood into the furnace; pile it in, Tom," cried Seth—"that's it—now—"

A bullet from Seth's steady hand passed through the glass of the other engine and shattered the driving arm of the man who held the regulator.

"Bully!" exclaimed the delighted Seth. "Now for another log. The fire was blown up, and like an arrow the engines flew along; but no more shots were exchanged, for as they were running neck and neck for one instant Seth perceived a light on the line ahead, and before his companion was aware of his intention shut off the steam. The other engine fled away into the darkness, leaving Seth and Tom far behind.

"What did you shut off for?" cried Tom in amazement.

"Look ahead and you'll know," was the grim reply.

Tom looked ahead. A weird light was playing on the track, a halo of unearthly appearance. It shimmered and moved about like a will-o'-the-wisp. It was a most ghastly white mist—a ghostly warning.

"What can it be?" said Tom, his superstitious terrors being now excited. "What is it?"

"It's light, that's all," said Seth with a fiendish grin. "I know it though; I've seen it before. There's somebody underneath the rails in the bridge, and, you bet, they're cutting the track for the special train!"

"Gracious heaven, and that engine!"

"That engine will be in the river in two minutes," said Seth Martin.

"Oh! hurry up and save them if we can," exclaimed Tom. "Go ahead!"

"Gently, mate, gently; let them get on a bit." He turned on steam, but ere they had passed half the distance in the direction of the light a loud crash was heard, and amid screams of human agony the Trestle bridge sank down—down—gently, slowly but surely to the stream below. The ponderous engine dipped forward, gave one heavy roll, righted again, and then, turning completely over, fell with a thundering noise into the canon below.

The lights were suddenly extinguished and the piercing screams of wounded and scalded men arose, mingled with the hissing steam and the dull roar of thunder. The storm had burst.

"Caught in their own trap," exclaimed Seth. "Serves them right! Poor critters, I'm kinder sorry, too."

"Let us help them," cried Tom.

"Help! yes; let us run on to Dartford and stop the traffic; the specie is due in ten minutes."

"Cross that bridge?" exclaimed the fireman.

"Yes, sir, across that bridge. I'm agoin' to try it," replied Seth. "Will you chance it?"

"Yes," was the brave answer; "it's kill or cure."

"Here goes, then; shake hands. God bless ye, mate; if we don't meet again, tell them I died at my post like a man."

The driver and fireman clasped hands in silence, and Seth turning on the full pressure of steam, the engine gathered itself up for its final race.

Not a sound escaped either of the men. Side by side they stood. As they approached they could see a red glare. The bridge had caught fire. As they shot past, a form of two hurried quickly out of sight—some of the desperate band now cowed and crushed. In a moment more the bridge was in full view. The crackling timbers of the up line were all burning around the mighty monster engine, which still emitted smoke and flame. As a flash of lightning will in one brief second reveal all surrounding objects distinctly, so the glare of the engine furnace lit up the scene below. The engine dashed along—a roar, a creaking noise, the flame leaped up beneath—and the danger was over. The down line had not been undermined.

As they slackened speed a long whistle was heard, and a dim speck was seen like a pin's head on the line in front.

"There's the specie, Tom. We've done our duty. Run down easy and then see if we can't help the unfortunate loafers under the bridge. It was a narrow squeak!"

It was, indeed! The specie train was saved, though, and the filibusters taken in the act. Three were drowned, and two more so terribly injured that they died soon after from the effects. Seth and Tom were rewarded, and the former was subsequently made inspector, but he and Tom often talk of that summer night when they were so nearly killed while running pilot.—Cassell's Magazine.

A Maniac's Crimes.

People in the vicinity of Rhea Springs were thrown into wild excitement Sunday by the peculiar antics of a religious monomaniac named Collins. At 5 a. m. he went into the Methodist Church and tore up all the books, as he said, "to get the devil out of them." He then passed through and out of town, a distance of two miles. Concluding that the devil was in his clothing, and that Jesus had commissioned him to go into church as naked as he had come into the world, he pulled off his clothing, and in a state of nature started back on a dead run, followed by a constantly-increasing multitude of people, who failed to overtake him. Passing through town, he finally approached the church, then occupied by a Sunday-school. A man attempted to stop him, and was knocked senseless by a stone. Another he felled with his fist. By this time a crowd had gathered about him, but, owing to his profuse perspiration, which made him as slippery as an eel, it was difficult to hold him. Once secured and bound, he was taken to jail at Washington. Monday morning the jailer went in to feed him. He seemed perfectly quiet and harmless. As the jailer passed inside the cell door and turned to lock it, however, Collins picked up a heavy board and struck him on the back of the head, knocking him down, and then beating his head into a jelly. The jailer's wife subsequently came in to see what had become of her husband, but, raising her dress to go up stairs, did not see Collins until she got to the top. He was covered with blood from head to foot. Collins at once struck her a violent blow on the head, knocking her head over heels down the stairway. He rushed to the cell containing his bloody victim and locked himself in.—Nashville (Tenn.) American.

A White Horse Seen "Swimming in the Air."

An optical illusion or mirage was seen by three or four farmers a few miles from Parkersburg, W. Va., a few days since, the appearance of which no one is able philosophically to account for. The facts are these: A gentleman, while plowing in a field with several others, about 7 p. m., happened to glance toward the sky, which was cloudless, and saw, apparently, about half a mile off in a westerly direction, an opaque substance, resembling a white horse, with head, neck, limbs and tail clearly defined, swimming in the clear atmosphere. It appeared to be moving its limbs as if engaged in swimming, moving its head from side to side, always ascending at an angle of about forty-five degrees. He rubbed his eyes to convince himself that he was not dreaming, and looked again; but there it was, still apparently swimming and ascending in ether. He called to the men about 100 yards off, and told them to look up, and tell him what they saw. They declared they saw a white horse swimming in the sky, and were badly frightened. Our informant, neither superstitious nor nervous, sat down and watched the phantasm (if we may so call it), until it disappeared in space, always going in the same direction and moving in the same manner. No one can account for the mirage, or illusion, except upon the uneven state of the atmosphere. Illusions of a different appearance have been seen at different times, in the same vicinity, frightening the superstitious and laughed at by the skeptical.

Newspapers as Text Books.

Newspapers are being extensively used in many of the public schools of the West in place of books for reading lessons. The wisdom of this course is apparent. Much more is to be learned from one good newspaper than half a dozen ordinary school readers, and a well-edited paper is quite as trustworthy in the matter of good English; it is full of contemporaneous history, of intelligent discussion, and affords a picture of the world, a study of which is nearly as beneficial as experience of it. A great deal about everything can be found in an enterprising journal, and the student who carefully reads one day by day will find himself better capable of understanding the exactions of the world into which he is about to be thrown and of fighting his battles than if he followed too exclusively the pages of ancient history. The newspaper is the educator of our day, but for all that there must be a care about newspapers; they are not all alike, and a great many of them would not be desirable in a school-room.—Philadelphia Times.

Ice-Water as a Fell Destroyer.

Now, no wise American thinks of sitting on his doorstep in January drinking iced lemonade, yet while he strives to take advantage of a fugitive breath of air in August he does not hesitate to pour into him the carbon which feeds heat, and which lurks in vast quantities in brandy, whisky and the fiery train of spirits which he consumes. It is true that he will put a piece of ice in his glass, but his parched skin and swollen tongue will remind him that his liver and stomach resent his folly, no matter what his gustatory glands may think of it. What, then, shall he drink in summer? Imprimis, water, if he likes it, plain, with a piece of ice in it. But with water he must be just as careful as though it were whisky.—Brooklyn Eagle.

FEARFUL FALL.

A Freight Train of Twenty-two Cars on the Panhandle Railroad Plunges from a Bridge Ninety Feet High—Miraculous Escapes and Thrilling Incidents.

[From the Chicago Times.]

A train of twenty-three loaded freight cars approached the high bridge which spans the Tippecanoe river near Monticello, Ind., the engine being headed eastward. The cars contained wheat and corn. The engineer slowed the train up as it was nearing the trestle work connecting with the west end of the bridge. As he did so the bridge-tender mounted the steps of the locomotive and remarked that he would ride to the east end of the structure. A few seconds later the whole of the west span of the bridge, with the engine and twenty-two cars, went crashing into the river. The forward brakeman gives the following account of the descent into the river:

The engine and several cars had passed on to the span, when the fourth car appeared to jump the track, and, plunging off the bridge, carried the next car with it. The couplings did not break, and, as the cars commenced to fall, the locomotive was dragged back along the rails. The engineer, Louis Beam, opened the throttle to its full capacity, thinking to save his engine by severing the coupling-pin. But the fastenings did not break, and the cars went piling over the side of the bridge one after another, until the locomotive was pulled from the track and dropped into the river. Think of an engine and twenty-two cars falling ninety feet through air and striking in six feet of water. The brakeman says that he was standing on the fifth car from the engine when the car ahead of him left the rail and dropped from the bridge. He ran back over the tops of the cars with all possible speed, each one plunging into the abyss before his heels had hardly cleared it. When he had run his race for life over the tops of thirteen cars, and had seized the brake of the fourteenth, he felt that sinking under his feet. Escape from the awful leap was no longer possible. With a firm grip on the brake, and an eye to the chances for life, he stood still until the car had fallen fifty or seventy-five feet, when he jumped. Among the cars that had preceded him was one which was resting on the bottom of the river in a slanting position. The brakeman struck feet foremost against the inclined surface of the side of the car and shot off into the water as if he had been fired from a Columbiad. He plowed the bottom of the river for a moment and reappeared on the surface. As he opened his eyes he saw a car or two falling through the air, and his ears were stunned by the deafening crash of timbers and boards.

By the time this man had made his way to shore five other persons were discovered by him scrambling out of the wreck in the river. Their escape from death had been not less wonderful than his own. One of these was the fireman, who had clung to the tender until within a few feet of the water, when he jumped and, fortunately for him, alighted in a heap of corn, the contents of one of the cars, which, in striking against the rest of the wreck, had been split open. The fireman's injuries consisted of a gash on the scalp, a contusion on the face, and some bruises about the body. The other four men who emerged from the wreck were tramps. They had been stealing a ride, and were clinging to the trucks when the accident happened. The car upon which they were riding turned bottomside up in the fall and they were hurled from their place of concealment into the water. One of the four had two fingers cut off, but, with this exception, the whole gang escaped comparatively unhurt. Beam, the engineer, and Jerome Durphee, the bridge-tender, who, contrary to his custom, had boarded the engine to ride across the river, were buried under the wreck.

A thrilling episode of the accident is yet to be described. The twenty-third car of the train was the conductor's "caboose." In this car were seven passengers, traveling from one local station to another. The brakeman in charge of the rear half of the train was a man named Barney Moran. He was near the center of the train when he heard the bridge crashing and saw the forward cars and locomotive plunging into the river. He ran back to the "caboose," and, hurriedly removing the coupling-pin between it and the freight car, applied the brakes with all his might. Had he made a false movement or been a moment later, the car would have gone to mingle with the rest of the train in the bottom of the Tippecanoe. But it stopped within seven feet of the precipice. The passengers occupying this car did not know what had happened until after the wreck had settled into perfect quiet at the bottom of the river.

The fireman says that the last he saw of the engineer he was holding on to the throttle-liner and bending forward in his cab. He never flinched from duty as he followed his ponderous machine through that fall of ninety feet.

It should be borne in mind that the bridge did not break down until after several of the cars had been thrown from it. It was the wrenching of the train that produced the strain that broke the bridge. The span which fell was 150 feet long. The structure is of the Howe truss pattern, and its safety had not been questioned heretofore.

A MINISTER, going to visit one of his sick parishioners, asked him how he rested during the night. "Oh, wonderously ill, sir," he replied, "for my eyes have not come together these three nights." "What is the reason of that?" said the other. "Alas, sir," said he, "because my nose was betwixt them."

"THE HOT SEASON."

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

At last two Fahrenheits blew up
  And killed two children small,
And one barometer shot dead
  A tutor with its ball.

Now all day long the locusts sang
  Among the leafless trees;
Three new hotels warped inside out—
  The pumps could only wheeze;
And ripe old wine that twenty years
  Had cobwebbed o'er in vain
Came spouting through the rotten cor
  Like July's best champagne.

The Worcester locomotives did
  Their trips in half an hour;
The Lowell cars ran forty miles
  Before they checked their power;
Roll brimstone soon became a drug,
  And locofocos fell,
All asked for ice, but everywhere
  Saltpetre was to sell.

[illegible]
  [illegible]
Their candle molds had grown as loose
  As Cossack pantaloons!
The dogs ran mad—men could not try
  If water they would choose;
A horse fell dead—he only left
  [illegible]

And all about the warehouse steps
  Were angry men in droves,
Crashing and splintering through the doors
  To smash the patent stoves!

AN old bachelor was rather taken back a day or two ago, as follows: Picking up a book, he exclaimed, upon seeing a wood-cut representing a man kneeling at the feet of a woman, "Before I would ever kneel to a woman, I would encircle my neck with a rope and stretch it." And, then turning to a young woman, he inquired: "Do you not think it would be the best thing I could do?" "It would, undoubtedly, be the best for the woman," was the sarcastic reply.

Perils of the Telephone.

The telephone may prove a dangerous matter for some folks. One of our leading merchants, whose home is not a thousand miles from Brooklyn, and who occasionally luxuriates in his leisure hours in mechanical and philosophical experiments, put up the other day an excellent telephone at his residence, connecting the parlor with the rear of the house. On a certain evening, while he was at work at one of the instruments, there were a couple of young bucks being entertained in the parlor by the young ladies of the family, and one of them, whose wish may have been father to the thought, spoke—just for the fun of the thing, of course—at the instrument. The quiet old gentleman received at his end of the wire this complimentary message: "Old Mr. Watkins, isn't it most time you went to bed?"

The young sauce-box in the parlor nearly jumped from the floor at the reply that came back: "Yes, sir; and quite time you went home, young man!"—Harper's Magazine for August.

SABBATH READING.

A Funeral Psalm.

Silent we sat within a darkened room;
For in our midst, the lowering heart of gloom,
Stood a low bier, with blossoms showered in vain
To hide the ghastly shape of loss and pain.
Still, still was all, save when some sobbing breath
Paid stifled tribute to the conqueror Death;
When suddenly, outside the open door,
An oriole began his song to pour;
Sweet, liquid, clear, triumphant as the morn
That scatters all the mists from meads forlorn.
His warble thrilled the sunshine and the air,
And made the emerald grasses show more fair;
The budded elms swayed to that living sound,
And some sweet madness spread through all around.
No more I heard the moan and plaint of prayer;
No more the hymn's low wailing held me there;
No death, no grave, but heaven's immortal spring
Did in that silver cadence reign and ring.
The fresh deep grass; the buds on thickening trees;
The new-born life and sweetness in the breeze;
The nestling, nestling birds, that overhead
Their little hammocks in the branches spread;
The tender fragrance from the budding boughs;
The wayside blossoms lifting sunny brows;
The deep-blue heaven, the gentle south wind's sigh,
That like some happy, wandering child, went by,
All sung accordant anthems in my ear:
"The Lord is risen! who do ye seek Him here?
His word, His way, is life, not death and woe.
Look up where His departing footsteps go!
The grave is empty, save of slumbering dust.
The Lord is risen; arise, oh faith and trust!
Swing wide, ye gates of never-failing spring;
Hear the swift footsteps of your coming King!
Behold, He cometh! here are life and joy;
No winds shall scatter, and no frosts destroy.
Be glad for death, life's bliss, beguiling seed;
Thy dead shall rise, for Christ is risen, indeed."
So still, above the weeping and the prayer,
The spring's diviner message stirred the air
And I, as we escaped anew from prison,
Sung to my soul, exulting, "He has risen!"

—Rose Terry Cooke, in Sunday Afternoon.

"Rock of Ages."

The hymn beginning,

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,"

may well be esteemed one of the brightest gems of Christian psalmody.

It is a grand tone that nerves and strengthens faith, that associates the sublime imagery of the Hebrew scriptures with the all-protecting love of Christ, and that has consoled thousands of Christians in the dying hour.

Augustus Montague Toplady, the author, was born at Farnham, Surrey, England, in 1740. His father fell at the battle of Carthagena, and he was brought up in charge of an exemplary and pious mother. He was educated at the Westminster school.

At the age of 16, Toplady chanced to go into a barn at an obscure place, called Codymain, Ireland, to hear an illiterate layman preach. The sermon made upon him an unexpected impression and led to his immediate conversion. He thus speaks of this interesting experience in his diary: "That sweet text, 'Ye who were sometimes afar off are made nigh by the blood of Christ,' was particularly delightful and refreshing to my soul. Strange that I, who had so long been under the means of grace in England, should be brought nigh to God in an obscure part of Ireland, amidst a handful of God's people met together in a barn, and under the ministry of one who could scarcely spell his name. The excellency of such power must be of God and cannot be of men."

He became a minister of the Church of England, maintained the Calvinistic doctrines in opposition to the Wesleys, and preached and wrote with self-consuming zeal. The only blemish of his high character was heated language and intolerance in controversy.

In the year 1775 his health began to fail. It was evident that the sword was too sharp for the scabbard. His physical energies were being destroyed by the fiery ardor of soul that overtaxed them. His physicians commanded him to go to London. Here a new field opened before him, and he became pastor of the French Calvinist Reformed Church.

On the year of his settlement in London he published in the Gospel Magazine an article, entitled "Questions and Answers Relative to the National Debt," in which he adverts to the debt of sin, and shows how multitudinous are the sins of mankind. By numerical calculations he exhibits the enormity of the debt of the redeemed soul, which Christ has canceled, and impresses the readers with the transcendent love and value of Christ's atonement. With these thoughts growing like a vision in his mind, he then added:

Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee;
Let the water and the blood,
From thy riven side which flowed,
Be of sin the double cure,
Cleanse me from its guilt and power.

Not the labor of my hands
Can fulfill Thy laws' demands;
Could my zeal no respite know,
Could my tears forever flow,
All for sin could not atone,
Thou must save, and Thou alone.

Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to Thy cross I cling;
Naked, come to Thee for dress,
Helpless, look to Thee for grace,
Foul, I to the fountain fly;
Wash me, Savior, or I die,

Whilst I draw this fleeting breath,
When my eyestrings break in death,
When I soar through tracts unknown,
See Thee on Thy judgment throne,
Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee.

The above is the original version, from which it will be seen that the hymn in common use has been greatly transposed and altered.

It was composed in Toplady's last years, when he already felt that he was beginning to lose his hold on life, and that his feet were already standing on celestial altitudes. Some two years afterward, when he was yet but 35 years of age, the full time of his departure came, and he found the prayer in the last stanza of this hymn fully and sweetly answered in the revelation of divine love to his soul. He seemed to walk in Bulah, to breathe immortal airs and to hear the tuning of unseen harps, and by faith to discover what the Protomartyr saw and the Revelator described.

"Your pulse," said the doctor, "is becoming weaker."

"That is a good sign," said Toplady, "that my death is fast approaching, and I can add that my heart beats every day stronger and stronger for glory."

As his end drew immediately near, tears of joy filled his eyes, before which already seemed to pass visions of paradise, and he exclaimed: "It will not be long before God takes me, for no mortal can live after the glories God has manifested to my soul."—Story of the Hymns, by American Tract Society.

Of Bearing with the Faults of Others

Those things that a man cannot amend in himself or in others he ought to suffer patiently until God order them otherwise.

Think that perhaps it is better so for thy trial and patience, without which all our good deeds are not much to be esteemed.

Thou ought to pray notwithstanding when thou hast such impediment, that God would vouchsafe to help thee, and that thou mayest bear them rightly.

If one that is once or twice warned will not give over, contend not with him: but commit all to God, that His will may be done, and His name be honored in all His servants, who well knoweth how to turn evil into good.

Endeavor to be patient in bearing with the defects and infirmities of others, of what sort soever they be: for that thyself also have many failings which must be borne with by others.

If thou canst not make thyself such an one as thou wouldest, how canst thou expect to have another in all things to thy liking.

We would willingly have others perfect, and yet we amend not our own faults.

We will have others severely corrected, and will not be corrected ourselves.

The large liberty of others displeaseth us; and yet we will not have our own desires denied us.

We will have others kept under by strict laws; but in no sort will ourselves be restrained.

And thus it appeareth, how seldom we weigh our neighbor in the same balance with ourselves.

If all men were perfect, what would we have to suffer of our neighbor for the sake of God?

But now God hath thus ordered it, that we may learn to bear one another's burdens; for no man is without fault; no man but hath his burden; no man is sufficient of himself; no man is wise enough of himself; but we ought to bear with one another, comfort one another, help, instruct, and admonish one another.

Occasions of adversity best discover how great virtue or strength each one hath.

For occasions do not make a man frail, but they show what he is.—Thomas A. Kempis.

Invasion of Russia.

The finest and best appointed army ever assembled together, either in ancient or modern times, was that which Bonaparte marched for the invasion of Russia. Similes have been exhausted and description beggared in painting the magnitude of Napoleon's undertaking and the extent of the means with which he proposed to achieve the conquest of Russia.

Not such the numbers, nor the host so dread,
By Northern Brenn or Scythian Timour led.

Not France alone was drained to supply the flower of her youth, but all her tributary states were compelled to furnish a similar contingent. A variety of workmen of all descriptions, such as masons, carpenters, etc., were under orders to attend the march of the army; and even gardeners were pressed into the service, as if it had been in the contemplation of Bonaparte to make some permanent improvement in the horticulture of Russia.

The accounts of Bonaparte's force on entering Russia have been variously estimated, but never at less than 400,000 men. The official report found among Berthier's papers, which were found at Moscow, raises it as high as 575,000; but the following statement, furnished by a Westphalian Colonel belonging to the staff, who was taken prisoner between Smolenskoi and Krasnoi, is deemed authentic, and shows the proportion of the contingents which were brought up by the different powers:

Westphalians	30,000
Bavarians	40,000
Wurtemburgers	14,000
Grand Duchy of Berg	3,000
Prussians	20,000
Austrians	30,000
Badanese	5,000
Poles	60,000
Swiss, French, Spaniards and Portuguese	300,000
Various	20,000
Total	624,000

No common foresight was required to find supplies for so large an army; and, indeed, the arrangements on this head appear to have been perfect in the outset; a certain number of bullocks were allotted to each regiment; and in all the frontier towns grain was collected from the surrounding country and laid up in store. The same precautions were not taken, however, in providing subsistence during the retreat, nor were they altogether necessary, as the army was then reduced to a mere skeleton. If Xerxes wept to think that in a hundred years his army would be no more, what must have been the feelings of Bonaparte in actually seeing his own army, equal in numbers and superior in everything else to that of Xerxes, annihilated in a period of a hundred days?

Rapid Growth of the Aloe.

Perhaps the most remarkable instance of rapid vegetable growth that has been heard of since the famous beanvine of Jack the Giant-Killer is one which has been related to us by Prof. Stowe, of an aloe or century-plant, now growing on the ground of one of his neighbors, at Mandarin, Fla. This aloe, during a period of several weeks from the last half of April to the latter part of May, actually increased in height at the rate of twelve inches a day—or half an inch an hour night and day—until it attained a height of forty-two feet. Having reached that height, the tree (for it is nothing else than a tree) leaned over on a neighborly orange tree to take a rest. When Prof. Stowe left Mandarin, the last week in May, the flower stems had come out, but up to the end of June it had not yet blossomed. The American aloe, according to the English Cyclopædia, has a period of from ten to seventy years, according to climate. "When fully matured it produces a gigantic flower-stem, forty feet in height, and perishes." In Florida one sees many of these plants, in various stages of growth; but we think there are few cases in which the growth is so rapid as in this one related by Prof. Stowe.—Hartford (Ct.) Times.

It used to be said, "You never can convert a Jew;" but since 1813, the Southern Churchman declares, there have been more than 100 ordained clergymen of the Church of England (including at least two Bishops) who were converted Jews, and in sixty years in one English church chapel from 1815, there have been 780 adult Jews and 615 children converted and baptized. So it used to be said, "You never can convert a Brahmin." Henry Martyn said if one Brahmin were converted he would have hope. But even these have been converted, and are now preaching the gospel to their countrymen.

How to Avoid Sunstroke.

The New York Board of Health has issued the following:

"Sunstroke is caused by excessive heat, and especially if the weather is 'muggy.' It is more apt to occur on the second, third, or fourth day of a heated term than on the first. Loss of sleep, worry, excitement, close sleeping-rooms, debility, abuse of stimulants, predispose to it. It is more apt to attack those working in the sun, and especially between the hours of 11 o'clock in the morning and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. On hot days wear thin clothing. Have as cool sleeping-rooms as possible. Avoid loss of sleep and all unnecessary fatigue. If working indoors, and where there is artificial heat—laundries, etc.—see that the room is well ventilated. If working in the sun, wear a light hat (not black, as it absorbs heat), straw, etc., and put inside of it on the head a wet cloth or a large green leaf; frequently lift the hat from the head and see that the cloth is wet. Do not check perspiration, but drink what water you need to keep it up, as perspiration prevents the body from being over-heated. Have, whenever possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after 11 o'clock in the morning on very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to and pour cold water over head and neck. If any one is overcome by the heat, send immediately for the nearest good physician. While waiting for the physician, give the person cool drinks of water or cold black tea, or cold coffee, if able to swallow. If the skin is hot and dry, sponge with, or pour cold water over the body and limbs, and apply to the head pounded ice wrapped in a towel or other cloth. If there is no ice at hand, keep a cold cloth on the head, and pour cold water on it as well as on the body. If the person is pale, very faint, and pulse feeble, let him inhale ammonia for a few seconds, or give him a teaspoonful of aromatic spirits of ammonia in two table-spoonfuls of water, with a little sugar."

A Horse's Splendid Swim.

Capt. Edwards, of the fishing smack Amelia reports that when off Skunnett, on the Rhode Island shore, one day last week, he discerned an object swimming off his bow which he finally made out to be a horse. He made sail, but could not overhaul the animal, which was making desperate efforts to reach the main land three miles away. At times he would disappear from sight in the waves which broke over him—the sea running very high at the time—but a moment later would reappear, and with a loud snort and toss of the head shake off the water from his ears and eyes, and then renew his struggle. At last he made the shore, and, without pausing a moment, dashed up the beach, his long tail and curling mane floating outward in the wind.—New London (Ct.) Telegram.

Surest Tranquilizer of the Nerves.

The surest tranquilizer of the nerves is a medicine which remedies their supersensitiveness by invigorating them. Over-tension of the nerves always weakens them. What they need, then, is a tonic, not a sedative. The latter is only useful when there is intense mental excitement and an immediate necessity exists for producing quietude of the brain. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters restores tranquillity of the nerves by endowing them with the vigor requisite to bear, without being jarred or disturbed unhealthfully, the ordinary impressions produced through the media of sight, hearing and reflection. Nay, it does more than this—it enables them to sustain a degree of tension from mental application which they would be totally unable to endure without its assistance. Such, at least, is the irresistible conclusion to be drawn from the testimony of business and professional men, litterateurs, clergymen, and others who have tested the fortifying and reparative influence of this celebrated tonic and nervine.

THE OBJECT OF OUR ESTABLISHMENT

Our Newspaper Advertising Bureau, No. 10 Spruce St., New York, is an establishment intended to facilitate the convenient and systematic placing of advertisements in newspapers. It is conducted upon the principles which we conceive to be the right ones for securing the best results to the advertiser.

We undertake to represent American newspapers, not only the newspapers of the city of New York and of all other American cities—Religious, Agricultural and other class newspapers—but also the small country journals. We receive regularly and keep on file the daily and weekly newspapers of every description throughout the land.

CONFINED STRICTLY TO NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING AND TO AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS.

We confine our transactions to newspapers, and do not accept or undertake the management of other kinds of advertising, such as books, sign-boards, posters or job printing.

By adhering to one branch of advertising we make ourselves masters of it.

We also restrict our dealings to newspapers published within the geographical limits of the United States and Dominion of Canada.

THE NATURE OF THE SERVICE WHICH IT IS OUR BUSINESS TO RENDER TO THE ADVERTISER.

We undertake to maintain an established credit with every newspaper, and to have at hand a schedule of charges for advertising space in its columns; to be able to quote the rates to an advertiser who wishes one or several, and to procure the prompt insertion of the advertisement without any extra charge for the service rendered; which service consists of quoting the price, printing or writing as many duplicates of the advertisement as may be required; forwarding the copy for insertion at our own expense for postage or messenger service; examining the papers to see that the advertisement appears, when, and in the manner that it ought to; checking each subsequent issue of the advertisement, in each paper, by a book kept for that purpose, at all times subject to the inspection of the advertiser, and marking plainly in each paper the advertisement as it appears, so that when the advertiser comes (or sends) for the purpose of having the files examined, the eye may light promptly upon the announcement, without the labor of searching a whole paper or page.

If errors or omissions occur, it is our duty to notify publishers, at our own expense for labor, postage or messenger, and to see to it that the publisher of the paper actually does render the specified service for which the advertiser contracted.

OUR PROMISE.

We promise those advertisers who intrust their advertising patronage to our management that we will not allow them to be charged, in any instance, any more than the publishers' schedule rates; that we will procure for them the acceptance of any advantageous offer definitely made to them by any newspaper publisher, advertising agent or canvasser of responsibility. We are unwilling to do work without a profit, and never offer to do so, yet, in conformity with the promise made above, we sometimes find it advisable.

THE SYSTEM OF ARRANGEMENT FOR NEWSPAPER FILES.

We have a perfected system for filing newspapers, a separate space being accorded to each, and labeled with the printed name of the paper it is intended to accommodate. A stranger can place his hand upon any paper he wishes to examine with the same readiness with which he would find a word in a dictionary, a name in a directory, or a book in a library catalogue.

THE AMOUNT OF MONEY TO BE EXPENDED.

Persons who have had little experience as advertisers often have a pretty clear understanding of what they would like to do, but are entirely ignorant of the probable cost.

We have made out for such a person a plan of advertising calling for an investment of $5,000, and on submitting it for approval, found our customer dismayed at the magnitude of the expense, he not having contemplated an expenditure exceeding $200 or $300. In such a case labor would have been saved if, at the commencement of the negotiation, the question had been asked: "How much money are you prepared to devote to this advertising?"

THE CONFIDENCE OF OUR PATRONS A MATTER OF PRIME IMPORTANCE.

It is a matter of prime importance to us, for the purpose of maintaining our influence with publishers, that it shall come to be understood among them that our statements about the advertising to be done, or not to be done, are to be relied upon, and to this end our dealings with our advertising patrons must be upon a basis of mutual confidence and good faith.

OUR CUSTOMERS ENTITLED TO OUR BEST SERVICES.

Whenever we are doing the advertising for any individual, or firm, we consider them entitled to our best services. If they suggest using a paper which we know to be not the best for the purpose, we say so and give the reasons. We often expend a good deal of time for very small advertisers, much more than the profits on their patronage would warrant; but we are content, as they intrust to us what they have to disburse, and influence in our direction the patronage of their friends and acquaintances.

Extract from New York "Times," June 14, 1875.

Ten years ago Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co. established their advertising agency in New York City. Five years ago they absorbed the business conducted by Mr. John Hooper, who was the first to go into this kind of enterprise. Now they have the satisfaction of controlling the most extensive and complete advertising connection which has ever been secured, and one which would be hardly possible in any other country but this. They have succeeded in working down a complex business into so thoroughly a systematic method that no change in the newspaper system of America can escape notice, while the widest information upon all topics interesting to advertisers is placed readily at the disposal of the public.

COST OF ROYALTY.

Salaries of Foreign Potentates.

[Philadelphia Press.]

In this country, where the Executive is considered to be "passing rich" on a salary of $50,000 a year, with the White House as a general and the Soldiers' Home as a summer residence, there may be some natural curiosity regarding the pecuniary allowance paid to foreign potentates. It is to be remembered, however, that the majority of these rulers also posess inherited property, real and personal, of considerable value and that the respective rulers are also allowed magnificent palaces, chateaux and rural residences, repaired and furnished out of the public revenue. Taking most of our figures from Frederick Morton's "Statesmen's Year-Book," a very reliable work, revised after official returns, and now in its fifteenth year, we shall proceed with the potentates.

Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary, born in August 1830, has a civil list (as his salary is commonly called) of $4,050,000 a year.

Leopold II., King of Belgium, born in April, 1835, has a civil list of $660,000 a year.

Christian IX., King of Denmark, born in April, 1818, has a civil list of 500,000 regsdalers, or $277,775. His eldest son has an annual allowance of $33,333.

Marshal MacMahon, President of the French Republic, has an annual salary of $120,000, with an extra $60,000 for household expenses. President Thiers had the same salary, with $77,500 for housekeeping.

Napoleon III. had the largest civil list in the world. It amounted to $5,000,000 a year, in addition to which he received the income of the Crown domains, amounting to $2,400,000 and the free possession of a number of palaces, parks, forests and mansions, kept at the expense of the state. His total income reached the sum of $7,830,000. Nevertheless the debts on the imperial civil list were stated in 1867 to amount to $16,000,000.

William I., born March, 1797, receives no salary as German Emperor. His annual salary as King of Prussia is $3,079,760. Most of the expenditures of the Royal family and the Court is defrayed out of the sovereign's immense private property.

Ludwig II., King of Bavaria, born in August, 1844, has a civil list of $1,378,865. Karl I., King of Wurtemberg, born in March, 1823, has a civil list of $391,685, with an additional annual grant of $1,357,357 for the other members of the Royal family. Albert I., King of Saxony, born April, 1828, has a civil list of $635,000, with an additional $127,950 a year for the princes and princesses. This latter grant may be justifiable, as in 1830 the reigning monarch surrendered his domains to become the property of the State.

The Grand Duke of Baden has a civil list of $374,655 for himself and the members of his family. The hereditary landed property of this dynasty, valued at $20,830,000, has been made over to the State. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, who claims to be the only European sovereign of Slavonic origin, pretends that he can trace his descent to Genseric, King of the Vandals, who conquered Spain in the fifth century, and going over to Africa, took Carthage in 439 A. D. In his full title he styles himself "Prince of the Vandals." He has no civil list, but is absolute owner of one fifth of the Liliputian Duchy which he governs. The Grand Duke of Hesse, son-in-law of Queen Victoria, has a civil list of $328,710 for the support of himself, his near relations, and his little Court at Darmstadt.

The civil list of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg is $125,000; of Brunswick, $250,000; of Saxe-Weimar, $210,000; of Saxe-Meiningen, $90,000; of Anhalt, $145,000; of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, $100,000; of Saxe-Altenburg, $107,250; of Waldeck, $483,675; of Lippe, $50,000; of Schwartzburg-Rudolstadt, $60,000; of Schwartzburg-Sondershausen, $115,000; of Schaumburg-Lippe, $125,000.

The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Reuss-Scheliz and Reuss-Greiz absolutely own most of the States which they govern. It is full time for the whole of these petty sovereignites to be absorbed under one ruler, so as to constitute a real German Empire.

Victoria, Queen of England, born in May, 1819, has a civil list of $1,925,000, with $300,000 more from the Duchy of Lancaster, one of the Crown lands which she did not surrender, according to contract with Parliament, to the State. Thus her annual income is $2,225,000 a year. To her children and to the Duke of Edenburg is paid a further sum $880,000, making a total of $3,105,000 to British royalty.

George I., King of Greece, born in December, 1845, has a civil list of $260,890 a year. Hurbert, of Italy, born 1844, has not accepted the large civil list (2,250,000) granted to his late father. William III., King of the Netherlands, born in February, 1819, has a salary of $250,000, with an addition of half as much more for members of the royal family. He and the King of Wurtemberg are believed to be the richest sovereigns in Europe. The whole grants to Louis I., of Portugal, born in 1838, and his family amount to $660,000 a year.

Alexander II., of Russia, born in April, 1818 possesses the revenue from the immense crown domains equal to $10,000,000 a year. Alfonso XII., of Spain, born in November, 1857, has a civil list of 2,000,000. Oscar II., King of Sweden and Norway, born January, 1829, has a civil list of $338,330 from Sweden and of $95,445 from Norway. He also has an annuity of $83,330, voted many years ago to Carl XIV, (Barnadotte,) and his successors on the throne of Sweden. The total is $416,105 per annum.

The President of the Swiss Republic, who has only a single year term, receives $3,000 per annum. Nevertheless Switzerland is well governed.

There is no knowing what is the salary or income of Abdul Hamid, Sultan of Turkey, born September, 1842. The civil list of Abdul Aziz, who was almost his immediate predecessor, varied from $4,557,580 in 1868, to $5,351,020 in 1875; but it has been calculated on good authority that in the latter years of his reign, which closed in May, 1876, Abdul Aziz spent $22,500,000 a year. It is not near that amount just now.

Lord Lytton receives £25,000 a year salary and £12,000 for "allowances" as Viceroy of India. Rhe Duke of Marlborough gets £20,000 a year as Lor'd Lieutenant of Ireland. The Earl of Dufferin has £10,000 salary as Viceroy of Canada.

Ruinous Trash in Juvenile Papers

An exchange offers the following suggestions upon that subject: "So much has been said, so much has been written regarding the evil influence exerted upon young boys and girls by reading the trash supplied them in juvenile papers that it would seem an idle task to add another word. And yet so frequent are the cases of misery and shame that result from such reading matter that there is no possibility for the graveness of the danger to be questioned. A few days since three bright pretty little girls the youngest eight, the others about eleven, stopped a policeman and asked him the way to a well known "variety hall." They were poorly dressed and each carried a little bundle of clothing. They were evidently unused to the city, and he questioned them until he saw that they were not aware of the nature of the place for which they had inquired. He at once suspected the truth, and when they arrived at the police station they admitted that they had run away from their homes to come to New York, believing that they could get a situation at the "hall." "O, we read such beautiful stories about those places in our paper, and we thought it would be so nice to do as those pretty ladies did," said the youngest. "When we make lots of money we are going to send for mother, just like Signor Blanchard did in 'A Life on the Stage.'" They had read these false, idle stories until their heads were completely turned, and leaving their poor country homes in Canada they had got to New York. When the nature of the people at the hall—a varitable palace to them—was described the eldest burst into tears, and, covering her blushing face with her hands, she begged that they might be sent back home. In a few days they were in charge of their parents, en route for their several homes. But if this one illustration serves only to show what credulity these children possessed, will it not still be a warning not to let the subtle poison of skillfully told stories ruin their minds and hearts and rob them of trust and confidence in anything pure and better? Are not parents bound by every law of love and Christianity to more thoroughly inspect the books and papers that their children find so entertaining? While it would be taking too great a liberty, perhaps, to say that children ought to read nothing that their parents have not criticised, is it not at leasst safe to declare that every day boys and are in this city reading pages which are bringing impure thoughts to their minds ere awakening their passions and are making them unfit for pure childhood or noble manhood or womanhood? Perchance not classified as obscene, not even as vulger, are the books and papers, but they contain that which would make any father or mother tremble to read before a keen, smart boy or girl. They do not crave such stimulents, but to the best and brightest children the temptation comes the more irresistible. Girls, with the innocence of their fresh, young hearts yet unpolluted, unwarily obtain books from companions, because "they are so interesting." The poisen is sweet, the harm is done before the danger is preceived, and the mind and heart are tainted even in the very morn of their life. One would not have to go beyond public libraries to find the truth of this, and to see the perfect freedom with which books and their authors are discussed. Boys, on the contrary, prefer to patronize news stands and dime novel stores, where their tastes for more sensational literature is easily gratified. Agents of societies for the suppression of vice can in a general way do a great deal towards purifying this world of books, but parents and teachers must do the individual and supervising. The children are ignorent of the danger until they are infatuated. Their guardians have no such plea. The children can not discern between the true and the false in life; the parents can. The boys and girls can scarcely be censured; the fathers and mothers must be condemned. To the young, the ignorant and the heedless will come the shame, the sorrow, the cold distrust, the loss of purity, innocence and faith. To those who, by virtue of their years, should have been their guides, will be the perpetual reproach of their delayed warnings and advice."

Where Pat Belonged.

During the late rebellion, a son of the Emerald Isle, but not himself green, was taken up (for he was then down) near Manassas junction by a confederate scouting party. He wore no special uniform of either party, but looked more like a spy than a volunteer, and on that ground he was arrested.

"Who are you? what is your name? and where are you from?" were the first questions put to him by the armed party. Pat rubbed his eyes and scratched his head and answered:

"Begorra, gintlemen, these is ugly questions to answer, and before I'd be after answering any of them I'd be after asking ye by yer lave the very same thing."

"We are of Scott's army and belong to Washington," said the leader.

"All right," said Pat, "I knowed you was gintlemen, for I am that same. Long life to General Scott."

"Aha!" replied the scout, "now you are a prisoner!" and he seized Pat by the shoulder.

"How's that—are we not friends?" inquired Pat.

"No," was the answer. "We belong to Gen. Beauregard's army."

"Then ye told me a lie, me boys, and thinking it might be so, I told ye another. Now tell me the truth and I'll tell the truth, too."

"Well, we belong to the State of South Carolina."

"So do I," promptly replied Pat; "and to all other States in the country, too; and there I am thinking I beat the whole of yez. Do ye think I'd come all the way from ould Ireland to belong to one State, when I had a right to belong to the whole of them?"

Pat was taken to camp, but as nothing could be made to appear against him, he was discharged.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at F. E. Davenport.

A SCRAP OF HISTORY.

An Address of Interest in Connection With the Mexican War.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, }
SANTA FE, N. M., July 4th 1878. }

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SENTINEL:

DEAR SIR—I find the following "Historical Relic" in one of our city papers, and taking it for granted you do not exchange with the New Mexican, and thinking the item of sufficient importance to justifiy its publication, I send it to you for that purpose and I feel sure your old and respected citizen Henry Tons, at least, and there may be many others, who were here on that occasion will be glad to see it. Please give the editorial, explanatory, preceding the address, and oblige.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, JOHN C. DAVIS.

After the flight of Gen. Armijo and his troops from Canoncito on the near approach of Gen. Kearny, the latter at once marched on Santa Fe, then as now the capitol of the department, which he entered on the 18th of August, 1846, and planted the American flag on the plaza. All of the principal Mexican officials having fled with Gen. Armijo, it devolved on Don Juan Bautista Vigil, then postmaster here, to meet Gen. Kearny and turn over the civil government. This was done in the following address, which, strange as it may seem, has never before been published, and which we now give to light as a document that may be of use to the future historian of New Mexico. We are indepted for our copy of the address to an old resident of Santa Fe, who was present on its delivery and afterwards secured the manuscript:

"VIGIL'S ADDRESS.

"The addresses of your excellency on taking possession of this department by order of the government of the United States of North America, fully impress on us the idea of the happy destiny which awaits us. It is by no means incumbent on us, neither is it our province, to settle pending disputes about the boundaries of nations; the governments of Mexico and Washington will settle these differences. Our duty and obligation is to respect and obey the established authorities, whatever may be individual opinions. The inhabitants of this department, simple in manner, honest and industrious, with the utmost respect offer their allegiance to the government of the United States of North America. This world has not yet witnessed the success of the weak when contending against the powerful, for the latter must eventually triumph. We hope it will not appear strange to your excellency that this people has not manifested enthusiasm and joy on this capital being taken possession of by the troops under your command. For and to us the Mexican republic is politically dead. That republic, whatever may have been the circumstances in which she has been placed, was our mother, and what child will not pour forth copious tears over the grave of his parent? Here we might narrate some of the principal causes which caused her misfortune, but on this occasion we ought not nor will we attempt to expose domestic troubles; suffice to say that civil war has been the poisoned fountain which has scattered pestilence and death over one of the most favored countries of the universe. But this day we belong to a great and powerful nation. Her star spangled banner triumphantly floats in the horizon of New Mexico; the light of her sciences and her arts spread over our country will fructify as seed planted in rich and fertile soil. We are fully satisfied on witnessing the moderation of your excellency, on beholding the bland manners and excellent conduct of your accomplished officers, and the rigid discipline of your soldiers, that we belong to that happy republic which owes its origin to the immortal Washington—that name that is revered and respected by every civilized nation. How different would have been our lot had our department been invaded and taken possession of by the forces of a European nation? We well know the oppressions and cruelties inflicted on the unfortunate Poles.

"In the name of this whole department I offer allegiance to the government of the United States of North America, and will obey the laws and established authorities."

Voorhees Will Win.

[Washington Post.]

Advices from Indiana indicate that Mr. Voorhees is making a very successful canvass. The Radicals are opposing him with the same stale charges that were hurled at him just ten years ago, and in the same words, as if the editorials of the campaign were being printed verbatim. He came out victorious then, being elected to Congress by a safe majority. He is not likely to fare worse in the Senatorial contest against a discordant and demoralized party who fight with exploded ammunition.

MONEY.

Of late years everybody discusses the money question. No subject relating to business affairs has been so thoroughly investigated, and, strange to say, the more it is discussed the more antagonistic became the views of those who have assumed the prerogative of enlightening the people. It seems quite impracticable to obtain an agreement as to the functions of money, what should be its quality, or the quantity required to meet business exigencies. It may be asserted, however, that the difference of opinions is not so sharply defined as it was some years since. The popular mind has laid hold upon certain fundamental truths, evidencing and purpose to discard fine-spun theories injected into the discussion for the purpose of obscuring the real issues and of misleading the people. A paper published in the July and August number of the "Western" by Robert Moore, takes the right view of the functions of money. Starting out with the declartion of Adam Smith that the division of labor is one of the cheaf causes of national wealth, Mr. Moore proceeds to discuss the necessity of exchanging the products of labor, and of the necessity of advancing from the simplest form of exchange, that of barter, to the intervention of some "middle thing," some object of universal desire, "for which 'every other thing could be obtained in 'exchange." "This middle thing," says the writer, "is what we mean by money 'and it may be any commodity what'ever of universal desire. Thus we are 'told by Adam Smith that in early 'Greece and Rome cattle and sheep 'were used as money. He also men'tions, as different kinds of money, salt 'in Abysinia, shells in some parts of 'India, dried cod in Newfoundland, and 'tobacco in Virginia. It will be seen, 'therefore, that the prime function of 'money is always the same, namely to 'facilitate exchange of commodities 'and overcome the difficulties of bar'ter." From the prime function of being a medium of exchange money "be'comes a common measure of value, all 'things being exchangeable for money 'come to have a price, or a money val'ue, which then becomes the most con'venient method of comparing things 'with each other." We might further draw upon the writer in the "Western" with regard to functions of money, such as being a "standard for deferred payments," a "store of value," etc., but the prime function of money being to facilitate the exchange of all commodities we pass to notice the quality of money and the quantity desirable to effect exchanges in this country. As to quality, we now have gold, silver, nickel, copper and paper. Of these we have vastly more of paper than of all other descriptions combined. In fact, the paper money of the United States as a medium of exchange has quite displaced all other descriptions of money, and this, too, while it has been irredeemable. It would be a waste of time to discuss here the intrinsic value of paper money as compared with metalic money. It is admitted that as mere commodities, gold and silver, nickel and copper, possess a value that does not belong to paper, but when the "fiat" of the government stamps paper as money, and makes it a legal tender for all debts, it becomes at once the most desirable medium of exchange, and business goes forward prosperously, though every dollar of metalic money may be locked out of circulation. Such has been the history of paper money in the United States for the past sixteen years, and the people fully comprehend the fact. When the United States had the largest volume of paper money, businesss was the most prosperous.—The people were employed and the division of labor had the widest possible range. As a consequence national wealth steadily augmented. With the reduction of the quantity of paper money there was less division of labor, and national wealth, instead of increasing, decreased at a rate that brought about wide spread bankruptcy and such a demoralization of labor as was never known in any country. The quantity of money required has, therefore, become a leading question of discussion throughout the country. It is well understood by the advocates of metalic money that a sufficient quantity of gold and silver can not be had to perform the exchanges of the country. They know also that if the quantity of paper money simply duplicates the coin there will still be such an insufficiency as will embarrass business and arrest development of the recourses of the country. It is not therefore surprising that the quantity of money required by the business interests of the country is a leading feature in financial discussion. It is shown by the July statement of the treasury that on the 1st of the month there was in the treasury and in circulation—

Legal tender notes	$346,681,016
Fractional currency	16,547,768
Outstanding silver coin	89,057,083
National bank circulation	[illegible]
Coin	197,[illegible]
Total	$922,355,350

This statement conveys an entirely erroneous idea as to the amount of currency and coin afloat as a medium of exchange, as there are important deductions to be made as follows:

Special deposit of legal tenders for resumption of certificates of deposit	$40,755,000
Special reserve of redemption of fractional currency	10,000,000
Reserves of banks, estimated as for 1877	45,000,000
Coin held for redemption of greenbacks	107,415,132
Held for the purpose of retiring notes of insolvent banks, as in 1877	12,500,000
Due disbursing offices and to retire bank circulation, as in 1877	27,000,000
Total	$338,670,132

The amount in circulation stands as follows:

Currency and coin as above	$922,355,350
Deductions	338,670,132
Amount in circulation	583,685,227

Here then we have approximated the amount of money, gold, silver and paper, with which to transact the business of the country. Let us see how it compares with the financial situation of the three leading countries in Europe:

Countries	Population.	Currency per capita.	Volume.
France	36,000,000	$38 00	$1,368,000,000
German Empire	41,000,000	26 00	1,066,000,000
Great Britain	32,000,000	23 00	736,000,000
United states	45,000,000	13 00	585,000,000

In view of the depressed condition of busines of every description growing out of the fact, mainly, that the currency has been contracted under the radical rule, from $37 per capita to $13 per capita, the democratic party of Indiana demands that legal tender notes of the government "shall be issued in such amounts as the sound business interests of the country may from time to time require." With $37 per capita the country was fabulously prosperous, and still the amount was below that which France keeps in circulation. The contraction of the circulation to $13 per capita has led to almost universal bankruptcy. More currency is therefore imparatively demanded. The democratic theory is "that the right to issue paper money, as well as coin, is the exclusive prerogative of the government," and it demands that more greenbacks shall be issued, that the business of exchange may be facilitated and that the "division of labor" may again advance the national wealth.

Grant.

Cincinnati Enquirer.

It is confidently believed by the friends of Gen. Grant that he will easily be nominated for the Presidency on the first ballot in the next National Republican Convention. It is claimed that he will have the "Solid South," and the claim is plausibly grounded. That element will determine the nominations of either Convention. That is considerably more than one-third of the Convention, to begin with. The South casts one hundred and thirty-eight of the three hundred and sixty-nine Electoral votes, and in the Republican Convention will have strength in that proportion. It will be difficult for a National Republican Convention to refuse to listen to the united plea of the South for the South has been the salvation of the Republican party in three consecutive Presidential elections since the war and the throng of intermediate elections. Grant's hold on the Southern Republicans is secure, and his name really presents the only hope offered to the Republican party of regaining any Southern State in 1880. The policy of President Hayes, constitutional though it is, and approved by the majority of the people of the South, is not liked by the Republican party South, while Gen. Grant has the abiding confidence of the Southern Republicans, a confidence that amounts almost to idoltray. The Presidency of Mr. Hayes has created a distrust in the minds of Southern Republicans in any untried man and in any man purely a politician. As the Southern Republican mind is constituted, specially in view of the large negro vote, the natural reaction from Hayes is to Grant. Outside of the South Grant is already assured of the support of several and powerful Northern States. State pride would give Illinois to him, and if that had been in doubt the temper of the Republicans that lately met at the State Convention removed that doubt. Grant's name was on every lip. The applause his name met from the Ohio Republicans recently assembled in this city gave assurance of this State. Pennsylvania, with the Cameron influence, can be depended on. Morton being dead, the leaning of Indiana toward Grant will be strong. There are assurances, it is said, that Wisconsin and Iowa and Michigan will cheerfully aid in his nomination. Looking at this side of the prospects, his friends' side, the sunny side, the nomination of General Grant by acclamation two years hence by the Republican Convention seems far from an improbability. Nor does it appear that this friendly view is not logical, rational, and likely to be verified by the facts.

General Grant is an eminently fit Republican candidate. He represents the tendencies of the Republican party. He would "supply a want long felt" in that party, or felt for nearly two years at this writing. He is the soldier of the late war, and it is the habit of men never to cease to worship the soldier. The idea of a strong Government is embodied in him. He is strength. His unsurpassed tenacity of purpose, a Republican purpose, gives to republicans a sense of security. The party knows that Grant would not hesitate to do anything that was Republican. He would have the absolute confidence and undivided support of the Money Power in the Republican party. His financial veto stood. Hayes' was overruled. The honors heaped on him in Europe have increased the admiration for him at home. His candidacy more than any other would settle the Republican rivalries for the Presidency. The Blaines, the Conklings, the ——, but where shall we find the towering candidates? In this last question lies hidden much of Grant's strength. The Republican list of Presidentail aspirants contains no overtopping name, save Grant's. His candidacy avowed, what Republican would contest the nomination with him? The argument would be forcibly urged that the name of Grant would unify the Republican ranks. The "stalwart" Republicans would at once become reconciled. The soldierly impulses would again be called into activity, and this generation can not kill the soldierly freemasonry. In his free conversations across the seas touching American affairs Grant has made a favorable advertisement on the whole. There are thousands of influential Republicans who look on the Presidency as a Republican interregnum. They would welcome a return to the Republicanism in which they believe. The inflexible devotion of Grant to his friends as well as his unquestioned devotion to the Republican party are towers of strength for him. This quality ties Republicans to him and ties friends to him. His name with his party would be a synonym for security—bussiness security, for he has been a bulwark of the Money Power; political security, for Grant dares use the army and navy, defy Congress, dictate the laws, in order that his ideas and the ideas of his party may prevail. If it be argued that "Grantism" is unpopular, it will be answered that it was not unpopular, apparently, in 1872, when Grant was last a candidate; and in some quarters it will be insisted that no abuses known to Grant's administrations are unknown to that of President Hayes', and it will be claimed that the best nominee the National Republican was able to select, outside of Grant, has a far less force and firmness and far less Republicanism than Grant. The Republicans, scared already, will be more scared in 1880. There is no politician in which the party has the lasting faith that it has in Grant. The Republican party has won its victories at arms, and has kept power by arms. It longs for a soldier President, in its pursuit of a "strong Government." These are some of the considerations that will dictate the next Republican nomination for the Presidency.

Hard Times.

We have in our mind, says an exchange, a brilliant and cultivated young lawyer who started in life with twenty thousand dollars and a refined, beautiful and accomplished wife. He is now a sort of factotum in a carpet manufactory, running hither and thither at the beck and call of those whom he secretly despises, doing heavy tasks far beyond his strength, yet eager and anxious to please, lest the slender support which he derives from this mental work be cut off. We know a gentleman who was a bank president a few years ago and owned his carriage, who now does copying in an assurance office at thirty-five dollars a month, supporting—God knows how—a wife and five children on it. We know a gentleman who once held a high office in a western state, who solicited work at cleaning out offices and building fires. Nor have the changed times less bitterly affected woman. Jennie Collins, of Boston, famed for her employment bureau and working men's home, says in her last report: "Many kind of ladies who hired their servants of me in the past year, have been obliged to apply for employment themselves of late. I sent a lady to a hotel—as a housekeeper, and the most humiliating part of it was that her room was in the attic with two of her former servants." We are constantly learning of women of education and refinement, formerly wealthy, who are engaged as seamstresses, nurses and housekeepers; and in one case we even know of a lady, who would be at home in any parlor in the land among educated people, who served as cook in a hotel for months.

THE POOR MAN AND THE FIEND.

BY REV. MR. MACLELLAN.

A fiend once met a humble man
At night, in the cold, dark street,
And led him into a palace fair,
Where music circled sweet;
And light and warmth cheered the wanderer's heart,
From frost and darkness screened,
Till his brain grew mad beneath the joy,
And he worshiped before the fiend.

Ah! well if he ne'er had knelt to that fiend,
For a taskmaster grim was he;
And he said, "One-half of thy life on earth
I enjoin thee to yield to me;
And when, from rising till set of sun,
Thou hast toiled in the heat or snow,
Let thy gains on mine altar an offering be;"
And the poor man ne'er said "No!"

The poor man had health, more dear than gold,
Stout bone and muscle strong,
That neither faint nor weary grew,
To toil the [illegible] day long;
And the fiend, his god, cried hoarse and loud
"Thy strength thou must forego,
Or thou no worshiper art of mine;"
And the poor man ne'er said "No!"

Three children blest the poor man's home—
Stray angels dropped on earth—
The fiend beheld their sweet blue eyes,
And he laughed in fearful mirth;
"Bring forth thy little ones," quoth he,
"My godhead wills it so!
I want an evening sacrifice;
And the poor man ne'er said "No!"

A young wife sat by the poor man's fire,
Who, since she blushed a bride,
Had gilded his sorrow, and brightened his joys,
His guardian, friend and guide.
Foul fall the fiend! he gave command,
"Come, mix the cup of woe,
Bid thy young wife drain it to the dregs;"
And the poor man ne'er said "No!"

O, misery now for this poor man!
O, deepest of misery!
Next the fiend his godlike reason took,
And amongst beasts fed he;
And when the sentinel mind was gone,
He pilfered his soul also;
And—marvel of marvels!—he murmured not;
The poor man never said "No!"

Now, men and matrons in your prime,
Children and grandsires old,
Come listen, with soul as well as ear,
This saying whilst I unfold;
O, listen! till your brain whirls round,
And your heart is sick to think.
That in England's isle all this befell,
And the name of the fiend was—DRINK!

RETIRING FROM BUSINESS.

What the Colonel's business was nobody knew, nor did anybody care particularly. He purchased for cash only, and he never grumbled at the price of anything he wanted; who could ask more than that?

Curious people occasionally wondered how, when it had been fully two years since the Colonel, with every one else, abandoned Dutch creek to the Chinese, he managed to spend money freely and to lose considerable at cards and horse races. In fact, the keeper of that one of the two Challenge Hill saloons which the Colonel did not patronize was once heard to absent-mindedly wonder whether the Colonel hadn't a money mill somewhere, where he turned out double eagles and "slugs" (the coast name for $50 gold pieces).

When so important a personage as a barkeeper indulged publicly in an idea, the inhabitants of Challenge Hill, like good Californians everywhere, considered themselves in duty bound to give it grave consideration, so for a few days certain industrious professional gentlemen, who won money of the Colonel, carefully weighed some of the brightest pieces and tested them with acids, and tasted them, and sawed them in two, and retired them, and melted them up and had the lumps assayed.

The result was a complete vindication of the Colonel, and a loss of considerable custom to the indiscreet bar-keeper.

The Colonel was as good natured a man as had ever been known at Challenge Hill, but, being mortal, the Colonel had his occasional times of despondency, and one of them occurred after a series of races in which he had staked his all on his own bay mare Tipsie, and had lost.

Looking reproachfully at his beloved animal, he failed to feel the aching void of his pockets, and drinking deeply, swearing eloquently and glaring defiantly at all mankind were equally unproductive of coin.

The boys at the saloon sympathized most feelingly with the Colonel; they were unceasing in their invitations to drink, and they even exhibited considerable Christian forbearance, when the Colonel savagely dissented with every one who advanced any proposition, no matter how incontrovertible.

But unappreciated sympathy grows decidedly tiresome to the giver, and it was with a feeling of relief that the boys saw the Colonel stride out of the saloon, mount Tipsie, and gallop furiously away.

Riding on horseback has always been considered an excellent sort of exercise, and fast riding is universally admitted to be one of the most healthful and delightful means of exhilaration in the world.

But when a man is so absorbed in his exercise that he will not stop to speak to a friend, and when his exhilaration is so complete that he turns his eyes from well-meaning thumbs pointing significantly into doorways through which a man has often passed while seeking bracing influences, it is but natural that people should express some wonder.

The Colonel was well known at Toddy Flat, Come Hand, Blazers, Murderer's Bar and several other villages through which he passed. As no one had been seen to precede him, betting men were soon offering odds that the Colonel was running away from somebody.

Strictly speaking, they were wrong; but they won all the money that had been staked against them; for, within half an hour's time, there passed over the same road an anxious-looking individual, who reined up in front of the principal saloon of each place, and asked if the Colonel had passed.

Had the gallant Colonel known that he was followed, and by whom, there would have been an extra election held at the place very shortly after, for the pursuer was the constable of Challenge Hill, and for constables and all officers of the law the Colonel possessed hatred of unspeakable intensity.

On galloped the Colonel, following the stage road, which threaded the old mining camps in Duck Creek; but suddenly he turned abruptly out of the road, and urged his horse through the young pines and bushes, which grew thickly by the road, while the constable galloped rapidly on to the next camp.

There seemed to be no path through the thicket into which the Colonel had turned, but Tipsie walked between the trees and shrubs as if they were the familiar objects of her own stable yard.

Suddenly a voice from the bushes shouted:

"What's up?"

"Business—that's what," replied the Colonel.

"It's time," replied the voice, and its owner—a bearded six-footer—emerged from the bushes, and stroked Tipsie's nose with freedom of an old acquaintance. "We ain't had a nip since last night, and thar ain't a cracker or a handful of flour in the shanty. The old gal go back on yer?"

"Yes," replied the Colonel, ruefully, "lost every blasted race. 'Twasn't her fault—bless her—she done her level best. Ev'rybody to home?"

"You bet," said the man. "All been a-prayin' for yer to turn up with the rocks, an' somethin' with more color than spring water. Come on."

The man led the way and Tipsie and the Colonel followed, and the trio suddenly found themselves before a small log hut, but in front of which sat three solemn, disconsolate individuals, who looked appealingly to the Colonel.

"Mac 'll tell yer how t'was, fellers," said the Colonel, meekly, "while I pick-et the mare."

The Colonel was absent but a very few moments, but when he returned each of the four was attired in pistols and knife, while Mac was distributing some dominoes, made from a rather dirty flour bag.

"Tain't so late ez all that, is it?" inquired the Colonel.

"Better be an hour ahead than miss in this 'ere night," said one of the four. "I ain't been so thirsty since I come round the Horn in '50, an' we run short of water. Somebody'll get hurt if ther' ain't any bitters on the old concern—they will, or my name ain't Perkins."

"Don't count on your chickens 'fore they're hatched, Perky," said one of the party, as he adjusted the domino under the rim of his hat. "S'posin' ther' shud be too many for us?"

"Stiddy, stiddy, Cranks!" remonstrated the Colonel. "Nobody ever gets along ef they 'low 'emselves to be skeered."

"Fact," chimed in the smallest and thinnest man in the party. "The Bible says somethin' mighty hot 'bout that. I disremember dackly how it goes; but I've heard Parson Buzzy, down in Maine, preach a rippin' old sermon many a time. The old man never thort what a comfort them sermons wus agoin' to be to a road agent, though. That time we stopped Slim Mike's stage, and he didn't hev no more manners than to draw on me, them sermons wuz a perfect blessing to me—the thought of 'em cleared my head as quick as a cocktail. An'—"

"I don't want to dispute Logroller's pious strain," interrupted the Colonel; "but ez it's Old Black that's adrivin' to-day instead of Slim Mike, an' ez Old Black allers makes his time, hedn't we better vamose?"

The door of the shanty was hastily closed, and the men filed through the thicket until near the road, when they marched rapidly on in parallel lines with it. After about half an hour, Perkins, who was leading, halted and wiped his perspiring brow with his shirt-sleeve.

"Fur enough from home now," said he. "Tain't no use bein' a gentleman ef yer have ter work too hard."

"Safe enough, I reckon," replied the Colonel. "We'll do the usual; I'll halt 'em, Logroller 'tend to the driver, Cranks takes the boot, an' Mac an' Perk takes right an' left. An'—I know it's tough—but considerin' how everlastin' eternally hard up we are I reckon we'll hev to ask contributions from the ladies, too, ef thar's any aboard—eh, boys?"

"Reckon so," replied Logroller, with a chuckle that seemed to inspire even his black domino with a merry wrinkle or two. "What's the use ov women's rights ef they don't ever have a chance ov exercisin' 'em? Hevin' their purses borrowed 'ud show 'em the hull doctrine in a bran-new light."

"Come, come, boys," interposed the Colonel, "thar's the crack of Old Black's whip! Pick yer bushes—quick! All jump when I whistle!"

Each man secreted himself near the roadside. The stage came swinging along handsomely; those inside were laughing heartily about something, and Old Black was just giving a delicate touch to the flank of the off leader, when the Colonel gave a shrill, quick whistle, and five men sprung into the road.

The horses stopped as suddenly as if it were a matter of common occurrence. Old Black dropped the reins, crossed his legs and stared into the sky, and the passengers all put out their heads with a rapidity equaled only by that with which they withdrew them, as they saw the dominoes and revolvers of the road agents.

"Seems to be something the matter, gentlemen," said the Colonel, blandly, as he opened the door. "Won't you please get out? Don't trouble yourself to draw, 'cos my friend here's got his weapon cocked, an' his fingers is rather nervous. Ain't got a handkerchief, hev yer?" asked he of the first passenger who descended from the stage. "Hev? Well, now, that's lucky. Just put your hands behind you, please—so—that's it." And the unfortunate man was securely bound in an instant.

The remaining passengers were treated with like courtesy, and the Colonel and his friends examined the pockets of the captives. Old Black remained unmolested, for who ever heard of a stage driver having money?

"Boys," said the Colonel, calling his brother agents aside and comparing receipts, "'tain't much of a haul; but there's only one woman, an' she's old enough to be a feller's grandmother. Better let her alone, eh?"

"Like enough she'll pan out more'n all the rest of the stage put together," growled Cranks, carefully testing the thickness of the case of a gold watch. "Jest like the low-lived deceitfulness of some folks to hire an old woman to carry their money, so it'd go safer. Mebbe what she's got ain't nothin' to some folks thet's got hosses thet kin win 'em money at races, but—"

The Colonel abruptly ended the conversation and approached the stage. He was very chivalrous, but Cranks' sarcastic reference to Tipsie needed avenging, and, as he could not consistently with business arrangements put an end to Cranks, the old lady would have to suffer.

"I beg your pardin, ma'am," said the Colonel, raising his hat politely with one hand while he opened the coach door with the other, "but we're taking up a collection for some deserving object. We wuz agoin' to make the gentlemen fork over the hull amount, but ez they hain't got enough we will hev to bother you."

The old lady trembled, felt for her pocket-book, raised her veil. The Colonel looked into her face, slammed the stage door, and, sitting on the hub of one of the wheels, stared vacantly into space.

"Nothin'?" queried Perkins in a whisper, and with a face full of genuine sympathy.

"No—yes," said the Colonel, dreamily. "That is, untie 'em and let the stage go ahead," he continued, springing to his feet. "I'll hurry back to the cabin."

And the Colonel dashed into the bushes and left his followers so paralyzed with astonishment that Old Black afterward remarked that "ef ther'd been anybody to hold the hosses he could hev cleaned the hull crowd with his whip."

The passengers, now relieved of their weapons, were unbound, allowed to enter the stage, and the door was slammed; upon which Old Black picked up his reins as coolly as if he had lain them down at a station while the horses were being changed; then he cracked his whip and the stage rolled off, while the Colonel's party hastened back to their hut, fondly inspecting as they went certain flasks they had obtained while transacting their business with the occupants of the stage.

Great was the surprise of the road agents as they entered their hut, for there stood the Colonel in a clean white shirt, and in a suit of clothing made from the limited spare wardrobes of the other members of the gang.

But the suspicious Cranks speedily subordinated his wonder to his prudence as, laying on the table a watch, two pistols, a pocketbook and a heavy purse, he exclaimed:

"Come, Colonel, business before pleasure; let's divide an' scatter. Ef anybody should hear about it, an' find our trail, an' ketch the traps in our possession, they might—"

"Divide yerselves!" said the Colonel, with abruptness and a great oath. "I don't want none of it."

"Colonel," said Perkins, removing his own domino, and looking anxiously into the leader's face, "be you sick? Here's some bully brandy which I found in one of the passenger's pockets."

"I hain't nothin'," replied the Colonel with averted eyes. "I'm goin', and I'm a retirin' from this business forever."

"Ain't a-goin' to turn evidence?" cried Cranks, grasping the pistol on the table.

"I'm a-goin' to make a lead mine of you ef you don't take that back!" roared the Colonel, with a bound which caused Cranks to drop the pistol and retire precipitately, apologizing as he went. "I'm goin' to 'tend to my own business, an' that's enough to keep any man bizzy. Somebody lend me fifty dollars till I see them agin."

Perkins pressed the money into the Colonel's hand, and within two minutes the Colonel was on Tipsie's back, and galloped on in the direction the stage had taken.

He overtook it, he passed it, and still he galloped on.

The people at Mud Gulch knew the Colonel well, and made a rule never to be astonished at anything he did; but they made an exception to the rule when the Colonel canvassed the principal barrooms for men who wished to purchase a horse, and when a gambler, who was flush obtained Tipsie for twenty slugs—only a thousand dollars, when the Colonel had always said there wasn't gold enough on top of ground to buy her—Mud Gulch experienced a decided sensation.

One or two enterprising persons speedily discovered that the Colonel was not in a communicative mood; so every one retired to his favorite saloon to bet according to his own opinion of the Colonel's motives and actions.

But when the Colonel, after remaining in the barber shop for half an hour, emerged with his face clean shaved and hair neatly trimmed and parted, betting was so wild that a cool-headed sporting man speedily made a fortune by betting against every theory that was advanced.

Then the Colonel made a tour of the stores, and fitted himself with a new suit of clothes, carefully eschewing all of the generous patterns and pronounced colors so dear to the average miner. He bought a new hat and put on a pair of boots, and pruned his finger-nails, and, stranger than all, he mildly declined all invitations to drink.

As the Colonel stood in the door of the principal saloon, where the stage always stopped, the Challenge Hill constable was seen to approach the Colonel, and tap him on the shoulder, upon which all men who bet that the Colonel was dodging somebody claimed the stakes. But those who stood near the Colonel heard the constable say:

"Colonel, I take it all back. When I seen you get out of Challenge Hill it come to me that you might be in the road-agent business, so I followed you—duty you know. But when I seed you sell Tipsie I knew I was on the wrong trail. I wouldn't suspect you now if all the stages in the State wus robbed; and I'll give you satisfaction any way you want it."

"It's all right," said the Colonel, with a smile. The constable afterwards said that nobody had any idea of how curiously the Colonel smiled when his beard was off.

Suddenly the stage pulled up at the door with a crash, and the male passengers hurried into the saloon in a state of utter indignation and impecuniosity.

The story of the robbery attracted everybody, and, during the excitement, the Colonel slipped out quietly, and opened the door of the stage. The old lady started, and cried:

"George!"

And the Colonel jumped into the stage, and put his arms tenderly about the trembling form of the old lady, exclaiming:

"Mother!"—Bret Harte.

THEODOSIA BURR.

The Story of Her Remarkable Life and Tragic Death.

[From Col. Wheeler's Address Before the North Carolina Historical Society.]

The beauty and accomplishments, as well as the social position of Theodosia Burr Alston, her eventful life and her premature and tragic death, have thrown around her name a spell of romance and sympathy which recent events have greatly enhanced. After her marriage in New York (in January, 1801), at the age of 18, she accompanied her husband to South Carolina, where she resided for several years, interrupted by occasional visits to the home of her father. Her last voyage commenced in December, 1812, when, with impaired health, at the request of both her husband (at this time the Governor of South Carolina) and her father, she embarked from Charleston for New York in a small pilot-boat vessel, called the Patriot. From that day she has never been heard from. By many it was conjectured that the vessel had foundered in a gale of wind at sea and all had perished. By others it has been stated that the vessel was captured by pirates, and all on board murdered. Similar statements have appeared in the public prints, and a painful obscurity rests upon the fate of this unfortunate and lovely lady. But a recent discovery has been made in our State which dissipates this obscurity and makes certain the mode of her untimely end.

A few months ago the late Prof. Pool showed me an exquisite photograph of the original painting of Theodosia Burr, now in possession of his brother, Dr. W. G. Pool, who now resides near Elizabeth City, of which he gave the following account:

"Dr. Pool is a native and resident near Elizabeth City, in Eastern North Carolina. Some eight or ten years since he visited, in his professional capacity, a family near Cape Hatteras, and, although they were in moderate circumstances, he observed hanging on the wall an exquisite oil-painting of a beautiful woman. On inquiry he discovered that this had been found, with some other articles, by the man of the house (now about 80 years of age), when a youth, on a vessel that had been wrecked near Cape Hatteras in a furious storm that occurred in the winter of 1812 or 1813. The vessel was a small one, and all on board were drowned."

This picture was presented to Dr. Pool, and from this the photograph was taken. This settles beyond all question the manner of the death of the loved and lost Theodosia. It was near that dreaded Cape Hatteras—so often before and since the death place of the fearless and the gallant—with the wild foam of the Atlantic for her winding sheet and the fierce north wind for her requiem, did this gentle spirit wing its flight to another world.

He Wanted a Poetic License.

He was a tall, spare man, with a sharp, sunburnt nose, and an unshaven face. He wore a chip hat, well sweated through in front, with the rim turned down all around, and a dark, narrow bit of braid for a band. His butternut pants were neatly tucked into his cowhide boots, and the thumbs of his bronzed hands were thrust into the armholes of his vest. He entered the Mayor's office with the air of a man of business, and, marching up to his Honor, said, inquiringly:

"Be you the Mayor?"

"Yes, I have that honor."

"Well, I want a license for my daughter, Maria Jane."

"Ah, I see; your daughter is about to get married, and you wish to procure a marriage-license. We do not issue these papers here. You must go over on the North Side, to the county building."

"No, 'Squire, you are mistaken—as much mistaken as if you had burnt your last shirt, or had accidentally got into the wrong pew in meeting; but Maria Jane doesn't want a license to get married, not by no means—not by more than considerable. She is a darned smart girl, if she is my daughter, and if I do say it, as I hadn't ought to. She has been keepin' school and boarding round up in the Persimmon deestrict, and writing verses for the Summerfield Weekly Eagle. She thinks now of givin' up teachin' and devotin' her hull time to literary persoots, and, 'Squire, as I'm a law-abidin' man and loyal to the core—three of my boys went clean through to the sea with Sherman—'Squire, and I want to do the business for the girl on the square, and so I called to take out a poetic license for Maria Jane. You see, Will Morrison, who has been to college, told Maria that anybody must have a license before he writ much poetry."

Here the Mayor's face turned very red, as if suffering from some intense internal emotion, and it was observed that his eyes were suffused with tears. His Secretary suddenly approached the window and gazed abstractedly out upon the trees in the tubs whose emerald branches were gracefully swaying in the summer breeze in front of the saloons across the way. The farmer fixed his curious eyes upon the Mayor for a moment, who finally sufficiently recovered himself to say:

"My dear sir, your daughter needs no license to write poetry. She can write as much as ever she pleases and it will be all right."

"Won't it be agin the law to do it without a license?" inquired the man. "She has heard that Byron and Mrs. Hemans used a good many poetic licenses in their writin's, and she thought she'd better do as the rest of 'em did. But if it's all right without, it's probably owin' to the freedom of our institutions and sich like."

"Exactly," said the Mayor.

And the satisfied rustic walked out of the office picking his teeth with a straw. —Chicago Tribune.

Presidential Summer Resorts.

Presidents John Quincy Adams, Jefferson, Madison and Monroe used to go to their respective rural homes for an "outing" during the heated term. Andrew Jackson went down the Potomac to the "rip-raps," a fort on the edge of the ocean, or rather in it, which was begun in his day and has never yet been finished. Polk, Fillmore and Pierce hired summer residences on Georgetown heights. Buchanan, who never spent a dollar when he could save one, occupied as a summer residence a house at the Soldiers' Home, and his example has been followed in turn by Lincoln, Johnson, Grant and Hayes.—*Washington Cor. Human Flesh as Food and Medicine.

"Miriam cures wounds and Pharaoh is sold for balsam," wrote Sir Thomas Browne, 200 years ago; and it is an undoubted fact that, even down to the time of Sydenham, "mummy" was held to be a drug of great curative power, and was extensively administered in cases of fever and ague. But what should be said of the "exhibition" to a patient of a piece of human flesh freshly taken from the living subject? This exceptionally appalling medicament seems to have been made use of, under very singular circumstances, in China. A recent number of the Pekin Gazette published an application to the Emperor from the Governor General of the province of Kwang-Tung, for permission to erect a memorial structure in honor of the filial devotion of a young lady 21 years of age, the daughter of a magistrate of Canton. She is described as having been "brought up by her father from childhood, well educated and deservedly reputed for virtue and intelligence." In the spring of last year her papa fell ill, and was most tenderly nursed by his devoted daughter. At the end of six months the old gentleman became much worse, whereupon the young lady cut a piece of flesh from her arm and mixed it with his medicine. This remedy proved fatal to the patient, and his daughter, who had vowed to sacrifice her life for his, poisoned herself on the same day that her father died. This melancholy story of heroic filial piety, mingled with the most barbarous ignorance and superstition, may be instructively read in juxta-position with a letter received in Shanghai from the Roman Catholic Bishop of Shanshi. Says Mgr. Monagatta, who is a resident of Tai Yuen, the capital of a province in which famine is just now raging with the most fearful severity: "Until lately, the starving people were content to feed on the dead; but now they are slaughtering the living for food. The husband eats his wife; parents are eating their children, and, in their turn, sons and daughters eat their dead parents. This goes on almost every day." Cannibalism has, in a more or less degree, been an attendant horror on the majority of great famines; but the systematic eating of flesh in a time of scarcity is hardly to be wondered at in a country where young ladies of rank, education and intelligence grow up to be 21 in the belief that a piece of human flesh can be beneficial as an inward medicament. It may be mentioned that the Imperial Government has sanctioned the erection of the memorial to the daughter of the Canton magistrate, but that only very languid steps have been taken to alleviate the ravages of the famine.—London Telegraph.

The Columbia College Victory.

It is but a few months ago that O'Leary, an American-Irishman of Chicago who had acquired considerable muscle and wind in peddling Testaments and delivering letters, went over to London and easily outwalked all the leg-representatives of England, Scotland and Ireland. His victory was a victory of American legs over English shanks in a country which prides itself upon its walking abilities, and where people get up early in the morning for the sake of a walk before breakfast.

Having beaten the English leg, we have now triumphed over English arms. In the recent boat-races, the crew of our own Columbia College easily won the visitors' challenge cup, though pitted against the strong college crews of Hertford and Trinity. In the race for the steward's challenge cup the London Rowing Club were victorious; but the splendid rowing and easy manner in which the Shoe-wae-cae-mettes of Detroit won the first heat show that, had it not been for the sudden illness of one of their men, they would have carried off the cup. It was a bitter disappointment to them, but they have the consolation of knowing that they demonstrated their superiority over the English crews, and were defeated by an accident that could not have been guarded against. The victory of the Columbias, like the victory of O'Leary, is all the more gratifying because the English have paid great attention to rowing, and their colleges have had annual contests from time immemorial. They have kept their supremacy to the present time, and have made frequent boast of the prowess of British brawn, but they have now dipped their colors, and for the first time an English racing-cup comes to America, snatched from Oxford, Cambridge, Hertford and Dublin. Our college boys have a right to be proud of their work, all the more so that they were fouled two or three times in a manner that looked suspicious, to say the least.—Chicago Tribune.

That Swiss Watch.

One-Horse gulch will keep time hereafter for all creation, for one of the boys has carried off the famous Swiss watch which did not find a purchaser at the Centennial Exhibition. It was about as large as an ordinary "stem-winder," and was a minute repeater, striking on musical bells the hour, the half-hour, the quarter-hour and the number of minutes that elapsed of the unexpired quarter. In addition to this it told the time to the fifth of a second; and, by means of a double arrangement, noted the passage of two distinct events or occurrences at the same moment—timing two horses, for instance, starting at different instants. It was a calendar, also, showing the days of the week, of the month, and the month of the year, and, by means of a wheel which made a fourth of a revolution in a year, noted the quadrennial recurrence of the 29th of February. Finally, as if overleaping all the other triumphs in its mechanism, it showed the phases of the moon, as that luminary presents them, by means of a diminutive moon. The watch was not sold in Philadelphia, was offered in vain to New York millionaires, and was finally sent to a San Francisco jeweler. Three weeks ago an Arizona miner, who had struck a wonderful lead and regarded $2,000 as a small dime, stepped into the store, looked at the watch, and in ten minutes said he would take it. He paid the money without winking, and remarked that he thought the boys up at the gulch couldn't beat it.—San Francisco paper.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

BY ANNIE L. JACK.

Up in the morning at dawn of day,
Then hardly time to her Maker to pray,
Milking her cows with a "Co, boss, co,"
Under her feet no grass can grow,
Busy, so busy, and this her song—
"The summer is short, and the winter long."
Old in her youth, often weary of life.
Bless her! God help her! the farmer's wife.

Chickens to feed, such a hungry crowd;
Calves to be tended of which she is proud,
Bread of the lightest and sweetest to bake,
Butter the golden, and fragrant to make;
Honey, like amber, to strain and to clear,
Fruit to preserve in its season each year,
Cheese to press, and to turn each day;
Bless her! God bless her! we sigh, as we say.

Washing and ironing to do each week,
Hundreds of things that a pen cannot speak;
Cook and confectioner, seamstress, is she,
Dairywoman, [illegible] and teacher to be,
Nurse, and physician, and preacher, at home,
City of refuge when erring ones roam.
"She hath done what she could," stand her life's little day.

THE GOWN TEST.

He sang a song, he sang it well,
His voice was low and tender;
He sang in praise of her he loved—
A knight, her brave defender.
He vowed by all the gods above

And prayed to be her wooer.
To test his love she thought it well,
Ere her future life she trusted,
She wore, next night, a horrid gown—
And he got up and dusted.

A Good Enough Reason.

A Cambridge woman put herself in the hands of a Boston dentist to have her teeth reorganized. He found them in a very bad plight and asked her why she had allowed them to become so decayed without coming to him or some other dentist. She replied that she had not had time. "But," he insisted, "it would not have taken long, and you could have come in almost any time." She saw that he was bent on an explanation, and she fired this at him like a cannon ball: "Well, I guess if you had had a baby every year for the last ten years you would think it was about enough to 'tend to." He acknowledged that he should, and treated her very patiently and considerately thereafter.

Jack's band of Modocs.

HE TOOK RISKS.

A Virginia City Episode.

Droll things happen in Nevada. The air out there, as everybody knows, is full of ozone, and ozone in the atmosphere makes people wonderfully vigorous and original. A story which comes from Virginia City illustrates the fact pleasantly. It isn't quite assured that the account really comes from that place, but it is credited to it, and as the story drifts eastward in the vague sort of way stories from the far West usually do, and is merely in its bearings a barometrical showing of the condition of the social atmosphere in mining towns generally, it may be located in Virginia City as well as anywhere else.

There came to Virginia City a young physician from "the States," possibly from St. Louis, a talented, nice young fellow, with considerable genius in making out a diagnosis or a bill, but inheriting from decent parents a fatal weakness. He could not overcome a fatal passion for putting on occasionally a clean shirt, for taking his pantaloons out of the tops of his boots, and in other ways conforming to habits popular with the super-civilization of the Orient. He forgot he was in the Occident, where ways are different. For a time after his arrival among the ozone-faced Virginia-Cityites he conformed in modesty and decency to their ways. He wore a dirty shirt of miner's flannel, and tucked his pantaloons inside his boots, and swore with strange oaths, grew bearded like the pard, chewed navy-plug tobacco, and spat wickedly to leeward. He was rapidly acquiring popularity and an immense practice in his profession, when he yielded to temptation and so fell—fell as thousands of bright minds have fallen in the past.

There came upon the young physician a passion for old phantasies. He clung again to the flesh-pots of his early life, and took a course insulting to all about him and dangerous to himself. As upon the reformed drunkard comes at times a horrible thirst for drink, as comes to the opium-eater who has tried to save himself an overwhelming passion for the fatal drug, so upon the young physician came a fierce longing to wear again a shirt all clean, and washed, and starched, and to don in otherwise the garb of Eastern cities.

Of course the infatuated young man knew well enough that he was wronging those about him. He knew that in putting on a clean shirt he was offering a gratuitous insult to every other man in Virginia City, in the intimation thus expressed of his own superiority. He knew the risk and took it. He was infatuated. He knew of the popularity he had gained, and relied upon it for protection.

The rest is soon told. One morning the young physician came down town with his trousers worn outside his boots. His friends noticed it, but said nothing; they thought it merely an oversight on his part. The night passed, and the next morning the young man appeared upon the streets wearing a white shirt. He had shown tact enough to put on his adornments gradually, but he did not realize the full terror of his situation. Still nothing was said. There was a muttering among the populace, and nothing more. Another day came, and with it the appearance of the Eastern man in public, his white shirt still worn, his pantaloons still outside his boots, and upon those boots, not plain Nevada mud, but a polish of blacking. Then the people gathered in groups, and discussed something earnestly. The blinded victim of impending fate saw nothing. He appeared next day, still clean and neat, and carrying a cane. That night the Vigilance Committee met!

The next morning proved a clear and pleasant one, which was a lucky circumstance, as it enabled most of the population of Virginia City to stroll out and speculate upon a droll object in the suburbs. Suspended from the limb of a tree, swinging gently in the morning breeze, hung the foolish young physician from the East. Upon the back of an old envelope pinned to his breast was inscribed the curt legend:

"He tuk risks. He banked too heavy on his pop'larity."

But, as said before, the scene of this interesting episode of the ozone-bathed mountain regions may not have been Virginia City. The story comes irregularly.

Homesickness an Actual Disease.

Most people have a notion of what homesickness is, many have suffered from it, but it has been left to a distinguished French physician to classify it as an actual disease. M. H. Rey finds that it is uncommon among children and old folk, and more frequent among men than women. Those who are the most liable to it are the young conscripts drawn from the country who join the infantry. Town lads are too accustomed to change and bustle to be readily susceptible, while the cavalry soldier is supposed to be too busy to have time to devote much attention to home and its concerns. Dr. Rey considers nostalgia (that is, homesickness) a form of insanity. Its symptoms are that the patient becomes sad and moody, forbears to eat, retires to weep solus cum solo, and gives himself up to reveries of home. In the second stage, he wears the aspect of ill-health, suffers from headache and sleeplessness, and, should the disease advance, delirium, prostration and decay set in, terminating in death. Occasionally veterans also are afflicted with the malady. This generally happens when fighting has to be done in retreat, in the bitterness of defeat, when they feel forsaken, cold, hungry, when they have to sleep on damp ground, agonised from thirst caused by their wounds, when they are taken prisoners and become familiar with the strange bedfellows that misery acquaints them with—in these circumstances, utterly downcast and disheartened, the old soldier thinks of his home, his aged parents, his wife and bairns, with keenest, liveliest memory, and a severe attack of nostalgia is added to the other ailments of which he is already the victim.—Cassell's Magazine.

Oatmeal.

Liebig has chemically demonstrated that oatmeal is almost as nutritious as the very best English beef, and that it is richer than wheaten bread in the elements that go to form bone and muscle. Prof. Forbes, of Edinburgh, during some twenty years measured the breadth and height, and also tested the strength of both the arms and loins, of the students in the university—a very numerous class, and of various nationalities, drawn to Edinburgh by the fame of his teaching. He found that in height, breadth of chest and shoulders, strength of arms and loins, the Belgians were at the bottom of the list, a little above them the French, very much higher the English, and highest of all the Scotch and Scotch-Irish from Ulster, who, like the natives of Scotland, are fed in their early years with at least one meal a day of good oatmeal porridge.

FRANCIS MURPHY.

Story of the Conversion of the Temperance Reformer, as Told by Himself.

In the year 1869 I was proprietor of the Bradley Hotel, at Portland, Me. It was a respectable house, and enjoyed a good reputation and patronage. On the 1st of September of that year the St. John's boat arrived at the wharf, and a large number of guests entered the hotel to partake of breakfast, and some registered, with the view of remaining in the city. After the guests had prepared themselves for breakfast, they were shown to the dining-room, with the exception of one man, who remained seated in the office, with head bowed and hands covering his face. I asked him whether he was going in to breakfast. He lifted up his head and said, "I have got no means of paying for it." I bade him go right in and get something to eat. I saw by his looks that he had been drinking, and stood in need of a substantial meal. There was a scar on his face, and he said to me, "I've been having a pretty hard time, and I would like to have something to drink more than food." I took him into the bar and gave him some liquor, after which he went into the dining-room and partook of breakfast. Upon coming out he desired an interview with me, when he told me that he was a tailor by trade, an utter stranger in the city, that he had no means, and asked me if I would trust him to a week's board provided he could get work. I said I would do that; and, more than that, I interested myself in his welfare, and went out and secured a situation for him. His name was entered on the registry of the hotel—Patrick Murray, St. John's, N. B. On the evening of the 3d of September he came in late to tea. The wife of Capt. Hager, of New York—who was superintending the excavations in the harbor—her sister and cousin, with two children, were seated at their private table. Murray began, in a free way, a conversation with Mrs. Hager, whereupon the waiter requested him to desist. He arose from the table in an angry mood and left the dining-room. Mrs. Hager paid no attention to the man, and, upon concluding supper, went to the sitting-room and engaged in conversation with Mrs. Murphy, after which she started to her own apartments, and Murray assaulted her. I was summoned, and, Murray declining to quit my house, I tried to put him out, and, after a struggle, he fell to the foot of the staircase with a fractured skull. He died four days afterward.

I was arrested and tried for the murder of that man. The trial lasted eight days and occasioned great excitement. I had to meet the prejudice of the friends of the Maine Liquor law from the fact that I kept a hotel at which liquor was sold, and I was bitterly denounced and charged with having given the man liquor. I never gave him but one glass of liquor in my life, and that was for medicine, and I had done all I could to assist him to a life of sobriety and usefulness. I can never tell how much I suffered for being tried for murder in the presence of my wife and family and friends. The verdict was manslaughter. The case was appealed, and I was admitted to bail in the sum of $10,000, Gen. Shepley and A. A. Stout becoming my bondsmen. I returned home very much depressed to think I had been convicted of such a heinous offense, when before God I knew I was entirely innocent. I then began to drink very hard. My wife was very much troubled, though patient and kind, and bore in her face the suffering she endured at the terrible calamity that had come upon us and our children. For about one year I kept on drinking, and became exceedingly reckless. My friends had me locked up July 30, 1870, in the county jail in Portland, after which my family removed from the hotel and were compelled to take up quarters in a little tenement house on what was known as the "back cove," and were in very destitute circumstances. I remained in jail three months. On the 15th of August, at a religious meeting held in the prison by Capt. Cyrus Sturtevant, I made up my mind, God helping me, never to sell another drop or drink another glass of intoxicating liquor. Meantime the case had been appealed and the verdict sustained. I was arraigned and sentenced for a period of sixty days in the county jail at Portland. On the expiration of my sentence I was invited to deliver an address in the City Hall on gospel temperance, and from that time, April, 1871, I date my entrance into the work to which I have dedicated the remainder of my life.

Overeating in Summer.

All trustworthy hygienists and medical authorities are unanimous in recommending fruits and vegetables as the best and most appropriate food for this season, and that the eating of much meat, rich gravies, etc., is carefully to be abstained from. And yet there is not one person in ten who carefully and intelligently follows this advice. In the hotels and boarding-houses people gorge themselves with meats and gravies and pastry, and wonder how it is possible, after such a strengthening meal, they feel so weak, and shaky, and nervous, and out of sorts! With nothing but good bread and butter and a saucer of fruit for dinner the next day, the same person would have marveled still more how in the world such a slim meal gave him such strength and elasticity of spirits and improved health! Depend on it, a very large proportion of the physical ills of life come from too much eating. There is but little danger of not eating enough. The trouble with nine-tenths of ailing and chronically-complaining city people is injudicious and intemperate eating. Leave off eating so much meat and greasy compounds and rich pastry, and try a simpler diet for a time, and, our word for it, you will soon experience a great and marvelous change come over the spirit of your dream.—Trenton Gazette.

Facts of Great Interest to All—Time and Money Saved.

All families are interested in their family physicians. They may take quack medicines for slight ailments, but when true sickness comes then must come the family doctor. All are interested then in this matter, and every family newspaper should give them valuable information and advice.

Every one knows that, in times gone by, the great family doctors were educated in New York and Philadelphia, but that in these days such is no longer the case. The great cities of the West, Louisville, Chicago, Cincinnati, all contain medical colleges in which the very best education is to be obtained.

The cost of this education is far less than it is in Eastern cities; a fact of great interest to parents and guardians, and to all interested in medical students. Indeed, so important is this money question to our readers, that we must give them information which will save for themselves and their friends both time and money.

In the Atlantic cities a student has to pay for two courses of lectures $155 each; or $310 for the two. His diploma fee is $30; all fees amounting to $340. His board for two sessions is $280, or $140 for each. His fees and board costing $620. These facts and figures are official.

In Louisville, Chicago, etc., where the medical colleges are equally as good as they are in New York, the student pays for his two courses $65 each, or $130 for the two. His diploma fee costs $30. All fees amounting to $160 for the two sessions. His board for two sessions costs $160, or $80 for each. The entire fees and board costing $320. These figures are also official, and show that the student who goes to the great colleges of the West saves fully $300 in the cost of a first-class medical education. If to this amount be added that of the increased cost of travel, it is evident that $400 would be a moderate estimate of the amount saved by him. Indeed, students residing in the New England and Atlantic States can, by going to first-class medical colleges in the West, save from $200 to $300 in the cost of a medical education. Surely these great money facts cannot fail to interest every reader, and cause him to bring them to the attention of all studying or about to study medicine. Parents and preceptors will, we feel sure, thank us for this valuable information.

But there are other facts now to be given of even greater interest; facts which show that a student can not only save $300 in the cost of his medical education, but that he can gain one full additional course of lectures. That is to say, the student will, in seventeen months, obtain three instead of two courses of lectures, and save also $300.

Among the many new catalogues of medical colleges recently issued, that of the Louisville Medical College (Louisville, Ky.) is exceedingly interesting. Indeed, the facts presented therein are so important that we must present them to our readers.

It appears that the Faculty of the Louisville Medical College have been also elected to fill the vacant chairs in the Kentucky School of Medicine—one of the oldest and best medical colleges in this country, this great compliment having been extended to this Faculty on account of the triumphant success of the Louisville Medical College. As the result, this Faculty teach in the Louisville Medical College from September to March, and in the Kentucky School of Medicine from March to July.

Both of these colleges are first-class institutions, both being connected, we see, with the Association of American Medical Colleges, of which the colleges at New York and Philadelphia are also members.

From the fact of this faculty teaching in these two great medical colleges, there spring some curious and interesting results.

Students who enter the Louisville Medical in September or October can, at the close of that session in February, at once enter the Kentucky School of Medicine, which commences its session in March and closes at the end of June. In the following September or October these students can again enter the Louisville Medical College and graduate in February. Thus having, in seventeen months, passed three complete courses of lectures; whereas, in seventeen months, any other faculty can give but two courses of lectures.

The student's entire fees for the three courses in these two Louisville colleges are, we see, but $187, and his board for seventeen months but $200, or $387 for the entire cost of his medical education, board and all fees included.

When it is remembered that in Eastern colleges the student gets but two courses of lectures, and has to pay for these $340, with $280 for his board ($620 in all), it will be seen that in Louisville he gets one full course of lectures more in the same time, and saves in fees and travel fully $300. A GREAT ECONOMY OF TIME, A GREAT SAVING OF MONEY, AND THE GAINING OF ONE ENTIRE COURSE OF LECTURES. Indeed, it is evident from the facts and figures afforded to the public in these catalogues, that IN NO OTHER WAY, IN NO OTHER CITY, AND IN NO OTHER MEDICAL COLLEGES, CAN A STUDENT IN SEVENTEEN MONTHS OBTAIN THREE FULL COURSES OF LECTURES AND YET SAVE IN MONEY FULLY $300.

Every student or guardian or parent who reads these remarkable facts should send at once for catalogues. It is stated in the catalogues just issued that all applications for them should be addressed simply to the Dean of the Louisville Medical College, Louisville, Ky.

We see that five per cent. of the class are granted beneficiary privileges.

We also see in the catalogues issued that students who desire it will be educated by the graded system adopted at Harvard, Mass.

One is not surprised to read, after learning these remarkable advantages offered by this Faculty, that ninety-five students have been graduated by it in the last year.

The class list as published shows students from almost every State, the best evidence of the fact that the public throughout this country is rapidly obtaining and appreciating the valuable information here given to our readers.

It seems only natural that so many students from the Northern States should seek in winter the mild and temperate climate of Kentucky; for thus they escape their harsh winter weather, and return home in time for the cool Northern summer.

Louisville, the geographical center of this country, bids fair to be one of its greatest medical centers.

While newspapers seldom furnish the information which we have herein given, we are satisfied that our readers will value these interesting and profitable facts, and will agree with us in saying that all which is of interest to the family circle belongs of right to the family newspaper.

Milestones on the Road to Health.

The recovery of digestion and the resumption of activity by the liver, bowels and kidneys are milestones which mark our progress on the road to health. They speedily become perceptible when Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is used by the invalid. Nothing so surely and expeditiously consumes the distance to the desired goal. As no bodily function can suffer interruption without impairing the general health of the system, so the system can never acquire perfect vigor, health's synonym, until that function be actively resumed. Take, for instance, digestion, a suspension of which is invariably rectified by the Bitters. If the organs upon which it devolves grow weak, biliousness, constipation, headache, poverty of the blood, and a hundred other symptoms supervene, which indicate unmistakably the baneful general influence of dyspepsia. The disappearance of all these symptoms, through the use of the Bitters, shows with what thoroughness it removes their cause.

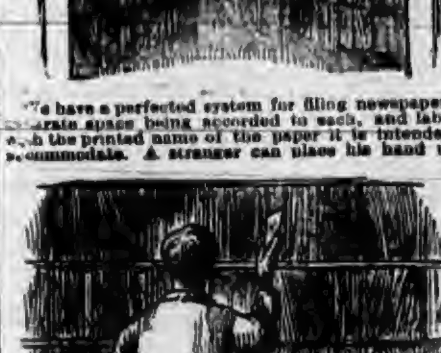
THE OBJECT OF OUR ESTABLISHMENT
Our Newspaper Advertising Bureau, No. 10 Spruce St., New York, is an establishment intended to facilitate the convenient and systematic placing of advertisements in newspapers. It is conducted upon the principles which we conceive to be the right ones for securing the best results to the advertiser.
We undertake to represent American newspapers, not only the newspapers of the city of New York and of all other American cities—Religious, Agricultural and other class newspapers—but also the small country journals. We receive regularly and keep on file the daily and weekly newspapers of every description throughout the land.

CONFINED STRICTLY TO NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING AND TO AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS.
We confine our transactions to newspapers, and do not accept or undertake the management of other classes of advertising, such as books, sign-boards, posters or job printing.
By adhering to one branch of advertising we make ourselves masters of it.
We also restrict our dealings to newspapers published within the geographical limits of the United States and Dominion of Canada.

THE NATURE OF THE SERVICE WHICH IT IS OUR BUSINESS TO RENDER TO THE ADVERTISER.
We undertake to maintain an established credit with every newspaper, and to have at hand a schedule of charges for advertising space in its columns; to be able to quote the rates to an advertiser who wishes one or several, and to procure the prompt insertion of the advertisement without any extra charge for the service rendered; which service consists of quoting the price, printing or writing as many duplicates of the advertisement as may be required; forwarding the copy for insertion at our own expense for postage or messenger service; examining the papers to see that the advertisement appears, when, and in the manner that it ought to; checking each subsequent issue of the advertisement, in each paper, in a book kept for that purpose, at all times subject to the inspection of the advertiser, and marking plainly in each paper the advertisement as it appears, so that when the advertiser comes (or sends) for the purpose of having the files examined, the eye may light promptly upon his announcement, without the labor of searching a whole paper or page.
If errors or omissions occur, it is our duty to notify publishers, at our own expense for labor, postage or messenger, and to see to it that the publisher of the paper actually does render the specified service for which the advertiser contracted.

OUR PROMISE.
We promise those advertisers who intrust their advertising patronage to our management that we will not allow them to be charged, in any instance, any more than the publishers' schedule rates; that we will procure for them the acceptance of any advantageous offer definitely made to them by any newspaper publisher, advertising agent or canvasser of responsibility. We are unwilling to do work without a profit, and never offer to do so, yet, in conformity with the promise made above, we sometimes find it advisable.

THE SYSTEM OF ARRANGEMENT FOR NEWSPAPER FILES.



We have a perfected system for filing newspapers, a separate space being accorded to each, and labeled with the printed name of the paper it is intended to accommodate. A stranger can place his hand upon any paper he wishes to examine with the same readiness with which he would find a word in a dictionary, a name in a directory, or a book in a library catalogue.

THE AMOUNT OF MONEY TO BE EXPENDED.
Persons who have had little experience as advertisers often have a pretty clear understanding of what they would like to do, but are entirely ignorant of the probable cost.
We have made out for such a person a plan of advertising calling for an investment of $5,000, and on submitting it for approval, found our customer dismayed at the magnitude of the expense, he not having contemplated an expenditure exceeding $200 or $300. In such a case labor would have been saved if, at the commencement of the negotiation, the question had been asked: "How much money are you prepared to devote to this advertising?"

THE CONFIDENCE OF OUR PATRONS A MATTER OF PRIME IMPORTANCE.
It is a matter of prime importance to us, for the purpose of maintaining our influence with publishers, that it shall come to be understood among them that our statements about the advertising to be done, or not to be done, are to be relied upon, and to this end our dealings with our advertising patrons must be upon a basis of mutual confidence and good faith.

OUR CUSTOMERS ENTITLED TO OUR BEST SERVICES.
Whenever we are doing the advertising for any individual, or firm, we consider them entitled to our best services. If they suggest using a paper which we know to be not the best for the purpose, we say so and give the reasons. We often expend a good deal of time for very small advertisers, much more than the profits on their patronage would warrant; but we are content, as they intrust to us what they have to disburse, and influence in our direction the patronage of their friends and acquaintances.

"Extract from New York "Times," June 14, 1875.
Ten years ago Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co. established their advertising agency in New York City. Five years ago they absorbed the business conducted by Mr. John Hooper, who was the first to go into this kind of enterprise. Now they have the satisfaction of controlling the most extensive and complete advertising connection which has ever been secured, and one which would be hardly possible in any other country but this. They have succeeded in working down a complex business into so thoroughly a systematic method that no change in the newspaper system of America can escape notice, while the widest information upon all topics interesting to advertisers is placed readily at the disposal of the public.

Democratic Congressional Convention.

Notice is hereby given that a delegate convention of the Democrats of the 13th Congressional district, and all others in said district who subscribe to the principles enumerated through the Democratic state platform, adopted at Indianapolis on the 23nd of last February, will be held at Kendalville, Indiana, on Tuesday August 20th, 1878, at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Congress, and for the transaction of such other business as may be presented. In accordance with the basis of representation heretofore established, the several counties are entitled to send the following number of delegates to said convention. DeKalb, 26; LaGrange, 12; Elkhart, 34, Marshall, 28; Kosciusko, 27; Noble, 27 and Steuben, 6.

By authority of the Congressional Central Committee.

Meeting of the Democratic Central Committee.

Notice is hereby given that the members of the Democratic Central Committee of DeKalb Co., will meet at their Committee Room in Auburn on Saturday, August 17th, 1878, for the transaction of business pertaining to their interest. It is also expected that the candidates and as many democrats as can will attend the meeting of said Committee. By order of the Central Committee. W. L. BLAIR, Chair.

Gov. Hampton and all the State officers were endorsed and re-nominated by the Democratic State Convention in South Carolina.

The Democrats of the 15th Congressional district of Ohio finally succeeded in making a nomination on the 1255th ballot. Gen. Geo. W. Geddes of Mansfield being the lucky man. He was a compromise candidate.

The Cincinnati Enquirer in commenting upon Manton Marble's recent letter in defense of Tilden, says:

"The impression has gone abroad that Mr. Tilden himself, and Mr. Tilden's immediate friends lacked the courage to take the Presidency which the suffrages of the people of the United States had given to Samuel J. Tilden. Glancing deliberately back upon the political events between the Presidential election of 1876 and the Presidential inauguration of 1877, we are firmly convinced, notwithstanding the ostentatious letter of Manton Marble, that bears the date of the 3d inst., that this public impression is correct. It is a matter of history that the Democracy of the Ohio Valley, who were sincerest and frankest in their opposition to the nomination of Mr. Tilden at St. Louis, were bravest in their defense of his rights after he was elected. The fact is noble testimony to the devotion of the Democracy of this section, if Democracy could be any-where sectional, to the party and to the right. The letter of Mr. Marble recites little that is really new, just as the Potter investigation reveals nothing that was not before believed by the majority, and a large majority of the people of the country. That two States were wrongly and wrongfully counted for the Republican party no ghost need come from the grave to prove. It is a patent fact."

Not only an "IMPRESSION has gone abroad" that Tilden and his immediate friends lacked the courage to take the Presidency, firm CONVICTION has taken hold upon the minds of the western Democrats to that effect, and if the Democratic leaders and the Democratic press of the west have courage and manhood enough to denounce the cowardly transaction in language that cannot be mistaken, the party will be saved from a repetition of such political humiliation as Manton Marble in the interest of Samuel J. Tilden is now endeavoring to varnish over. We are not inclined to regard with favor the practice indulged in by numerous western editors prior to Tilden's nomination in 1876 of inserting paid editorial 'puffs' for ANY candidate who may be seeking a nomination; especially a New Yorker as against a western man.

Republican County Convention

A TAME AFFAIR,

Without the Least Ripple of Enthusiasm

The Republicans of DeKalb county met in convention at the court house last Saturday, were called to order by Mr. Ensley, chairman of the county central committee. Upon motion of Mr. Lockhart, Mr. E. D. Hartman was made chairman of the convention, who, upon taking the stand undertook to orally picture the bright side of the Republican party since its organization, assuming among other vagaries that the history of the country for the last fifteen years was the history of the Republican party; that the Republican party was and is the friend of the greenback (soft soap), together with gold and silver, and he might have added BONDS. Taken as a whole the remarks of the chairman were far fetched, neither beneficial to Republicans nor disparaging to Democrats, about as convincing, however, as any argument that can be conceived of by the average lights of the party which has lost its able defenders. At the close of his remarks the chairman called for the business of the convention.—Upon motion Messrs. Somers, of the Press; Weamer, of the Republican; Powell, of the Herald; Kist, of the Record, were appointed secretaries.—Mr. Baxter asked for a committee on resolutions, which was appointed by the chair, consisting of Messrs. Baxter, Pinchin, Clark, Henderson and Ensley. The chair also appointed a committee on apportionment and credentials, consisting of Messrs. Rose, Lockhart and Faegler.

The convention then adjourned until 1 o'clock, at which time the delegates assembled and were assigned their several locations, when the committee on resolutions was ready to report.—The chairman of the committee submits resolutions endorsing the state platform, with a smattering of labor and greenback palaver which were adopted by a few faint ayes.

Announcements being in order, the name of W. L. Meese was presented for Representative, there being no opposition Mr. Meese was nominated by acclamation.

Mr. G. H. K. Moss, the present incumbent, having no opposition was nominated by acclamation for county clerk for a second term of four years.

For Auditor, Messrs. Albert Robbins, Geo. F. DeLong, John A. Shutt and Isaac Hague were named, Mr. McBride was authorized to withdraw the name of Mr. Hague and Mr. Robbins was nominated on the first ballot.

For Treasurer, the names of John Provines, Wm. Henderson, Daniel W. Deetz, Chas. Beugnot and Wm. P. Andrews were presented. The result of the first ballot showed Provines in the lead with 90 votes, Henderson second Andrews third, Weitz fourth, and Beugnot fifth. Pending the second ballot the name of Beugnot was withdrawn. In the 2d, 3d, 4th and 5th ballots Provines and Henderson were in the lead, with Andrews a good third. On the 6th and 7th ballots Andrews exhibited his staying qualities resulting in the withdrawal of Henderson. The 8th ballot resulted in a victory for Andrews, the vote standing, Andrews 133 and Provines 107.

For Sheriff the following names were announced: A. S. Leas, H. H. Knott, H. Smith, Wm. Kenedy, H. Willis, W. A. Faegler and G. B. VanFleet the latter being withdrawn before balloting. Mr. Leas being somewhat on the sport was able to jockey the green ones and was lucky enough to draw the pole for the first heat and receive an excellent send-off, coming under the wire at the end of the heat with a good lead of 74 votes, Smith and Kenedy next, neck and neck with 42 votes each, Faegler next, and then Knott, with Willis bringing up the rear, and Meece straggling. In the second heat Willis and Meece were declared out of the race and Leas increased his lead which he continued to do until the end of the fifth heat when he was declared the winner, having received a fraction over 124 votes, Faegler 2d, Kenedy 3d, and Knott last.

For Surveyor, W. P. Carpenter, F. E. Thompson, A. B. Duncan, Wm. Keran, Geo. Buchanan, Henry Pogue and A. L. Hollopeter were contestants. Mr. Buchanan received the nomination on the second ballot.

For Coroner, Mr. H. Espy was nominated by aclamation.

Mr. Robert Arford was nominated for Commissioner in the south-east district, and Mr. Amos Britton in the south-west district.

Of the candidates nominated we may have occasion to speak in the future.

CONVENTION.

The county convention of the great so-called republican party, respectable in numbers and appearance, convened at the court house, in Auburn, on Saturday last, and organized by appointing E. D. Hartman chairman, who, upon entering the chair delivered himself of a bitter rehash of the main falsehoods contained in what was then called the "key note," by O. P. Morton, of the campaign of 1876, abounding in base misrepresentations of facts, as should never proceed from the lips of any man, much less from a man making the professions of christianity that he does, one of which, was that, "the administration of the government for the last fifteen years was endorsed by the whole of the American people.

Democrats and Soldiers.

Will the soldiers of DeKalb county be kind enough to read the following extract from the speech of Hon. D. W. Voorhees, recently delivered at South Bend?

But in addition to all other accusations, Democratic members of Congress and especially those from the South, are continually charged with disloyalty to the Government and with an unfriendly spirit toward Union soldiers. I call attention to the soldiers of Indiana to the record of the last session of Congress on the subject of their pensions—a bill for the payment of all arrears to pensioners, if living, and in case of death to the heirs. It also provided that all pensions on account of death or wounds received or diseases contracted in the service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted, shall commence from the date of death or discharge from the service of the United States. The Senate refused its sanction to this just and humane measure. 'The bill to enforce the law giving disabled soldiers the preference in places of appointment; the bill increasing the pension of soldiers who lost an arm below the elbow, or leg below the knee; the bill giving to children of a deceased soldier the pension of the widow upon her remarriage; the bill doubling the pension to persons who lost both a hand and a foot, or had both members so injured as to permanently disable them; the bill giving person who lost both hands, or both feet, or both eyes, a pension of $72 per month; also, the bill giving three months extra pay to the soldiers of the Mexican war.' All these and other bills of kindred character originated in and passed that body which is so often stigmatized as the Confederate House; and but few, if any of them commanded the support of the Senate. On this record I invoke the candid judgment of those who periled their lives to preserve the Union.

The Pesidency For 1880.

[New Albany Ledger Standard, July 30.]

The discussion in the democratic press of the country has already commenced in regard to the available candidate for the presidency of the democratic party in 1880. The names of many good men are mentioned in connection with that high and responsible position, and the election of any one of them we have no doubt would reflect great credit upon the democrats, and perhaps redound to the interest of our common country. The great point to be regarded in the selection of a candidate is, which of the names mentioned will bring to the party the greatest strength, or the amount of strength that will enable us to come out of the contest with victory perched upon our banner? This is one of the main facts to be closely considered and must not be lost sight of in choice of the candidate. The man must not only possess all the personal features that would make him eminently fit for the place, but must further combine those elements of strength that would tend to warrent his success before the people of the country at the ballot-box. Now we maintain that there is no name mentioned in this connection that will strike the masses of the people with more power or favor than the name of our own distinguished fellow citizen of Indiana, the Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks Mr. H. ranks much higher than does the ordinary politician of our land. He has not only great mental attainments which grandly qualify him for the first place within the gift of the people, but those acquirements have a good and solid foundation upon which to rest in the nature of pure moral character that has had its training, not for a week or a year, but throughout his entire life. Mr. Hendricks has held many prominent positions before the public and has acquited himself in a satisfactory manner in all of them, and in no instance has even the breath of suspicion of wrong doing ever followed him in the discharge of the duties of the many offices which he has had the honor of filling in our country. He is one of the public characters of the democratic party of to-day that we may justly point to with pride and gratification. There has been nothing in his entire history when, closely analyzed, that will make his friends hang their heads in shame or in sorrow, but on the contrary his whole public and private career has been one of which his friends may point to with great satisfaction, and successfully challenge the closest scrutiny by all. His mental endowments, together with his great experience in public positions, gives him peculiar qualifycations for the presidential office.

We maintain that Mr. Hendricks occupies the right geographical location to receive the nomination at the hands of the democratic party of the country. There is nothing in his place of residence that can possibly produce a prejudice in the minds of the people against him. He is the right man in the right place, and we undertake to say that in the minds of the voters of this country, he is to-day the most popular and well known man of all others who are mentioned for that distinguished place. Why should he not be? The people for years past have been looking for and expecting his nomination for the presidency. For ten years the democratic voters of the United States have been looking for this deferred event, and as often as our national democratic conventions have met and acted, just so often have they been disappointed in that action, for their failure in not nominating the distinguished Indianian. In the presidential contest in 1876 it was Indiana and the name of Hendricks that carried the fortunes of the day. No political campaign in this country was ever more hotly contested and as bravely fought as was the one in 1876 in the State of Indiana. The democracy was so thoroughly imbued with the importance and necessity of victory, that they worked both by day and by night. Although their chieftain had again been set aside and defeated at St. Louis for the first place on the ticket, yet they were determined to fight the battle for Mr. Tilden as vigorously as though Mr. Hendricks occupied the head of the national ticket. They did it, and the annals of campaigning do not show a parallel in political warfare. It was Greek meeting Greek. The camp fires of the democratic party blazed from every hill top and from every valley throughout that memorable struggle. The party came up together "lock-kneed and shoulder" and carried successfully the State, and thereby victory inured to the organization in the national contest.

For that wonderful battle, for that great victory, the national democracy should not do less in 1880 than compliment the State of Indiana and her statesmen by placing on the ticket for president the name of Thomas A. Hendricks.

How About It.

[Waterloo Press.]

When you vote for Mr. Shutt for Representative, you vote for Salary-grab Voorhees for United States Senator.

How about JOHN PETER CLEAVER SHANKS, the present Republican candidate for joint representative from Jay and Delaware counties, who cleaved to his grab of back pay; yes, and JIM TYNER, the Republican salary-grabber who has since been honored by both Grant and Hayes, and is now serving as first assistant postmaster-general, and is about to canvass Indiana in the interest of the Republican party in direct violation of Hayes' celebrated civil service order. How?

Radical Assessments.

[Goshen Democrat

Assessments for political purposes are being levied upon all government employes in the departments at Washington, and failure to respond promptly is followed by a discharge; The regulations allow clerks a months' absence for recreation during the year, and this is usually taken about this time, during the hot weather. All clerks who have applied for their leave of absence this year have been compelled to devote one week of that time to labor in the rooms of the Republican congressional campaign committee, forwarding documents &c., for the good of the cause. Hayes' civil service reform, like himself, his administration and his party, is fraud, pure and simple.

Virginia's Whipping Post.

[Chicago Times.]

Mary Medill, a young and comely white girl of 16 years, was publicly whipped yesterday by a negro constable at Elizabeth City County Court House for the larceny of a pair of shoes. This punishment, the second inflicted in Virginia, was the result of a statute past by the last Legislature, which went into operation on the 1st of July. The female culprit, in this instance, was stripped to the wast and given twenty-five lashes, administered with a raw hide. This mode of punishment is so revolting to the people that the members of the Legislature will be instructed to vote for the repeal of this law.

The Question to Settle.

[Elkhart Union.]

Really outweighing and paramount to all and every confederation, locally and generally, the question for the American people to settle at the coming electaons in the several states of this Union, is the one vital and serious to every man who possesses the right to cast a ballott. It is this:—Shall I endorse the first open palpable national fraud which seated a man in the chair of state contrary to the constitution, laws, justice and an overwhelming majority of the electoral college? It is a point calling for the calmest consideration that ever yet fell to the lot of an American citizen.

Another Payment Made.

[Fort Wayne Sentinel.]

Thomas H. Jenks has just been appointed to a comfortable position in the treasury department. He is the same individual that testified in behalf of John Sherman before the Potter committee, and whose sprightly wife created such a sensation by her sparring with Ben Butler. It is thus that virtue is rewarded by this administration and the principles of civil service reform triumphantly vindicated.

Better Look "Owet."

[South Bend Tribune, rep.]

The Democracy open a vigorous campaign in this state to-day. Senator Voorhees speaks here and General Manson at Bedford. Senator McDonald will take the stump at Logansport August 6, and appointments will shortly be made for ex-Governor Hendricks. Our people will need to look a little out for their own side of the campaign battles.

The Mexican Border.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

Mackenzi is again on the border. The Mexicans have purchased all the ammunition obtainable from frontier merchants, and are rapidly preparing for war. Letters written from Mexico to residents here all come opened. The military divulge nothing, though they say trouble is immediate.

Fraud at the Top.

[Burlington Hawkeye.]

No indeed, Mr. President, you were not elected by fraud. Washington himself held his title by no fairer, stronger, better title than you do. There was no fraud in your election. There may have been a fraud on the republican ticket near the top, and we are inclined to think there was. But the election was all right.

Mexican Dollars.

[Fort Wayne News.]

The Hamilton Bank has recently received a circular from Mr. Linderman, Director of the Mint, at Philadelphia, announcing the value of the Mexican dollar at 90 and 8-10th cents, and not 98 cents as reported in some of the papers.

Radical Jeff Davis.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

Jeff Davis, who is now making speeches in the interests of the radical party, wanted peaceful secession. Will the Journal stand up on its hind legs and state whether it did or did not advocate the Jeff Davis theory?

Best Time on Record.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

Rarus trotted his mile in 2:13½ at Buffalo on Saturday. Take away your girl horses now! That beats the Maid's best mile three-quarters of a second, and restores confidence in the masculine gender.

Voorhees' Key-Note.

[Kansas City Times.]

Senator Voorhees pitched the key for the Indiana Democracy at South Bend last Saturday. He struck the proper note, and from this until October the radicals will have some mighty lively music.

Will Not be Fooled.

[Defiance Democrat.]

Democrats will not be fooled into a third party. It is principally men who have become disgusted with the Republican party who see the necessity of a third party.

Whitley Democracy.

The Democracy of Whitley county are very jubilent, and confident of success at the October election, since the independants laid themselves to land in their nominating convention.

First Catch the Rabbit.

[Burlington Hawk-Eye.]

Will Cumback and General Ben. Harrison are talked of as Republican candidates for senator in Indiana. But remember the receipt for rabbit soup.

Republican Dark Horse.

[LaGrange Register.]

It is intimated that there may be a "dark horse" in the Republican Congressional Convention at Kendalville on the 14th inst.

There is great excitement in the west caused by the suspension of the well known Mastin bank of Kansas City, Mo. Death of Germ Brown.

We regret to announce the death of Germ Brown, editor of the Steuben Republican which took place on Monday last, at Angola. Mr. Brown was one of the leading citizens of Steuben Co., an agreeable, accomplished gentleman, and an honest, capable, worthy citizen. The writer has known him for years, and can testify to the many good qualities of heart and mind. Many warm friends in DeKalb county extend their sympathy to the bereaved family.

David Hoffman, father of D. Z. Hoffman of this place, died suddenly on Tuesday, about noon. He has been failing for some time, and on this day felt like eating dinner at the table with the family. He was assisted to his feet when he walked to the table, ate his dinner and was returning to his bed when he fell near the door of his room, and lived but a few moments. He was born in Adams county, Penn., in 1806, making him about 72 years of age. He will be burried at the Cemetery near St. John to-day, leaving here at 10 o'clock A. M. Mr. H. has been a resident of the county about 33 years.

Marriage Licenses.

The following marriage licenses were issued by the county Clerk during the month of July:

Wm. Hayes and Phebe Moody, Geo. Bolton and Huldah Davis, Wm. Koons and Mary A. Hogue, Humphrey Shoub and Elizabeth Haes, James W. Bishop and Mary A. Mullen, Frederick M Peters and Recka L. Steffen, Ezra Dickinson and Mary Colwell, Wm. Kinman and Josephine Wyatt, Jacob Putt and Susanna Getts, Samuel M. High and Rosa A. Phillips.

Fatal Accidents.

Samuel Beidler, of Waterloo, a railroad employe was killed by a train on the Saginaw road last Saturday night. It is thaught that while intoxicated he laid down upon the track and was crushed by the cars before the train could be stopped.

A son of Nelson Griffith, residing near Corunna, was killed by the cars Friday evening last. Several young men with him boarded a train at that point, but after going a short distance were put off by the conductor. It is throught Griffith sat or laid down on the track to rest, at all events his body was found terribly mangled. He was about 22 years of age.

B. & O. Excursion.

The Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road Co. will run an excursion to Chicago on next Tuesday, the 13th inst. The train will leave the Junction at 10:12 A. M., and arrive at Chicago at 4:30 P. M. Fare for the round trip is fixed at the extreme low figure of $3.00. Tickets will be good to return on any regular passenger train up to and including the 16th, which will allow merchants and others ample time in Chicago to transact business and visit the usual places of attraction. The steamer "Flora" will leave Clark street bridge at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. for trips about the Lake. A change of scenery, and the cool Lake breeze would be a pleasure to enjoy these hot days. Don't miss the opportunity; and by the way, while you are in Chicago you can have splendid accommodations at the Sands House for $1.50 per day.

Now that all the candidates for county offices are nominated and brought before the public for the suffrages of the people, we urge upon the democracy the necessity of early and prompt organization. The great importance of the October election in this State demands of every democrat in the county the sacrifice of personal prejudice. The welfare of the party in both state and county is at stake, and any effort made to slaughter one, two or more candidates on the county ticket will have a bad effect upon the whole ticket. Persons who feel agrieved should look beyond personal difficulties and enter the campaign with an earnest effort to maintain party principle. By a united pull for the whole ticket we have a certainty of electing our representative to the state legislature, by a majority in the state legislature we secure a United States Senator and a redistricting of the State for congressional purposes. Let unity of action be the aim of all.

AROUND US.

COMPLIMENTARY (?)—The Kendalville Standard calls the Greenbackers of Noble county, "The Greenback patent adjustables."

CORNER STONE LAYING.—The corner stone of the new Court House, at La Grange, will be placed in position with proper ceremonies, on the 15th inst.

NEWSPAPER CHANGE.—It is said that White & Blymyer, formerly of the Defiance Democrat, intend purchasing the Bryan Democrat and Argus and consolidating them. This is not authentic, and the report may be untrue.—Hicksville News.

CONGRATULATIONS.—The Garrett Herald has just ended upon its second volume apparently in a prosperous condition. We are always glad to note the financial success of our neighbor publishers.

STEUBEN CO. FAIR.—The Steuben Republican of last week, contains the premium list for the third annual fair of the Steuben Co. Agricultural Society, to be held at Angola October 1, 2, 3 and 4.

AUBURN FOLKS.—William Shaffer, of DeKalb Co., with his sister, Miss Rosa, have been visiting among their large circle of friends and old acquaintances in this place, in the week past. They find a hoste of young comrads of their early days, in Pierceton to greet them.—Pierceton Free Press.

A TONGUELESS HORSE.—In attempting to lick its hind-foot a horse belonging to a Shelby county farmer stepped on its tongue and tore that member out at the roots. The animal is living and seems to suffer very little inconvenience from the loss of its tongue. There's where a horse beats a woman.—Wabash Courier.

A WABASH SNAKE STORY.—John M. Sowers, of Cass county, claims to have killed a blue viper snake which measured over three feet in length, and when opened was found to contain seventy young snakes from two to four inches in length. Sowers may be a man of truth and veracity, but he must get out of the snake business or his reputation will suffer.—Wabash Courier.

STOLL VS. MYERS.—The Myers-Stoll slander suits have been settled by Myers paying all of the costs and attorney's fees on both sides, amounting to about five hundred dollars. A little excessive foolishness is sometimes an expensive luxury.—Garrett Herald.

Civilities are becoming, even among editors. Simply because a man controls the columns of a newspaper it does not follow that he should be licensed to abuse those who disagree with him.

NOT TRUE.—Reports derogatory to the stability of the First National Bank of Auburn, this state, were put in circulation last week, and for two days the Bank was thronged with frightened depositors. Every depositor was promptly paid, and, when it was ascertained that the Bank was able to meet all demands, confidence took the place of distrust and the "run" subsided.—Wabash Courier.

The above item is false from beginning to end, and we presume originated from a little difficulty between one of the stockholders and a number of our citizens in regard to some endorsed paper held by the Bank. The "stability" of the Bank was not questioned, nor was there the least indication of a run on the Bank, which has the implicit confidence of the public.

A MURDER TRIAL ON HAND.—The trial of Lewis Abbott, for the murder of Frank Holton, near Summit, DeKalb county, on the 18th of last May, will begin in Auburn next week. It will be remembered that Abbott broke into Holton's house and shot Holton at the threshold of his bed room. Abbott says he did not do the shooting, but predicts that he will be hung unless he gets a change of venue to some other county, as the feeling against him in DeKalb is so strong. He has the walls of his cell covered with pictures of murderers, scaffold scenes, etc., cut from the Police Gazette and similar papers, and seems to take delight in discussing such subjects. He is a hardened criminal.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

THE GARRETT FIRE.—On Monday night last, about 12 o'clock, a two-story frame house on Cowen street was destroyed by fire. The house was vacant, and owned by the Hawkes Brothers, of Goshen, Ind., who were remodeling the building, which had been erected and used as a business house, into a residence. Mr. Philips had the contract of fitting up the building and had all the carpenter work completed, and the plasterers were ready to do their part of the work. Mr. Philips, Mr. Connett and Mr. Tuttle lost their carpenter tools About thirty bushels of wheat and a barrel of pork were stored in the building at the time of the fire, which was lost. The total loss will be about $700 upon which there is no insurance.—There is no clue to the origin of the fire, but it is almost certain that the fire brand was applied by an incendiary hand. We hope that the Messrs. Hawkes will rebuild, as they are abundantly able to do so.—Garrett Herald.

TRACTION ENGINE.—The town was somewhat taken by surprise, last week, upon seing a steam engine on wheels moving along the street at a fast walking speed. Many did not know that engines were being built to draw wagons on the roads, and hardly any that such a machine was being manufactured in our midst. This traction engine referred to, was manufactured at the shop of the Bullock Brothers, for Mr. Hoard, to be used in running a steam thresher and in drawing it from place to place, and when seen moving along the main street, was on its way to Mr. Hoard's farm. It moved along handsomely, and was directed apparently with ease by the engineer on the board. It is claimed the threshing machine can be readily moved from place to place by this steamer. It will propel the thresher when threshing, and can then put the wagon on which it rests in motion and move off with the thresher to other wheat stacks. If successful in doing this work, it will make quite a saving of horse labor. Messrs. Bullock are exhibiting much engenuity and skill in their line.—LaGrange Standard.

EXCURSION TO ROME CITY.

Greenback Rally.

August the 14th (next Wednesday) is the time fixed for the grand rally of Greenbackers at Rome City. An excursion train will leave Logansport on the Eel River Rail Road, arriving at LaOtto at 9:20 A. M., Avilla 9:40 and Kendalville about 10 o'clock. Fare for the round trip from LaOtto 75 cents, Avilla 60 cents. Persons desiring to go from Auburn can take the accommodation train west on the Eel River road at 7:18 in the morning and arrive at LaOtto in time for the excursion train.

We understand that the entire fire department of Columbia City consisting of a steam engine company, hook and ladder company and two hose companies will accompany the excursion in full uniform. Good bands will be in attendance to furnish music for the occasion. Don't fail to visit the favorite summer resort of Northern Indiana.

Why is it.

Our government has in its employ thousands of men in the mail service, employing them night and day so that the people can receive their mail matter at the very earliest hour. Frequently mails are carried hundreds of miles out of the way so that they may reach their destination a few hours in advance of their regular or nearest route; and for this purpose no time or expense is spared to accommodate the people. Knowing this, can any interested tell me why it is that the mail coming from the east, on the Eel River Railroad, must be taken by our place and detained in its delivery every day nearly an hour? If it is all done for the convenience of one or two men, then let them handle all the mails of a day at the Junction, and make only one delivery per day.

I may have more to say on this subject if the practice is not changed.

Butler Center Items.

—Blackberry pickers complain of sore hands.

—Emanuel Lung has a very sick child.

—The recent rains caused the corn to grow rapidly.

—The farmers have commenced to plow for fall seeding.

—There will be a greenback meeting at the Center next Friday night.

—A text school will be held at Cedar Creek, Aug. 18th in the evening. Text, temperance. We think professors should take more interest in this subject than they do.

—A word to the greenbackers. What is the use of a third party, when the democratic platform is the same as yours, except as to the payment of all bonds in greenbacks? The democrats believe in paying the bonds according to the contract and saving the government credit by being just and honest.

OCCASIONAL.

Concord Items.

—Dance Friday night.

—Roasting ears are now in order.

—A great deal of sickness exists in this vicinity.

—The organist, W. B. Brown, of the M. E. church is sick.

—You can stand on the streets of Concord and listen to the music of eight steam threshers.

—The committee wishes us to state that all Sunday schools not otherwise invited, are hereby invited to attend the picnic, Sep. 14th, 1878.

—Lewis Layman has taken unto himself one of the fairer sex. Although you can't live "long" Lewis, we hope you may live happy. SONNY.

LaOtto Items.

—Johnny Calanan is fast recovering from an attack of billious fever.

—John Stafford is suspected of taking unto himself a wife. How now, my lord?

—Mrs. Smith, wife of Obediah Smith died last Friday night after a brief illness.

—The girls of LaOtto are anxious to have their "fellers" take them to Mich. It is so cute, you know.

—Dr Taylor and wife made a flying visit to Petosky, Mich., last Saturday, returning Tuesday night.

—Quite a severe storm visited this vicinity last Saturday evening, doing considerable damage to corn and oats.

—Will Koran, of [illegible] Station, gave this burg a call last Friday. William has "dropped" on the agriculture business, and is now engaged in selling patent school seats.

—Every member of Bruce's String Band is on the sick list, which accounts for their non attendance at Altona last Thursday evening, having been engaged by H. Gettle, Esq., who is the manager of those splendid little hops for which Altona is noted. Try 'em again Hank. STIVER.

St. Joe Items.

—A harvest hop at St. Joe, Thursday night, Aug. 8th.

—Gen. Young of St. Joe, is on the sick list with billious fever.

—Bro. Belf at the bridge shanty, has a brand new outfit, from top to bottom.

—Pete is not well pleased, its a girl and only weighs seven pounds avoirdupois.

—Dr. C. H. Woodcox, of Hillsdale, Michigan, paid our place a short visit on Monday.

—O. H. Widney and wife who have been sick for the past week, are now convalecent.

—James Johnson has one of Job's comforters on his hand. Brace up, Jim., Job was sorely afflicted but bore it all with patience.

—Miller, the champion mule driver, hauled to the St. Joe mill one day last week, a single poplar log that scaled 1886 feet. Who can beat that?

—We notice that Uncle Ed. having become disgusted with the hog trade, has commenced to move the pile of old iron that lay in front of Geo. Barney & Sons' store at Spencerville.

—J. C. Smith, Greenville Dric, Mort Olds, Orange Fales and a son of Rev. Lancaster, of Spencerville, visited Chicago on Tuesday, taking advantage of excursion rates over the B. & O. R. R.

—Dr. Emanuel and W. C. Tindall, of Spencerville are the only two men of Concord-tp. who seem to be well pleased with the nominations on Saturday last, and it does a sick man good to see their shining faces.

—Considerable dissatisfaction exists among some of our Republican friends in regard to the nomination of treasurer on last Saturday, some seem to think there might have been a "nigger" in the wood pile. Perhaps there was.

—Mr. John Baltz living near Spencerville, informs us that he has threshed this season from forty-eight acres of ground, one thousand and two bushels of wheat, a part of which he marketed immediately at St. Joe, receiving 86c per bu. Who in the county can give a better average on the same number of acres.

—J. J. H. of Orange, don't wish his friends to advertise his doings. He should not give them an opportunity of knowing so much of his "biz," for there are plenty of eyes and ears that are both wide open for something that may turn up, and the half has not been told that will be should the same maneuvers continue.

—Query: will the two gentlemen living in Auburn, accept of the proposal of one of last Saturday's nominees, to pay two and three dollars for every one they might expend in his behalf during the campaign, provided that he might be elected. The candidate being too poor to stand the pressure of a campaign, proposes to double all money expended in his behalf. A. A. A.

TOWN TALK.

The Star sells a fine unlaundried, all-linen bosom and cuff shirt for 75c that sells all over the town for $1.00.

Other clothing men keep pacing up and down in front of the Star Clothing House, and wonder "how" the thing is done.

"They can't sell at such and such a price. It's mere talk," etc. Still our people get convinced on visiting the Star.

Brother clothiers engage men to buy up our cheap suits for them; still they say we are not offering bargains.

We again assert that we sell not sell our goods to merchants; our customers shall derive all the advantages of low prices.

Our sales in two days were $2,300.00.

All our citizens who study economy, quality and style, should inspect the stock of Sam, Pete & Max.

An extra force of salesmen in attendance at the Star Clothing House.

As we have stores in all the principal cities in the west, we have facilities for buying that small dealers do not possess.

8 oz. Duck Overalls for 40c at the Star Clothing House. They are selling at 75c elsewhere.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Miss Abby Hadassah Smith, one of the famous "Smith sisters," of Glastonbury, Ct., is dead. She was 81 years old. Only one of the sisters (Julia) is now living. There were five of them, and all were active in temperance and anti-slavery work. The most notable feature in the history of Abby has been her resistance to the payment of taxes on the ground of non-representation.

In view of statements which have lately gained considerable currency, that a strike would probably occur in the Pennsylvania coal regions during August, the Philadelphia Times has been investigating the matter, and prints correspondence from the most important coal centers. These all agree in the statement that no strike is anticipated, and that none is likely to occur.

THE WEST.

Chicago was visited by a terrific rainstorm a few nights ago, which flooded the basements and cellars of many buildings, damaging property to the amount of $50,000. ....Advices from Oregon report that the hostile Bannocks and Piutes have separated. The former are fleeing the country, while the latter are making for their agency.

A San Francisco dispatch says: "They are dismissing the volunteers in Oregon, except Sperry's company, at Pendleton. The war is considered over, though there may be one fight before the Indians reach the reservation."....Intelligence has been received at Yankton, Dakota, from the Mennonite settlement, forty miles north of there, of a cloud-burst in that region, by which a large portion of the country was submerged and seven persons drowned. The west branch of the Vermillion river, ordinarily about two rods wide, was filled to a width of over a mile and a depth of from ten to thirty feet. Much destruction of property is reported.

What the farmers lost the lumbermen in some measure gained by the recent heavy rains in Wisconsin and Minnesota. The floods that injured the crops swelled the rivers and permitted the log-drivers to do business on a magnificent scale.

A dispatch from Boise City, Idaho, says "the stage between Silver City and Boise City was attacked by Indians and the driver killed. The hostiles on their way up Snake river stopped at Ranschmager ranche, and encountered a number of Chinese employes, four of whom they slaughtered. The Indians are raiding all through the Snake River and Owyhee country, and driving off all the stock. Gen. Howard is in pursuit of the main body, estimated at 200 strong."

THE SOUTH.

At a picnic in Lewis county, Ky., Thomas and William Blankenship were stabbed to death by Daniel and Joseph Morgan. In the melee ten or fifteen persons were wounded.

A dispatch from Fort Clark says: "Mexicans from Las Vacas, Mexico, fired fifty shots into the town of San Felipe, Texas, in retaliation for having been pursued the day before by Capt. Kelley, United States army, who took from them some stolen stock. Great excitement prevails. Parson Potter, of frontier fame, shot and wounded a Greaser while in the act of stealing his horses. Escobedo is condemned to be shot, but it don't give peace on the border."

A party of masked men rode into Monroe, La., at 1 o'clock, one morning last week, forcibly took from the parish jail four colored men who were confined there charged with murder, took them to the Court-House square, and hung them to the limb of an oak tree.

Considerable alarm has been excited in the cities of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys by the outbreak of virulent yellow fever at New Orleans. Stringent quarantine regulations have been established at the larger places, and there have been few cases north of Vicksburg.

THE PRESIDENTIAL INVESTIGATION.

Ex-Congressman J. Hale Sypher was again before the committee on the 26th. The witness said that, to the best of his recollection, he thought that when Weber showed him the Sherman letter it was in the handwriting of John Sherman, and was, therefore, genuine. Mr. Potter asked whether the allegations of fraud and intimidation were not made after the election, and the witness replied affirmatively. The charges of intimidation were made by the Republicans in the parishes where their vote had fallen off. Mr Hiscock asked whether the Democrats sought to conciliate the colored people to vote their ticket. A.—Yes, in various ways. They did as you do in New York—buy voters. They were very affectionate to them. The Democrats organized a unification movement, for the purpose of giving negroes equalities with the whites in the street-cars and in the public schools, outstripping us and beating us a little....Ex-Congressman Frank Morey, of Louisiana, was the next witness. Was one of the Republican counsel before the Returning Board. Said the fact of intimidation in the bulldozed parishes was not disputed. From personal inspection, was satisfied Eliza Pinkston had been dangerously wounded. She was carried into the room of the Returning Board on a sofa. The impression prevailed that this exhibition would have a good effect, and his own impression was it would be an excellent thing to do in furtherance of the cause. Witness said on the face of the returns Nicholls and the Tilden electors had the majority; that the Returning Board threw out enough votes to elect Packard, and after this threw out 1,512 votes to elect the Hayes electors. This condition of things was discussed by prominent politicians, the visiting statesmen and the Republican counsel. Witness made some figuring as to what results would be produced if certain parish returns were thrown out. The result of the calculation was sent to Florida so as to come to the knowledge of the Florida officials.

Ex-Congressman Morey was called before the committee again on July 27. The witness said that he had one or two interviews with the President, at great length, during which the witness argued that the withdrawal of troops from New Orleans and not maintaining the Packard Government would be the destruction of the Republican party in the South. The President took the position that the Republican party could no longer retain that policy which had lost New York to the Republicans, and the party had become weaker in consequence, therefore the good of the Republican party demanded change. The President treated the subject as of national concern....Ex-Senator Lyman Trumbull, of Illinois, was the next witness. He testified that he visited New Orleans at the invitation of Mr. Hewitt, to witness the count of the Returning Board, in company with other gentlemen similarly invited. The visitors were not present when the board retired for deliberation; they did not see the compilation of the returns by which the board arrived at results, nor did he know whether any affidavits presented to the board were read at all. This closed the sittings of the committee at Atlantic City.

Ex Gov. John M. Palmer, who was Chairman of the Democratic Visiting Committee at New Orleans during the Returning Board count, testified before the Potter committee at New York on July 29. Witness found from statements of Louisiana colored men that many of the parishes had been disturbed. Their school money had been used up, and the Democratic politicians had made many promises to them to vote the Democratic ticket. The Democrats had made extraordinary efforts to capture the colored vote. Witness had a conference with Gen. Garfield, in which he urged the coalition of the two delegations so as to lay the facts before the country. The plan of the board was to lay aside all disputed parishes and take up the undisputed ones. On the 29th of November witness asked the board when the returns from any parish were polled that he be given the result, but they would not do so until they were completed. Witness asked permission of Gen. Wells to enter the compiling-room. Witness thought some Republicans had access to that room. He thought he saw Mr. Hale coming out of there. If witness was asked if the election in Louisiana was fair, he would say not. The sense of the people there was that Tilden and Nicholls were elected. He said to Gov. Wells and Gen. Anderson that the Tilden electors were chosen, but that they might on a fair [illegible] come to a different conclusion, but that this conclusion should be arrived at in evidence that could be clearly put before the public.... The committee then adjourned until the 12th of August.

WASHINGTON.

Some workingmen engaged in excavating for the foundation of the Bureau of Engraving, at 75 cents a day, were driven off by a party of laborers, a few days ago.

A Washington dispatch says: "The Mexican question has been the chief topic discussed by the President and Cabinet during the past few weeks, and it is gravely stated by persons who pretend to know what is going on, and who are interested in frontier affairs, that a war with the sister republic is seriously contemplated."....A very dangerous $100 counterfeit note on the Pittsfield National Bank, Pittsfield, Mass., has just been discovered by the National Bank Redemption Division of the Treasury Department.

Supt. Kimball has completed his selections of sites for life-saving stations on the lakes. They are to be at Manistee, Ludington, Muskegon and Kenosha on Lake Michigan, and Sandy Beach and a point near Port Austin on Lake Huron.

POLITICAL.

The Republicans of Maine have nominated Gov. Connor for re-election.

Wade Hampton has been renominated by the Democrats for Governor of South Carolina.... The President has appointed Henry C. Linn, of Kansas, agent for the Indians of the Kansas agency, and David Kern, of Illinois, agent for the Indians of the Crow agency.

GENERAL.

A society calling itself "The Grand National Clan of Knights of Labor," which has been in session in Philadelphia, claims a membership of 874,000. California has 141,000; Pennsylvania, 98,000; Indiana, 73,000; Ohio, 64,000; North Carolina, 62,000; New York, 49,000; Colorado, 6,000, etc.

The recent turf meeting at Cleveland, Ohio, witnessed a remarkable racing event. The celebrated horse Rarus trotted three mile heats, without a skip or a break, in 2:14¼, 2:15 and 2:14. The race was the fastest three consecutive heats on record, beating Goldsmith Maid's 2:16, 2:15½, 2:15 at Buffalo, in 1876, by 2¾ seconds. Thus Rarus has in one race lowered the record for a first heat, third heat and three consecutive heats.

Sitting Bull has made overtures to the Indian Office at Washington to return to the United States. He desires immunity for past offenses, and to be allowed to retain the ponies which his band now has. The authorities, however, have declined to entertain his proposition, owing to the fact that of late he has had emissaries among the Sioux attempting to arrange for an outbreak, and has pledged his assistance....A Montreal dispatch says "the steamship Lake Megantic, of the Beaver Line, bound from that port for Liverpool, stranded at Otter river, on the island of Anticosti. The passengers, fourteen in number, and the crew were saved."

A rowing match between the well-known experts, Hanlan and Ross, had a ridiculous termination at St. John, N. B., last week. When a mile and a quarter had been rowed Hanlan was some lengths ahead. Ross' shell here capsized, and a boat went out and picked him up. Hanlan rowed over the course leisurely in 36m. 58s. Ross says the spring of the rowlock worked out, and he upset, breaking the box of the boat; but it is believed Ross purposely upset to avoid defeat, which was inevitable.

A San Antonio (Texas) dispatch announces that "Lieut. Kelly, with a detachment of United States cavalry, crossed the Rio Grande, near the mouth of San Felipe creek, to recover stolen stock, on the trail of raiders. He passed near the town of Los Vacas, where he was joined by the Alcalde of the town, and other Mexicans, who assisted in the recovery of seventeen cattle and one horse. The Mexicans rendered every possible assistance."

The committee appointed, under a resolution of the National House of Representatives, to consider the financial and labor depression question, is now holding its sessions in New York. The committee consists of Messrs. A. S. Hewitt, of New York; J. M. Thompson, of Pennsylvania; W. W. Rice, of Massachusetts; Thomas A. Boyd, of Illinois, and H. L. Hickey, of Ohio, and all but the last named are in attendance. They sit daily, and hear all persons who choose to appear before them. A number of representatives of the various labor organizations have appeared and given their views regarding the prevailing depression. The most of them attribute the hard times to labor-saving machinery.

FOREIGN.

The British Embassy at Constantinople has received official reports of the continued wanton destruction of Mussulman life and property, in the Philippopolis district, by the Bulgarians and Russians....Fourteen children and three teachers were lately drowned by the capsizing of a boat on the river Blackwater, near the town of Bailieborough, Ireland....The session of the Woman's-Rights Congress opened at Paris on the 26th of July. M. Martin, Municipal Counselor of Paris, and Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, of Boston, were elected Presidents of the Congress.

At a banquet given in London last week to Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury, the former, replying to a toast, awarded Lord Salisbury the greater share of merit in the labors at Berlin. He brought back from Berlin the conviction that neither the Crimean nor the last war would ever have occurred if England had spoken out firmly. Repelling the assertion of Mr. Gladstone that the Turkish convention was an insane convention, Lord Beaconsfield spoke of Mr. Gladstone as a sophistical rhetorician, inebriated with the exuberance of his own verbosity and egotistical imagination....London has just had a most brilliant wedding, the contracting parties being Mr Arthur Paget and Miss Minnie Stevens, of New York....The Marquis of Lorne, Queen Victoria's son-in-law, will succeed Lord Dufferin as Governor General of Canada....A bale of cotton, entered by the Memphis Cotton Exchange, has been awarded the first premium at the Paris Exposition.

The Austrians crossed the Bosnian frontier with a powerful army, on the 29th of July, meeting with no opposition. With this movement the pacification and regeneration of that distracted country will fairly commence.

The inquiry instituted into the Rhodope insurrection and outrages in Roumelia, Turkey, has, it appears, resulted in damaging disclosures regarding the course of the Russian commanders, and the Russian Ambassador objected to its continuance. The Ambassadors of other foreign countries, however, deciding that the inquiry should go on, the Russian representative withdrew.

In regard to the election for members of Parliament in Germany, a Berlin dispatch says that "the relative positions of the various parties are unchanged. According to the returns, the National Liberal Electoral Committee estimate their party has lost fifteen seats. The Conservatives have gained twenty. The United Liberals will thus still have a majority in Parliament."....A cable dispatch reports that Gen. Todleben refuses to withdraw a man from the vicinity of Constantinople before the withdrawal of the British fleet. Difficulties are also reported in regard to the return of the Turkish prisoners of war.

He Preferred to Walk.

"She's pretty hot, ain't she?" said a backwoods passenger, addressing the engineer of a Mississippi steamer that was racing with another boat.

"So-so," responded the engineer, as he hung an additional wrench on the safety-valve cord to stop the steam from escaping.

"I reckon we'll overtake that craft soon," pursued the passenger.

"That's about it," returned the engineer, giving the cords another twitch and hallooing through the trumpet to the fireman to "shove her up."

"One hundred and ninety-five," hummed the passenger, looking first at the gauge and then at the boilers.

"That's about where she's rusticating," put in the engineer.

Then the passenger ran his fingers through his hair nervously, and walked about the decks for a few minutes, when he came back to the engineer and observed:

"Hadn't you better leave that boat go?"

"Can't do it. Must pass her."

"But s'posin' we should blow up?"

"Well," said the engineer, as he peeped over the guard to see how fast he was gaining, "if it's the will of Providence for this boat to blow up, we'll have to stand it." Then he hallooed to the fireman to roll up another cask of bacon, and to mix plenty of resin with the coal, and give her a little more turpentine and oil.

The next moment there was a splash in the river; but before the yawl could be lowered the man had succeeded in reaching the shore, and hallooed out:

"Go on with the race. I guess I'll walk!"—Commodore Rollingpin.

Choosing a Wife.

A man's first necessity is to find a woman physically able to support the cares and duties which attend the position. Solomon, who from a large experience with wives ought to know what constitutes a good one, describes his favorite wife as one who spun wool and flax and took care of the house, etc. In short, he means to say that she shall possess a large share of physical potency. It is the power to do, without which no woman deserves the name of wife. Within the past decade some young men in choosing wives have disregarded this advice of Solomon's, and have since repented. But young men are fast becoming more careful and wise in the matter. They are learning that a pretty face and form, though doubtless desirable accompaniments, are not the whole requisites of a good wife. It is true that there are some thoughtless exceptions among the young men, but they are simpletons. But above them are thoughtful men, who do not and will not fall in love blindly, but who are looking for the wife Solomon commends, and who will not be satisfied without such a one. I do not wish to reveal any one's secrets, but I have had men say to me when talking upon the subject of this discourse, "Girls, nowadays, are too frail to marry." Does any one think the young man to blame who says this and then stands aloof from the marriage altar? Surely not. And does the young lady who is too weak to sweep her own room, or to make her own toilet, think that such a man will hasten to propose. If so, she is mistaken; young men of to-day are fast becoming wise through the experience of their unfortunate friends.—Dr. Fletcher's lecture in Buffalo.

Novel Punishment.

A few days ago three boys, aged respectively 18, 16 and 12, slipped into the house of Mr. Sterling Jenkins, who lives on the Talbotton road, and stole a watch and some other valuables. Mr. Jenkins tracked and overtook them in Hamilton. He recovered his property, but did not desire to put the rascals in jail, so he told them that if they would whip each other he would not prosecute them. This they agreed to do. They were taken out, stripped to the waist, and provided with stout hickory switches. One was tied to a tree, and the others laid on his back lustily with switches until Mr. Jenkins expressed himself satisfied. The ceremony was gone through with each one. They were then dispersed with smarting backs and penitent hearts.—Columbus (Ga.) Times.

What to him was love or hope? What to him was joy or care? He stepped on a plug of Irish soap the girl had left on the topmost stair, and his feet flew out like wild, fierce things, and he struck each stair with a sound like a drum; and the girl below with the scrubbing things laughed like a fiend to see him come.

THAT "BARGAIN."

History of the Wormley's Hotel Conference.

Maj. E. A. Burke was the last witness examined at New Orleans by the Potter sub-committee. Burke testified that he was sent to Washington in January, 1877, by Gov. Nicholls, to represent the interests of the Nicholls Government. His instructions were to represent to the President the state of affairs in Louisiana in the interest of the said Government, and to keep Nicholls posted in regard to matters transpiring at Washington. The witness produced a number of telegrams to Nicholls showing the state of affairs at Washington, and then the following:

WORMLEY'S, Feb. 17.

E. A. Burke, Esq.:

My Dear Sir: In answer to your note of this morning I beg to say that I see no objection to your conferring with Hon. Randall Gibson on the subject discussed between us. Very truly,

STANLEY MATTHEWS.

The witness then read the following:

WILLARD'S, WASHINGTON, Feb. 18, 1877.

Hon. Stanley Matthews:

My Dear Sir: In accordance with your request I called several times to submit a "memo" of the points which, if understood, would doubtless aid in the solution of our State affairs. The notes indorsed represent the policy and determination of the Nicholls Government. As to the question heretofore discussed, every member of the Government and our people are pledged to the faithful carrying out of the same in case the Nicholls Government should be acquiesced in. Should the only government in the State which commands the respect and support of the people be overthrown, of course Gov. Nicholls' power to preserve peace or order ceases, and the possibility of remitting the State to anarchy and each parish thereof to the control of local factions must rest elsewhere. Respectfully yours,

E. A. BURKE.

The following telegram was then read:

[Confidential.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26, 1877.

To Gov. F. T. Nicholls:

We have been one week organizing a force to compel guarantee securing your Government. We had a conference to-day and to-night with Sherman, Matthews, Dennison, Garfield and Foster. We secure peace, order, protection of law to white and black, no persecution for past political conduct, and no immunity for crime. On the other hand they agree by a gradual process to adopt such methods as will result in your full possession of the Government of the State by the withdrawal of the troops and non-interference. As to the Senate it is so close and party lines are so tightly drawn that our friends believe that if Kellogg and a Democrat present credentials on the 4th of March there is great danger of Kellogg being seated. Could we agree as a part of this arrangement to let the long-term Senatorship remain now and call an extra session about the 10th of March to elect the short-term Senator, deferring the long-term Senator until the extra session could elect? Our leading Senators assure us that Kellogg's admiss'on can be prevented until the extra session of our Legislature can elect. This arrangement would not prevent the immediate election of Eustis as the short-term Senator. There may be favorable action immediately. Gibson is sick.

E. A. BURKE,
JOHN ELLIS,
WM. L. LEVY.

The witness said he visited the House of Representatives and Mr. Ellis there stated to him that he had received a letter from Lamar, stating that Matthews, Foster, and friends of Hayes had made a statement in regard to what they believed to be Hayes' views on the Southern question, and what would be his course toward Packard. He (Ellis) thought it necessary to go to Columbus, Ohio, with a view to verify the statement that had been made. Ellis stated that he had communicated the substance of the statement to Gov. Nicholls, and had telegraphed to Hayes, asking if he had been fairly represented by those claiming to be his friends. The witness disagreed with Ellis and telegraphed to Nicholls, stating that the ultimate solution of the Louisiana question to the benefit of his (Nicholls') Government rested more with the strong, powerful leaders of the Republican party than with Hayes.

The witness then suggested a conference of gentlemen who felt that they represented the views of Mr. Hayes with those representing Louisiana, so that there should be no misunderstanding, and, on this suggestion, the conference at Wormley's Hotel was held the next night, the 26th of February. There were present in this conference Messrs. Matthews, Garfield, Foster, Sherman, George Carter, Levy, Ellis and the witness, and, as there was no person actively representing South Carolina, they invited Mr. Watterson, of Kentucky, to be present in the interests of that State. The conference was held in Mr. Evarts' room, but that gentleman was not present. The condition of affairs in Louisiana was thoroughly discussed. The Louisiana representatives read a statement of the policy of the Nicholls Government. Upon the other hand, the most positive assurances were given by Matthews, Sherman, Garfield and Foster, neither of whom, however, stated that he was authorized by Hayes to speak, but they spoke from their knowledge of his views, from their past associations and from the fact that they were conversant with his views upon that question. They assumed to guarantee that the policy indicated in the dispatch authorized by President Grant would be carried out by Mr. Hayes.

A number of dispatches were here read, in reference to the guarantees of the protection of law to white and black in Louisiana, and the understanding that no Senator be elected for the long term until the extra session. Then the following telegrams were read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 27, 1877.

In an interview with the President this morning, in the course of a conversation on the subject of Louisiana affairs, he stated to me that as soon as the Presidential count was finished, and the result officially declared, it was his intention to notify Gen. Augur that the military orders issued for the purpose of preserving the status quo of the political situation were rescinded, except so far as to simply require the use of the troops when necessary for the preservation of the public peace. He authorized me to communicate this declaration to Mr. Ellis, of the Louisiana delegation. STANLEY MATTHEWS.

Gov. Nicholls: We have authorized the statement of the President concerning military orders in writing and confirmed by the President to be sent to four different parties. We have the guarantees of Sherman, Dennison, Matthews, and Foster representing the views of Gov. Hayes confirming the matters submitted to the caucus with the action of the caucus committed to writing, copies exchanged and satisfactory, and written assurances from Hayes that he is correctly represented by his friends here, Foster and Matthews, from whom we have written guarantees.

A Preacher's Struggle With a Knife in His Boot.

The Catawissa (Pa.) News Item says, "A peculiar accident happened the Rev. C. E. Fessenden last Thursday morning. While he was dressing to go to Wilkesbarre he dropped his penknife, with the blade open, into his boot. Being in somewhat of a hurry, he did not notice where the knife fell, and, when he pulled on his boot, felt something cutting him severely on the ball of the foot. It so happened that the knife fell with the handle to the heel and the point of the blade to the toe, with the sharp edge of the blade up, and, something like old Jemima's plaster, the more he pulled to get the boot off the more the knife cut his foot. How to get the knife without cutting the boot was a stumper for the reverend gentleman, and, with the knife cutting deeper at each movement of his foot, was no pleasant situation, with train-time approaching, and worst of all, no one present to assist him—Mrs. Fessenden being absent from home. Not being able to devise a way by which to get the knife, Mr. Fessenden, after about an hour's work, cut the boot to pieces, and was in time to take the train for Wilkesbarre."

"Sore Copy."

In the sanctum, cold and dreary, sat the writer, pond'ring o'er a memorandum book of items used before (book of scrawling head-notes rather; items taking days to gather them in cold wintry weather, using much time and leather)—pondered we these items o'er. While we conned them, slowly rocking, through our [illegible] there came a quick and nervous knocking at the sanctum door. "Sure that must be Jinks," we muttered, "Jinks that's knocking at our sanctum door; Jinks the everlasting bore." Ah! well do we remind us, in the walls which then confined us, the exchanges lay behind us and before us, and around us, all scattered o'er the floor. Thought we: "Jinks wants to borrow some newspaper till to-morrow, and 'twill be relief from sorrow to get rid of Jinks, the bore." Still the visitor kept knocking louder than before.

And the scattered pile of papers, cut some rather curious capers, being lifted by the breezes coming through another door; and we wished (the wish is evil, for one deemed always civil) that Jinks was at the devil, to stay there evermore; there to find his level—Jinks the everlasting bore!

Bracing up our patience firmer, then without another murmur, "Mr. Jinks," said we, "your pardon, your forgiveness we implore. But the fact is, we were reading of some curious proceeding, and thus it was, unheeding your loud rapping there before—" Here he opened wide the door. But phancy now our phelinks—for it wasn't Jinks, the bore—Jinks, nameless evermore.

But the form that stood before us caused a trembling to come o'er us, and memory brought us back again to days of yore; days when items were in plenty and where'er the writer went he picked up items by the score. 'Twas the form of our "devil," in attitude uncivil; and he thrust his head within the open door, with "The foreman's out of copy, sir, and he wants some more!"

Now this "local" had already walked about till nearly dead; he had sauntered through the city till his feet were very sore; walked through the street called Evans, and in the byways running off into portions of the city, both public and obscure; had examined store and cellar, and had questioned every feller whom he met, from door to door, if anything was stirring, anything occurring not published heretofore, and had met with no success; he would rather kinder guess he felt a little wicked at the ugly little bore, with the message from the foreman that he wanted something more.

"Now it's time you were departing, you scamp!" cried we upstarting; "get you back into the office, where you were before, or the words that you have spoken will get your bones all broken"—and we seized a cudgel oaken that was lying on the floor—"take your hands out of your pockets, and leave the sanctum door; tell the foreman there's no copy, you ugly little bore." Quoth our devil, "Send him more!"

And our devil, never sitting, still is flitting, still is flitting, back and forth upon the landing just outside the sanctum door. Tears adown his cheeks are streaming, a strange light from his eyes is beaming, and his voice is heard still screaming, "Sir, the foreman wants some more."

A Woman's Conscientiousness.

Perhaps the reader has noticed while journeying upon the Boston and Lowell railroad, at Willow bridge, Somerville, a plain but substantial neat brick house upon the hill, only a moment's walk from the station. Its door has not been opened for twelve years. Twelve years ago one of the brightest and smartest mechanics to be found in our bustling city—young, handsome, whose only apparent fortune was his daily wages, of which he was very careful, saving all he could for the one bright object of his life, which was to marry her whom he had won as soon as they could get money enough to commence housekeeping—was engaged to a charming young girl. She was conscientious to a fault, brought up in the most Puritanical or Puritan families, good, pure and beautiful. One bright morning in spring he invited her to take a drive in the suburbs. They halted after an hour's drive in front of this house. He asked her how she liked it. Of course she wished it was theirs; they could be so happy if they only had a home like that. He invited her in. The house had just been completed, and very nicely furnished. Judge of her surprise when he quietly informed her that the property was his, that he owned it. Why, she was completely dumbfounded, and, of course, wanted an explanation. How, when did he come in possession of so much property? He tried to avoid the question, but she was firm. He finally told her that he drew $20,000 in some lottery scheme, and with its funds built and furnished this home for her. She turned upon him as though he were the veriest gambler, vowing then and there that she would never be his wife until he gave back the property which he had gained by what she termed unlawful means. She scorned all efforts of his to occupy the house. They separated; parted at the door, which has not been opened since. The furniture remains the same to-day as when they left it twelve years ago, except what age has done. Both are wanderers upon the face of the earth, both lives blasted.—Haverhill (Mass.) Gazette.

Remarkable Locomotive Performances.

Mr. W. F. Buchanan, Superintendent of Motive Power of the New York Central and Hudson River railroad, has recently made a report on the performances of the locomotives thereon, from which it appears that the total mileage for the year 1877 on the Hudson River division was 3,726,919. The whole number of engines in service was 97, showing an average mileage for each engine for the year of 38,422 miles. The highest average for any one engine is that of No. 33, from Jan. 1, 1877, to April 1, 1878, a period of fifteen months, when the mileage was 117,872 miles, or 7,858 miles average per month.—Scientific American.

Austrian Art in Steel-Bronze Guns.

It is well known that the whole of the Austrian field artillery is now armed with the new steel-bronze breech-loader of Gen. Von Uchatius. The fact that nearly £2,000,000 have been spent from first to last by the Austro-Hungarian Government upon the weapons is proof enough of the confidence felt in high quarters as to its efficiency; and we have the testimony of many experienced officers that for accuracy and endurance the gun rivals the much more costly steel cannon of Herr Krupp. Be this as it may, it is reported that the Austrian Government is now about to set to work on the manufacture of heavy guns from the same inexpensive material, and to produce ship and siege guns from tempered bronze. Two six-inch experimental weapons which have fired several hundred rounds are reported to be still in a serviceable condition, and at short ranges may be considered armor-piercing guns. A shot at fifty or sixty yards is capable, we are told, of piercing the armor of such ironclads as the Warrior and Black Prince; and there is little doubt, therefore, that ten or twelve inch cannon constructed on the same pattern would be a match for most of our stouter battle-ships. The Austrian gunmakers seem to be able to make bronze as hard as steel, and as capable of resisting the wear and tear of rifled projectiles, since it would be altogether impossible to pierce army-plates with a gun made of bronze in the ordinary way. If we are to believe the last reports of their big-gun experiments, the bore of the weapons, after some 300 rounds, had sustained no injury at all, notwithstanding that comparatively heavy projectiles were fired, and with battering charges of gunpowder. But the most surprising feature about the Uchatius gun is the fact of its secret having been so closely kept. The Austrian Government has placed no difficulty in the way of an inspection of its guns, and has permitted even the presence of foreign military attaches in the Government workshops. Nay, more; samples of the wonderful steel-bronze metal have been freely distributed, and chemists have tried their best to discover its mode of preparation by analysis. All has been in vain. Despite fair means and foul, the secret of the Uchatius metal still remains a mystery, and bids fair to do so until its inventor divulges the composition himself.—London News.

A Child's Logic.

"Dad," said a hopeful sprig, "how many fowls are there on the table?"

"Why," said the old gentleman, as he looked complacently on a pair of fine roasted chickens that were smoking on the dinner table, "why, my son, there are two."

"Two!" replied young smartness. "There are three, sir, and I'll prove it."

"Three!" replied the old gentleman, who was a plain matter-of-fact man, and understood things as he saw them, "I'd like to have you prove that."

"Easily done, sir, easily done! Ain't that one?" laying his knife on the first.

"Yes, that's certain," said dad.

"Ain't that two?" pointing to the second, "and don't one and two make three?"

"Really," said the father, turning to the lady, who was in amazement at the immense learning of her son, "really, wife, this boy is a genius, and deserves to be encouraged for it. Here, old lady, you take one fowl, and I'll take the second, and John shall have the third!"

Benjamin F. King, Jr., of New Bedford, recently coughed up a splinter of wood which had been in his body for twenty-nine years, being a part of a stick which had accidentally pierced his flesh and broke off. He had often experienced sharp neuralgic pains in the vicinity of the wound, which have now entirely ceased.

Grace Courtland, an actress, was one of the passengers on the lost steamer Idaho. She took an ax and helped cut the lifeboat loose, took an oar in one of the boats, and sang a song to cheer her comrades. She lost her entire wardrobe and all her jewelry, but made no complaint whatever.

THEODORE REED, Editor.

THE RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION.

What Has Been Proved So Far by the Potter Committee.

[From the Washington Post.]

The Potter committee have proved, beyond successful rebuttal, things believed to be true, but not absolutely proven to be true before, to wit, that the electoral votes of Florida and Louisiana, which were given to Hayes, belonged to Tilden. Leaving out of consideration the State of Florida, which no honest man will deny to have been stolen, we will take up Louisiana. As to this State the Potter committee have clearly proved:

1. That a conspiracy was entered into by certain Republican leaders, the object being to hold no election in East Feliciana, Grant and other Democratic parishes.

2. That the fact that no Republican votes were cast in East Feliciana was not due to intimidation, as alleged, but was owing to Anderson's advice to the Republican leaders not to vote, as it would have a better effect than all the affidavits that could be produced.

3. That for a period of two days after the election the Republican leaders admitted that Tilden and Nicholls had carried the State by a heavy majority.

4. That when it became evident that the election of Hayes depended upon the result of the State, deliberate preparations were made for the purpose of defeating the will of the people as expressed at the polls.

5. That, in pursuance of this plan, protests forged and altered to suit the occasion were made for the parishes of East and West Feliciana, whereby a Democratic majority of over 2,800 was changed to a Republican majority of 500.

6. That the Supervisors of the above-named parishes were prevented by promises of reward made by John Sherman and others from exposing such forgeries.

7. That on the 27th day of November, when the Returning Board proceeded to sum up the result of their labors, it was discovered that, while Packard and a Republican Legislature were elected, Hayes was defeated.

8. That after the above date, and in order to secure the electoral vote for Hayes, forged protests were made for Richland and other parishes, and the returns from Lafayette and other parishes so changed as to increase the Republican vote.

9. That affidavits bearing fictitious names, and the names of dead men, were manufactured in the Custom House, and upon such affidavits various Democratic polls were thrown out.

10. That the acts above recited were known to some of the visiting statesmen, and received their approval.

11. That the electoral vote of the State, as counted before the two houses of Congress was a forgery.

12. That John Sherman, now Secretary of the Treasury, and at the time the personal representative of Mr. Hayes, was guilty of subornation of perjury.

13. That the leading parties necessary to a completion of the fraud were promised by him protection and reward.

14. That the fraudulent President, in fulfillment of Sherman's and Noyes' promises, has rewarded with office every scoundrel connected with the great crime in both Florida and Louisiana.

15. That Stanley Matthews, a Republican Senator from Ohio, and Justice Harlan, a Judge of the Supreme Court, had guilty knowledge of the fraudulent transactions by which the vote of Louisiana was stolen, and personally interested themselves to reward and protect the criminals.

16. That Senator Morton and Gen. Garfield, both members of the Electoral Commission, knew when they voted to count the vote of Louisiana for Hayes that it was both fraudulent and a forgery.

17. That Senator Kellogg, who assisted at the forgery of the Louisiana returns, has since been guilty of secreting the witnesses.

18. That not one of the criminals who assisted to perpetrate the colossal crime of the age has been punished; but that all but two—numbering over a hundred—have been provided with offices by Mr. Hayes' direct order or request, and in some cases by and through his continued and persistent interference.

With few exceptions these facts are proved, exclusive of the testimony of either Anderson or Weber, notwithstanding that the committee has only fairly entered upon its task.

Civil-Service Reform and Despair.

The Republican struggle for the possession of the House of Representatives in the next Congress has already partaken of the desperation of despair, if tautology will emphasize the statement. The administration has tossed aside almost all pretense at civil-service reform, and the Republican managers clutch at the straw-like hope of this one victory, the only one for which they can hope, with the reckless but determined longing that is just this side of hopelessness. The Republican party has issued a wail—and an assessment. It is for the old flag—and some contributions. The Republican Congressional Committee present their plea, and their tax. Eugene Hale is Chairman of the Executive Committee. George C. Gorham is Secretary. William B. Allison, Stephen W. Dorsey, B. K. Bruce, Charles Foster and Mr. Hiscock are among the members of the committee. The mad address which Eugene Hale sent to the country about "Mexicanization" and "revolution" will be remembered. The appeal of Postmaster General Key to the people of the South, to make this an issue, and its motive, are not forgotten. The attempt of the entire Republican press of the country to create a false issue is fresh in the recollection of all. But the Executive Committee of this Republican Congressional Committee have levied a tax upon all the Government employes, in the face of that civil-service order, to which it is ostentatiously announced the administration will still adhere. Mixed with the demand for money is the wail of despair. The terms in which the assessments upon Government employes is couched are the emphatic thing: "This committee, charged with laboring for the success of the Republican cause in the coming campaign for the election of members of Congress, call with confidence upon you, as a Republican, for such a contribution in money as you may feel willing to make, hoping that it may not be less than $—." Why is this phrase, "as a Republican?" Is it an intimation that the assessed individual, if a Republican, is expected to make the contribution, and if not a Republican is expected to make way for a Republican who will contribute! A noticeable thing in this letter of assessment is the fact that the blanks for the number of dollars below which the committee hope the contribution will not fall are filled out with scrupulous care. It is announced to each employe of the Government that the committee hope his voluntary gift will not fall below a named number of dollars. We have before us one of these assessment letters addressed to a servant of the Government who receives a poor pittance of $800 a year for his services. The starving salaries, even, do not escape taxation.

It was necessary to advise the employes of the Government that they could not hide behind any civil-service rule to avoid paying the assessment. And so the amercing epistle reads: "The committee deem it proper * * * to inform those who happen to be in Federal employ that there will be no objection in any official quarter to such voluntary (?) contribution."

This is not the action of President Hayes; it is the action of the Republican managers. The vicious system of political assessments has never, in our history, been carried further than this. It has never been more bald and bold. The assessment has never been more bluntly made. Nor has it ever been made so hypocritically in the eyes of the country.

The Republican committee do not fail to make known the reason for this, under the circumstances, extraordinary procedure. It is found in these words: "The importance of the pending struggle cannot easily be exaggerated. That the Senate is to be Democratic after the the 4th of March, 1879, is very nearly a certainty. In view of this the election of a Democratic House of Representatives would precipitate upon the country agitations which would inevitably add to present distresses." The letter points out the possibility that the House may elect the next President, and all this is a flag of distress.

Lest it be asserted that it is only "voluntary contributions" that are solicited, we quote the peremptory concluding words of the invitation:

> Please make prompt and favorable response to this letter, and remit at once by draft or postal money order, to Sidney F. Austin, Esq., treasurer, etc., German American National Bank, Washington, D. C.
>
> By order of the committee.
>
> GEO. C. GORHAM, Secretary.

This is Eugene Hale's civil-service reform. Along with it comes the abandonment of the Republican hope of capturing the next House.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Civil-Service Reform as Administered by Mr. Hayes.

Judge McLin, of Florida, testified before the Investigating Committee that previous to his appointment as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of New Mexico he had been informed, "at the instance of the President, by Mr. Cowgill, of the Returning Board, that he would be appointed, * * * the President having told Cowgill that he was under both political and personal obligations to Cowgill and witness.' About this reform there is very much of the odor of the old doctrine, "To the victors belong the spoils."

Judge McLin further testified as follows:

> Among the prominent actors in the Florida election in 1876, the following had been provided for as stated:
>
> Gov. Stearns was appointed on the Hot Springs Commission.
>
> J. W. Howells, who got up Driggers' return, in Baker county, is now Collector of Customs at Fernandina, Fla.
>
> Joseph Bowes, election inspector, charged with manipulating votes in Leon county, is in the treasury at Washington.
>
> William H. Vance, clerk at Archer Precinct No. 2, has a Federal position at Washington.
>
> R. H. Black, inspector at the same precinct, has a Federal clerkship in Philadelphia.
>
> Bell, inspector in Jefferson county, received a Federal appointment.
>
> George H. Leon, inspector in Leon county, is a clerk in the treasury at Washington.
>
> Dennis, of Alachua county, had recently a position in the treasury.
>
> Moses J. Taylor, one of the Returning Board of Jefferson, is in the Land Office at Washington.

This is a forcible commentary on the platitudes of Hayes himself, and of journals like Harper's Weekly, on civil-service reform under the present administration.

Those who did little and those who did much in aid of the fraudulent returns, almost to a man, have been rewarded by official appointments.

How inconsistent for an administration conducted in this manner to set up a pretense to a higher standard in the making of appointments than had ever been observed before! Men have been selected on account of political services as much as under any previous administration. The principal difference is that but little regard has been paid to the more elevated and reputable kind of work for the party, while most of those identified with the success of Mr. Hayes in the States which were carried by fraud have been rewarded.—New York Sun.

ARTESIAN wells will soon become the chief source of water supply in San Francisco. The largest sugar refinery in that city lately sunk a well at a cost of $1,000. It has by this means relieved itself of $600 monthly tax, and it supplies thirty-five tenants also. All artesian water, being soft, sweet, and clear, has the preference over others.

THE longest daily mail and stage line in the United States, 1,560 miles, from Fort Worth in Texas to Fort Yuma on the Colorado river, was formally inaugurated last month with a procession of Concord stages drawn by 200 horses.

BANKS.

What is Their True Function, and What Are Their Abuses?

The reflective reader of history will have reason to observe that the greatest agencies in the interest of mankind—the most necessary to their happiness and progress—have also been subject to the greatest abuses, thus becoming the source of much misery and wrong to mankind. The church, as the chief promoter of an exalted and a pure religious life; the state, as the bulwark of life, liberty and human prosperity—the very principle of association to attain objects essential to human welfare, but impossible to the individual—have each been wrested from their proper use, and made instruments of the greatest public tyranny and wrong. To this reflection the banking systems of all countries form no exception, but a remarkable illustration.

It may well be said that, next to the invention of letters and the various instrumentalities for the spread thereof, money and its instrumentalities is the greatest invention and promoter of civilized life. As one spreads the power and light of thought, which, like sunlight, gives life and fecundity to the mind and moral nature of man, so the other is the means, the stimulus and the force that spreads all physical comfort or material prosperity which mankind can communicate to each other. Civilization could not have passed the lowest state of savage life without the help of money; and its progress in "liberty and the pursuit of happiness" depends upon the rightful administration of the institutions arising out of the use of money. Let the American people be assured that they are now fighting the last and greatest battle for natural freedom and progress against the greatest enemy of both—the moneyed institutions of the world. The spiritual despotism of the church and the military despotism of the state have, in a great measure, passed away among civilized nations; but whatever is left of these, and whatever feudalism and slavery remains to be dispelled, is intrenched in the moneyed institutions of society. The sword and the purse have in times past ruled the world; the purse and the sword rule it now. Twin brothers of barbarism—like the Siamese twins—if one dies the other must also depart. The people have only to understand the theory and the practice of the banks that administer their fiscal affairs to perceive at once that, under great and indispensable uses, they cover great frauds and oppressions; that their whole system involves certain abuses to which poor human nature will fall inevitably, unless guarded by the provisions of law underlying the whole system of banking. As in slavery, noble and good natures caught in the meshes of a false system, yet administered the same in the spirit of truth and kindness, to the best of their ability, while the selfish and the base had every opportunity to exercise their worst passions, protected by the system itself. So the banking systems of the world and of this country; while they naturally and beneficially arose out of a system of things in the social order, now in a great measure past, and, while they are still administered, for the most part, in the spirit of fairness and of kindness that belongs wholly to the natures of the men who control these institutions, yet they are now out of logic with the times; they are an oppression and a hindrance, as a system, and give ample opportunity to the designing and the base to work great wrongs to the people who trust them.

But it is not in this latter point of view that we wish to discuss banks, for all institutions are all more or less liable to abuse. But the institutions of banking, in the fundamental principles which regulate their functions, are obnoxious to the charge of being "remnants of barbarism and feudalism," opposed to progress and the interests of a people aiming at the best administration of republican principles and institutions. A system of banking—not any one bank, which may only show a part of the system, but a system of banks—is analogous to a pond of water, or any natural body of water, from which is drawn the power to set some practical industry into operation. It must be a "safe deposit" of all the water that finds access to it—not liable to break and overwhelm town and country with ruin. It must have an unfailing "issue" of water for the wants of the machinery dependent upon it, and not dry up when it is most wanted. It must be so arranged as to "let on" or apply its power according to the demands of the various industries that require the power. So every system of banking must furnish a "safe deposit" for savings, an unfailing "issue" of real money, and a judicious "discount" of this money to all the industries that need its use and working power. Banks of safe deposit and savings, banks of issue, and banks of discount make up this whole system.

The bench of a "money changer" in old Jerusalem, Venice or London illustrates all these functions of banks, for they arose out of the use and necessary means for the distribution of money. His bench was the depository of his own and the money of his friends; he was ready to loan on all kinds of pledges, pawns and securities of personal property, and a large part of his business soon came to be the giving of "redeemable notes" to traveling merchants, by which they could carry money, in the shape of credit, to foreign countries.

All this system of money exchange depended simply upon the faith and honesty of the parties concerned. There was no interference on the part of Government or the law, except to punish fraud. If the banker of olden times loaned or sold his deposits and trusts, his pledges and his pawns, so that he could not return them when called for by the owners; if he issued more "notes" than he could "redeem," swift punishment came upon him as a cheat and a liar. Or, suppose he extorted "ruinous usury" out of the distress and need of his customers, there was redress in the law against usury. But suppose some tyrant of the times had connected his power and moneyed interests with one or more such bankers and brokers, and allowed them to rob and oppress the people by the very means on which they depended to carry on all the trade and commerce of the country. Would not such a tyrant be the execration of all subsequent history?

When Julius Cæsar stood upon the bank of the Rubicon with his conquering army, and was deterred from crossing by the positive law and prohibition of the Senate of his country, and by his traditional respect for the republic which he could thus overthrow, the tax-gatherers and commissioners of the time, who were also the bankers and moneyed men of the country, to whom was sold or farmed out the privilege of assessing and gathering the Government taxes—these came to Cæsar and—having failed to get their oppressive and unjust demands from the Senate, where the "virtuous Cato" exposed their designs—these very men offered to support the army by loans and give their immoral support, if he would grant them the privileges which the Senate had refused. He succeeded, and—"Rome was free no more!"

The enormity and wickedness of this conduct can only be measured by the greed, the selfishness, the oppression, and the traitorous spirit of these moneyed men, and much more in the miserable and unjust system of taxation under which these men were acting, which placed them under every temptation and gave them every opportunity to oppress and spoliate the people.

Thus has it ever been with any organization of the moneyed power, when it could ally itself with the civil power of the state; not in the interests of the people at large, but to obtain the sanction and power of the Government to grow into still greater wealth and influence at the expense, the toil and the confiscation of the property of the people.

"But these things," you say, "are the actions of bad men." So they are; but it is a bad system of administration that gives every advantage and temptation to the cupidity or bad passions of men.

It is the design of these articles, not to attack men, but unwholesome systems of administration. The American people have no need to change the principles of their Government, for they are founded on a constitution, the sole object of which is to "promote justice and secure the general welfare." But they must see to it that the "administration" are not turned to the exclusive advantage of any one class while the rest of the people groan under their burdens. This is the case in reference to the whole system of banking existing in this country. That system is an exotic from England, where it oppresses the people still more than it does here.

PAPER MONEY.

Continental Money and French Assignats—Why They Failed as Currency.

Any one who studies the social industrial condition of the French and American people, at the time when the assignats and Continental money were practically repudiated, will be at no loss to understand why their paper money failed to meet the expectations of its friends. The newly-liberated American colonies were in the condition of a political prisoner released from confinement, with nothing to call his own save the clothing on his back. Almost bereft of resources, hardly any property of present utility, an insignificant commerce, no industries except those of the most domestic kind, a scanty population spread over a wide extent of territory, a general feeling of distrust and uneasiness with regard to the future, and an ignorance of finance beyond the mysteries of primitive barter, it is not surprising the Continental money should have proved a useless, if not a hurtful, appendage to the economies of the young nation. If, however, instead of withdrawing this money, the Government of the day had been far-sighted enough to retain it, the people would, after a few years, have found such ample use for it in representing the new property created by them, that, in place of being a drug on their hands, it would have become sufficiently indispensable to hold an equality with gold in purchasing power; and they would not, because of its absence, have been subsequently obliged to resort to the paper issues of almost irresponsible private corporations, whose recklessness, dishonesty, incompetency, and misfortunes afterwards gave birth to untold miseries, which would have been prevented, so far as the currency was concerned, had the latter been national instead of sectional, been eagle instead of wild-cat.

The causes which rendered the assignats worthless, although not entirely identical with those that made waste paper of the Continental money, yet present a certain parallelism thereto, which clearly establishes the fact that the fault lay not in the currency but in the contemporary circumstances which militated against the practicable and profitable employment of it as a representative of values. The French Directory had a correct idea concerning the legitimate office of currency when they issued the assignats to represent the value of the public domain and of Government property generally; but they erred in not making them thoroughly national; in not proclaiming they were put forth to represent not only public property so-called, but all property of every description within the national domain; for when, to meet the grave crises which sprung upon them in rapid succession, the Directory issued an amount of currency the face value of which exceeded the estimated worth in gold of the property set apart to redeem it, public faith wavered, then ultimately collapsed under a heap that demanded a hundred times more of property for it to represent than what had been expressly reserved for that purpose; whereas, had the people been taught at the outset that the currency was designed to represent everything in the shape of property belonging to the nation, both collectively and individually, their confidence in it would have been immeasurably strengthened.

A second cause of failure was the impossibility of profitably utilizing the currency as fast as it appeared, resembling, in this respect, the experience of our forefathers in Revolutionary times—an embarrassment, however, that would have been felt under a similarly rapid influx of gold coin, and, therefore, is not to be ascribed to the assignats and Continental money merely because they were made of paper and not of metal. The derangement caused by the sudden appearance of an equal amount of gold currency would probably have proved less disastrous, since its force would, in a comparatively short time, have expended itself throughout the surrounding nations; but the assignats, being an exclusively French currency, neither England, Germany, Spain, Italy, nor any of the other European states could utilize it; consequently, instead of exhausting its force by slightly enhancing the value of all property throughout the world, as an equal amount of gold coin would ultimately have done, its influence was concentrated upon the much-smaller area of French property, and thereby very naturally affected it to an enormous extent; a result, I repeat, that would also have followed the sudden appearance of an equal amount of gold currency had there been no use for it beyond the French frontier, or had its exportation been effectually prevented. Moreover, the assignats would neither have inordinately enhanced the price of property measured by them, nor become a dead weight in the hands of the people, had the latter been capable of utilizing their currency by creating additional property for it to represent, whereby values would have receded to their former level. This inability arose from two causes: first, the disturbed state of the nation, which checked every tendency toward individual enterprise; and second, the want of the thousands of new avenues opened by science and recent discoveries to this generation for the profitable use of money.

A third cause to which the failure of the assignats must be ascribed was the unparalleled political condition of the French nation. Every one is more or less familiar with the deplorable state of affairs throughout France at that time, and whoever is capable of expressing an intelligent opinion will admit that such a condition of national affairs was, in itself, apart from any other cause, sufficient to destroy the efficiency of any purely national currency; of any currency the worth of which depends upon the preservation of the government to which it owes its birth, a remark that applies with quite as much force to government bonds as to government currency.

Neither the Continental money nor the French assignats failed of their intended purpose because they were paper and not metallic currencies. There are other reasons for that failure, which I reserve to strenghen and illustrate my future arguments in favor of a paper currency for this country. These two currencies are favorite exemplars with those who would reject a greenback currency solely on account of the material it is made of. I have, therefore, purposely selected them to expose more effectually the utter fallaciousness of such reasoning on the part of the hard-money advocates. The history, however, of every paper currency which has disappointed the expectations of its projectors will reveal, when critically examined, that the fault was due to circumstances wholly foreign to all considerations of the material used.

WILLIAM HOWARD.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.

A Dog Makes the Acquaintance of a Bee.

A grocer on Carr street yesterday placed on the sidewalk in front of his store a sugar hogshead, which he had just emptied. The adhering sweets attracted myriads of flies and a few honey-bees, which seemed to think they had found a bonanza. A vagabond-looking dog was lying down in the shade of the sugar hogshead, and was pestered much by the flies, which found the dog's nose a good place to roost after they had filled themselves with sugar. After the dog had wearied himself out by his ineffectual snaps at the flies he buried his nose between his paws and took the annoyance philosophically. At length a bee came humming around him, and, being bigger game, the dog concluded to go for it, and, watching his opportunity, snapped at it and caught it in his mouth. Then he made a sudden spring to his feet as if he had just thought of something that he had to do in a hurry, and the hair all over him raised on end as if he had been electrified. Then he pranced around for a moment, shaking his head frantically, as if he were worrying a rat. A little black object dropped from his mouth, which he looked at inquiringly for a brief instant, and then started off in haste to see a man around the corner, howling dismally as he went. The man was not there, and the dog came back and once more made an inspection of the little black object that lay on the sidewalk, and poked it timidly with his paw. He perhaps wanted to be able to recognize one of those little things, if he should ever encounter one of them again. After satisfying his curiosity he went and lay down again with a sort of grin-and-bear-it-you-old-fool look, giving vent to his feelings occasionally by a subdued canine sigh.—St. Louis Republican.

A Scientific Apparatus.

If it was not for science stepping in once in a while and relieving an overburdened community we should all bust. The latest thing that science has got in its work on is a patent undershirt, made of netting. It is just like a fish net, and makes a man look like a halibut entangled in a fisherman's seine. In fact, it makes him an in seine man. It is claimed by the inventor that, worn next to the skin, the shirt allows the perspiration to evaporate, instead of being mopped up by the shirt, keeping the skin dry and cool. It looks reasonable. The holes also furnish excellent places for mosquitoes to settle down and go into business, each mosquito having a quarter section of cuticle all to himself, fenced in. Besides these advantages in regard to perspiration, the shirts can be used for many purposes. The arms can be tied, and the neck tied, and the shirt can be used as a net to catch fish when you go out to the lake. Again, the shirt can be strung between two trees for a hammock, or you can strain milk through it, or muzzle a dog, or squeeze currants for jelly, or use it for a horse net, or you can inflate it by stopping up the holes and make a balloon ascension. This garment took a medal at the Centennial Exhibition, and those who have worn them say they beat anything in the world for coolness. It does seem queer to think of wearing a hammock next to the skin.—Peck's Sun.

SUICIDE.

Invisible as the wind along the sky,
  She ever wanders about the earth immense,
  A lonely spirit of strange malevolence.
With noiseless feet and vigilant, furtive eye,
She loathes and shuns each halcyon haunt where lie
  Love, peace, and all sweet happiness born from thence,
  Yet greedily seeks for woes and discontents,
For agony's hottest tear, its deepest sigh!
But when some dreary sufferer darkly falls
  To find in life's chill heaven one starry trace,
One vital hope no ruinous harm assails,
  Toward him she steals with sure, triumphant pace,
And slowly to his desperate look unveils
  The maddening splendors of her lurid face!

MIDSUMMER.

Midway about the circle of the year
  There is a single perfect day that lies
  Supremely fair, before our careless eyes.
After the spathes of floral bloom appear,
Before is found the first dead leaf and sere,
  It comes, precursor of the autumn skies,
  And crown of spring's endeavor. Till it dies
We do not dream the flawless day is here,
And thus, as on the way of life we speed,
  Mindful but of the joys we hope to see,
We never think, "These present hours exceed
  All that have been or that shall ever be;"
Yet somewhere on our journey we shall stay
Backward to gaze on our midsummer day.

How They Keep Clean in France.

The Liliputian water pitchers in the chambers first arrest attention, says Prentice Mulford, in one of his recent Paris letters. There are few water pitchers in Paris holding over a quart. The landlord is sent for, and request made for a more commodious water pitcher. An English or American family can't be washed in a quart of water. The landlord of lodgings by the month answers with a grin or a shrug. That's all the increased water privilege you'll get out of him. The chamber floor needs scrubbing. The French dictionary is consulted for words suitable for "pail," "soap," and a "scrubbing-brush." The interpretation is conveyed to the landlord. But they never scrub a court-yard, a bridge, or a dog. On the quays one may continually see men whose business it is to scrub dogs in the river, but never chamber floors. They'll wax your floor. They'll wax over the old dirt, and when the next deposit accumulates they'll wax that. Every time we endeavored to interpret "scrub," "pail," "soap," and "brush" to our landlord he went through a strange pantomime of kicking backward and forward with his right leg. That's all we could get out of him. But when scrubbing time, as we supposed it to be, came, the interpretation became plain. He meant the waxing process. This required the use of the landlord's leg and bare foot. Yes. He kicked off one shoe and stocking, stepped on his hunk of wax, grabbed it with his toe and heel, and waxed the floor thus as easily as if his right leg had been his right arm. That's all the scrubbing we could get out of him.

Charmed by a Snake.

At the plantation of Mr. Turner, near Lake City, Fla., a most singular scene occurred, the charming of a thirteen-foot alligator by a rattlesnake. The snake first saw the alligator, and with his rattles attracted the latter's attention. Then began the charming process, which lasted fully half an hour. The alligator at first turned his head once or twice, but was immediately called to order by the rattles of the snake. Toward the end of the half-hour, with fixed eyes, the alligator moved slowly toward his terrible enemy until within striking distance, when the snake curled himself more compactly, and, with all the strength he could muster, struck the alligator. For a moment the alligator shook tremulously, and then, as if by magic, made a semi-circle backward movement, peculiar to the species, and brought his tail down upon the snake with fatal effect. Our informant then dispatched the alligator, and found that the snake had missed his mark. The snake measured six feet, and had nine rattles and one button.—Lake City (Fla.) Reporter.

MINNIE WARREN'S DEATH.

MAJOR NEWELL'S WIFE AND GEN. TOM THUMB'S SISTER-IN-LAW.

The Youngest and Prettiest of Mr. Barnum's Dwarfs—Commodore Nutt's Attentions to Lavinia and Afterwards to Her Sister.

Minnie Warren, the youngest, brightest and prettiest of Mr. Barnum's dwarfs, died in Middleboro, Mass., on Tuesday evening, in childbed. She was the youngest of a family of eight children, all of whom except herself and her sister Lavinia, now Mrs. Tom Thumb, were of ordinary size. When Minnie was 17 years of age she joined the Tom Thumb troupe, and for fifteen years she traveled almost continually, visiting nearly all the civilized parts of the globe. She was 40 inches in height, and never attained a weight to exceed 45 pounds, being considerable shorter and more slender than Mrs. Thumb. She was 27 years of age at the time of her death. To a pretty face she added pleasant disposition and winning ways, and she became the fast favorite of Mr. Barnum as well as of the public. When Tom Thumb was married to Lavinia Warren the general opinion was that Commodore Nutt would take Minnie for his bride; but the little Commodore had set his affections on Lavinia, and his little heart was blighted when Gen. Tom Thumb won her from him.

"Never mind, Commodore," the jovial Barnum said, "Minnie Warren is a better match for you. She is younger than you, while Lavinia is several years older."

"Thank you sir," the Commodore said, stiffly. "I would not marry the best woman living. I don't believe in women anyway."

Time lessened Commodore Nutt's grief, and he partly renewed his attentions to Miss Minnie. But, after his first disappointment in love it is said he became a fast young man, and Minnie, like a wise young lady, discouraged his addresses.

A few years ago Barnum found another liliputian, Major Newell, who was rechristened Gen. Grant, Jr., and added to the Tom Thumb combination. The Major was bright and intelligent, and he and Minnie became great friends About a year ago they were married, and they lived happily together with Gen. Thumb and wife in Middleboro. Their last tour together was in the Western States, from which they recently returned.

When Mr. Barnum was in the city recently he let out the secret, which had been closely kept by Minnie's family, but the memory of the spurious Thumb baby led them to regard the story as a Barnum hoax. But the New Haven women soon discovered the purchase of little bits of muslin, lace and flannel by members of the Warren household, and secrecy became impossible. A lady friend who visited the Warrens described the little garments as "too comical for anything." Dolls' patterns were used, and the little slips and wrappers were made one-sixth of the size of garments for ordinary babies.

Mrs. Newell is described as looking forward to maternity with great anticipations of happiness and no misgivings. Her husband, however, had gloomy forboding, and expressed the greatest solicitude Her death was a great shock to her family. The child died at birth. It weighed five pounds and ten ounces. Four hours later them other died from exhaustion.

A gentleman who was with Mr. Barnum for several years says that Major and Mrs. Newell were the smallest wedded pair that ever lived. One smaller couple is mentioned by Marco Polo in his travels in Tartary. They were each 26 years of age, and twelve and eleven inches in hight respectively. They married by order of the Kahn, and their fourth son was six feet two inches in height. There are some doubts as to the correctness of Polo's figures.

Gen. Tom Thumb and wife have grown corpulent in the last few years, and neither appear so diminutive as in their younger days. The General has been wealthy, but has lived extravgantly and spent a fortune in yatching and other sports, and possesses only a moderate competence. He is 41 years of age.

THE FUNERAL—HOW THE SWEET LITTLE DWARF LOOKED IN HER COFFIN—THE BABY.

At 2 o'clock the family assembled in the parlor around the casket. This was of black walnut, covered with blue silk velvet, and was lined with white satin. It was the casket of a child of ten years but as the friends looked within they saw the little mother with one arm embracing the girl baby, whose face lay nestled close to the mother's bosom. The mother's head was turned to the baby, and the two seemed quietly sleeping. The baby's face was a sweet one, a little dimple remaining on the chin, that even death had not taken away. No one looked upon the little mother and her child without weeping. Gen. Tom Thumb sat near the head of the casket, and by him sat his wife Lavinia Warren. On the other side sat Major Newell, and he made no effort to control his feelings. He wept bitterly, as he has almost without cessation since his wife died. Beside these, Minnie's father and mother and brothers and sisters, all large men and women were in the room. They remember Minnie as a daughter and sister, who shared her wealth with them, rather than as a famous little woman Mrs. P. T. Barnum and Mr. Bleeker and his wife, who have traveled with the Tom Thumb party for fifteen years, were also among the chief mourners.

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

The Only Female Mason.

The Hon. Elizabeth St. Leger was the only female who was ever initiated into the mystery of Freemasonry. She had two degrees—the first and the second—conferred on her. As it may seem interesting to the general reader, we give the story as to how Miss St. Leger obtained this honor, promising that the information comes from the best sources. Lord Doneraile, Miss St. Leger's father, a very zealous mason, had a warrant, and occasionally opened lodge at Doneraile house, his sons and some intimate friends assisting, and it is said that never were Masonic duties more rigorously performed than by the brethren of No 105, the number of their lodge.

It appears that previous to the initiation of a gentleman to the first degree of masonry, Miss St. Leger, who was a young girl, happened to be in an apartment adjoining the room generally used as a lodge room, but whether the young lady was there by design, or merely accident, we cannot confidently state. The room at the same time was undergoing some alteration; among other things the wall was considerably reduced in one part for the purpose of making a saloon. The young lady having heard the voices of freemasons, and being incited by the curiosity natural to all to see this mystery, so long and so secretly locked up from public view, had the courage to pick a brick out of the wall with her scissors, and thus witness the first two steps of the ceremony.

Curiosity gratified, fear at once took possession of her mind, and those who understood this passage well know what the feelings of any person must be who could unlawfully behold that ceremony; let them judge what were the feelings of a young girl under such extraordinary circumstances. There was no mode of escape, except through the room where the concluding part of the second step was still being solemnized at the far end, and the room was a very large one. Miss St. Leger had resolution enough to attempt her escape that way, and with light and trembling steps glided along unobserved, laid her hand on the handle of the door, and opened it, but before her stood, to her dismay, a grim tiler with his long sword unsheathed.

A shriek that pierced through the apartments alarmed the members of the lodge, who all rushed to the door, and, finding that Miss St. Leger had been in the room during the ceremony, resolved it is said, in the paroxysm of their rage, to put the fair spectatress to death; but at the moving and earnest supplication of her youngest brother, here life was spared, on condition of her going through the two remaining steps of the solemn ceremony she had unlawfully witnessed. This she consented to, and they conducted the beautiful and terrified young lady through those trials which are sometimes more than enough for masculine resolution, little thinking they were taking into the bosom of their craft a member that would reflect lustre on the annals of Masonry.

Miss St. Leger was a cousin to General Anthony St. Leger, who instituted the interesting race and celebrated Doncaster St. Leger stakes. Eventually she married Richard Aldworth, of Newmarket a member of a highly honorable and ancient family. Whenever a benefit was given at any of the theatres at Dublin or Cork, for the Masonic female orphan asylum, Mrs. Aldworth walked at the head of the Freemasons, with her apron and other insignia of Freemasonry, and sat in the front of the stage-box. The house was always crowded on these occasions. The portrait of this estimable woman is in the room of almost every lodge in Ireland.

The Stars and Stripes in Turkey.

As I was hurrying through the streets of Philippopoli the day before yesterday, an hour or two after we occupied the town, I saw a little printed American flag stuck in the corner of a building away up on the top of a rocky hill that is piled up with houses, jumbled together at all angles and every conceivable form of architecture. Nothing could have been more unexpected than the sight of this flag, and my first impulse was to rush into the house and investigate the matter, but I was unable to do so for the moment, being on a mission which required haste—to put a stop to plundering in a quarter of the city not yet occupied by troops—and consequently did not get an occasion to visit the owner of the flag until the next day. I met at the door a very easily recognized type of an American woman, she asked me into a room which was so strangely furnished that I could not believe my own eyes. American painted furniture, American chromos in black walnut frames; "God Bless our Home" worked in worsted; "Scratch my Back" on perforated card board; little vases on brackets, even rocking chairs to sit in. It was like making a single stride from Roumelia to America to cross that threshold. I found I was in the home or Mrs. Mumfor, who has been in this country, with the exception of a recent visit to America, the past seven years, first in the service of the American Board of Foreign Missions, and later acting independently in the interest of education. She had arrived from her trip home shortly before General Gourko crossed the mountains in summer, and reached Philippopoli just in time to open a hospital for the wounded who came in from Eski Zara, and to give shelter and protection to numbers of Bulgarians. All through the horrible scenes of the succeeding months, when more than three hundred Bulgarians were hanged in the streets here, she remained at her work. The panic which started here when Suleiman Pasha announced his intention of burning the town on the approach of the Russians did not affect her any as I can find out, and I believe she is about the only householder in the town who did not pack up their furniture to escape. Certainly her devotion to the work she has undertaken solely in the cause of humanity deserves every praise.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at F. E. Davenport.

AUBURN COURIER SUPPLEMENT.

Letter from Hon. Hiram S. Tousley,

In Response to the Notification of His Nomination for Congress.

Facts and Figures for the Voters of the Thirteenth Congressional District.

ALBION, IND., July 30, 1878.

MESSRS. WM. C. WILLIAMS, LEW. J. BLAIR, and B. F. DAWSON, Committee.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter informing me of my nomination as a candidate for Representative in Congress for the Thirteenth District of Indiana.

It is proper to revert to a letter addressed to Judge Skillen and read before the National Greenback convention which assembled at Kendallville on the 17th of July. In that letter I signified my disinclination to assume the responsibilities of a candidacy for Congress, and expressed the earnest hope that some one, better qualified physically than myself, would be selected to make the race. Notwithstanding this fact, I observe from the published proceedings of the convention that several gentlemen whose names were presented for nomination, withdrew and united in the nomination of myself as the candidate.

The question now presented to me is, ought I to reconsider the determination expressed in my letter of declination, or accept the nomination?

The battle to be fought, through the medium of the ballot, is one of vital importance to all the people. It is to be decided by the votes of American freemen whether the greenback shall have a permanent existence in the monetary affairs of the nation, or whether it is to be wiped out in order to make place for a different currency—a currency at once expensive to the nation, and emanating from a bounty-fed and subsidized Money Power, viz: the National Banks. Judgment is to be passed upon the proposition to drive out of existence a currency that costs nothing but the expense of printing,—a currency constituting a part of the indebtedness of the nation, secured by all the property, energy, wealth and brains of its people; a currency beloved by patriots and venerated by heros, and consecrated and baptized in the blood of the children of a great Republic.

Amidst the hardships and vicissitudes of a suffering people, groaning under burdens from which they have vainly sought to escape by exertions of a herculean character, it behooves every friend of humanity to carefully, diligently and honestly strive to devise some plan for the amelioration of their sufferings. To calmly sit down and unconcernedly witness the disasters constantly befalling our fellowmen; to turn a deaf ear to the pitiful tales of men bereft of house and home; to cruelly close the eye to all the evidences of absolute want, would but indicate a hardness of heart that sho'd have no existence among a people poetically described as a "Union of hands and a Union of hearts." The man who wraps himself in the mantle of selfishness, indifferent to the needs and wants of his fellow-men, lacks every impulse of generosity and at once exhibits a total disregard of the common weal.

It then becomes our duty to inquire into the causes of all this distress and misery. No impartial investigator will assume, unless warranted by facts, that the men intrusted with the management of public affairs at heart desire the destruction of our industrial interests, or that they would commit a wanton or cruel act against the people, unless there be a motive of some character to control their action. To endeavor to fathom such motive, and gain a fair understanding of the purposes sought to be attained, should engage the thoughtful attention of all. For myself, candor compels me to say that my investigations have led me to the belief that a conspiracy exists today, and has existed for years, to establish upon the free soil of America a power for the control of both the finances and the politics of the country. It requires no stretch of the imagination to reach this conclusion. The evidences of the existence of such a conspiracy are numerous and indisputable. The eastern organs of the Money Power told us in plain terms during the pendency of the silver remonetization question that the national banks had at last perfected an organization which would effectually thwart the purposes of the peoples' representatives who were engaged in a noble contest for the relief of the industrial classes. Bribery was openly recommended.—They spoke significantly of the power of money judiciously placed "in the itching palms of impecunious western congressmen." The pernicious influence of this arrogant Money Power was manifested in every step taken by the government to adjust the finances of the country. When, in 1862, that bold defender of radical republicanism, the Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, secured the passage of the legal tender act—the act creating the greenback with which the government was enabled to successfully prosecute the war for the suppression of a wicked and unholy rebellion—the Money Power emerged from gilded offices and procured its mutilation by the Senate to such an extent as to make it scarcely recognizable to its authors and projectors. A few passages from Mr. Stevens' closing speech will suffice to substantiate all I have said on this point:

"I have a very few words to say. I approach the subject with more depression of spirits than I ever before approached any question. No personal feeling or motive influences me. I hope not, at least. I have a melancholy foreboding that we are about to consummate a cunningly devised scheme, which will carry great injury and great loss to all classes of people throughout this Union, except one. With my colleague, I believe that no act of legislation of this Government was ever hailed with as much delight throughout the whole length and breadth of this Union, by every class of people, without any exception, as the bill which we passed and sent to the Senate. Congratulations from all classes—merchants, traders, manufacturers, mechanics and laborers—poured in upon us from all classes. The Boards of Trade from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Chicago and Milwaukee, approved its provisions and urged its passage as it was.

"I have a dispatch from the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, and by him to me, urging the speedy passage of the bill as it passed the House. It is true, there was a doleful sound came up from the caverns of bullion brokers, and from the saloons of the associated banks. Their cashiers and agents were soon on the ground, and persuaded the Senate, with but little deliberation, to mangle and destroy what it had cost the House months to digest, consider and pass. They fell upon the bill in hot haste, and so disfigured and deformed it, that its very father would not know it. [Laughter.] Instead of being a beneficent and invigorating measure, it is now positively mischievous. It has all the bad qualities which its enemies charged on the original bill, and none of its benefits. It now creates money, and by its very terms declares it a depreciated currency. It makes two classes of money—one for the banks and another for the people. It discriminates between the rights of different classes of creditors, allowing the rich capitalist to demand gold, and compelling the ordinary lender of money on individual security to receive notes which the Government had purposely discredited."

Further evidence of the extraordinary power wielded by the Money Power is to be found in the congressional proceedings of 1868-69. The payment of the 5-20 bonds was then under discussion. The men who framed the legal tender act contended, in connection with others, that these bonds—some $1,500,000,000 in amount—were payable in lawful money—greenbacks. Mr. Thaddeus Stevens so contended, Senator Morton so argued, Ben Wade so declared, and Senator John Sherman, in a speech of great power, proved conclusively they were thus payable.

I quote from the congressional proceedings of July 17, 1868, the "funding bill" being then under consideration:

MR. STEVENS. I hold to the Chicago platform, and as I understand it, on that point, to the New York platform—that those bonds (5-20's) shall be paid just according to the original contract.

A MEMBER. The law, Mr. Stevens, according to the law

MR. STEVENS. What was that law? That the interest should be paid up to a certain time at 6 per cent. in coin. After the bonds fell due they would be payable in money, just as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Ross] understood it; just as he [Mr. Stevens] understood it; just as all understood it when the law was enacted; just as it was explained on the floor a dozen times by the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. If he knew that any party in the country would go for paying in coin that which was payable in money, thus enhancing the debt one-half; if he knew there was such a platform and such a determination on the part of his own party, he would, with Frank Blair and all, vote for the other parts. He would vote for no such swindle on the tax-payers of the country. He would vote for no such speculation in favor of the large bondholders and millionaires. He repeated, (though it was hard to say it), that even if Frank Blair stood on the platform of paying according to the contract, and if the republican candidate stood on the platform of paying bloated speculators twice the amount agreed to be paid to them, and of taxing his constituents to death, he would vote for Frank Blair, even if a worse man than Seymour was on the ticket. [Much excitement and sensation.]

Senator Morton, on the 6th of July, 1868, said in the U. S. Senate:

Mr. President, I believe that the law—and it is to the law we must look in regard to this question after all—is with the Senator from Ohio on this question. When it is asserted that the Government is bound to redeem the five-twenties in coin, I say it is not only without the law, but it is in express violation of at least four statutes.

The dauntless Ben Wade thus expressed himself in a letter to one of his constituents:

VICE PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
WASHINGTON, Dec. 12, 1867.

My Dear Sir: Yours of the 8th inst. is received, and I most cordially agree with every word and sentence of it. I am for the laboring portion of our people. The rich can take care of themselves. While I must scrupulously live up to all the contracts of the government and fight repudiation to the death, I will fight the bondholder as resolutely when he undertakes to get more than his pound of flesh. We never agreed to pay the 5-20 bonds in gold. No man can find it in the bond, and I will never agree to have one payment for the bondholder and another for the people. It would sink any party, and it ought to. To talk of specie payments or a return to specie under present circumstances is to talk like a fool. It would destroy the country as effectually as fire, and any contraction of the currency at this time is about as bad. But I have not time to give my ideas in full.

Yours truly,
BENJ. F. WADE.

CAPT. A. DENNY, Eaton, O.

I next cite John Sherman, who, after his speech in the U. S. Senate, wrote as follows:

"United States Senate Chamber, March 20, 1868.—DEAR SIR: I was pleased to receive your letter. My personal interests are the same as yours, but, like you, I do not intend to be influenced by them. My construction of the law is the result of careful examination, and I feel quite sure an impartial court would confirm it if the case could be tried before a court. I send you my views as fully stated in a speech. Your idea is that we propose to repudiate or violate a promise when we offer to redeem the 'principal' in legal-tenders.

"I think the bond-holder violates his promise when he refuses to take the same kind of money he paid for the bond. If the case is to be tested by the law, I am right; if it is to be tested by Jay Cooke's advertisements, I am wrong. I hate repudiation or anything like it, but we ought not to be deterred from doing what is right by fear of undeserved epithets. If, under the law as it stands, the holder of five-twenties can only be paid in gold, then we are repudiators if we propose to pay otherwise. If, on the other hand, the bondholder can legally demand only the kind of money he paid, THEN HE IS A REPUDIATOR AND AN EXTORTIONER to demand more money than he gave. Truly yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

"HON. A. MANN, JR., Brooklyn Heights."

Notwithstanding these emphatic and earnest declarations of men high in the councils of the nation and equally high in the republican party, the Money Power, in 1869, succeeded in inflicting another blow upon the greenback. This was done by the passage of the so-called "public credit act," which in effect declared that while the greenback was good enough to pay the soldier, and the men who furnished food and clothing, and ammunition of war for our great armies during the dark days of the rebellion, it was not good enough to pay the bondholders, who bought the bonds with greenbacks when these were largely depreciated, in consequence of the action which Thad. Stevens denounced so bitterly in his masterly and eloquent closing speech of the legal-tender debate. No, the people's money, the greenback called into existence by the approval of Abraham Lincoln, had to be discarded, that the bondholder might exact from a patriotic but terribly burdened people gold—yes, gold, precious because of its scarcity, hoarded and adored by monarchs and Shylocks, but ever cowardly and treacherous when most needed in the hour of peril.

The next victory won by the Money Power over the people was in 1873, when by secret manipulation the "dollar of the fathers," the silver dollar of 1792, was demonetized. This action was doubtless taken to complete the job of 1869, when currency bonds were made payable in coin. Coin, as all understand, means gold and silver, and as silver is not good enough for those who hate greenbacks, the law must be so manipulated as to make all bonds payable in gold—the dearest money in the world.

In 1875 the resumption act was passed. This was pre-eminently a caucus measure. It was the product of the ingenious mind of John Sherman, who shortly after his famous letter of 1868 found it more profitable to serve the bondholders than the people. This resumption act simply meant the gradual extinction of the greenback. It provides for the destruction of greenbacks until but $300,000,000 are left in circulation. Then (on the first day of January, 1879,) resumption is to begin. Where? In the hot-bed of stock jobbers and gold gamblers—New York City. At the very doors of Wall street greenbacks are to be made exchangeable for gold which John Sherman obtained by issuing long running bonds on which the people must pay interest for a period of twenty years. Yes, millions of bonds issued to buy gold in order to rid the country of this hated greenback; millions added to the national debt, that the greenback might be wiped out of existence and the national bank note made monarch of our monetary system.

But, thanks to the vigilance of a free press and a thinking people; thanks to the currency agitators—the men whom Ben Harrison denominates "idiots,"—Congress put a veto upon this cunningly devised scheme of John Sherman. Against the earnest protest of the bondholding interests Congress decreed at its late session that not another greenback shall be retired, canceled or destroyed; that $346,000,000 must be kept in circulation; that as fast as greenbacks reach the Treasury they must again be paid out. The passage of this act was procured as some sort of a compromise, to avoid the absolute repeal of the resumption act.

But let us see how faithfully John Sherman obeys this law—how scrupulously he regards his solemn oath.—The law under consideration declares that "it shall not be lawful for the "Secretary of the Treasury or other "officer under him, to cancel or retire "any more of the United States legal "tender notes. And when any of said "notes may be redeemed, or be received into the Treasury under any "law from any source whatever and "shall belong to the United States, "they shall not be retired canceled or "destroyed, but they shall be reissued "and paid out again and kept in circulation." This command is surely made as strong as language can make it. It is unmistakable and imperative, leaving no discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury. The act further declares that all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this law are "hereby repealed." This virtually annuls that part of the resumption act which provides for the retirement of greenbacks. Yet John Sherman proposes to go on in his mad course, entirely disregarding the law which he is sworn to obey and execute. In his letter to Congressman Phillips, dated June 17, he said he "would seek to keep in circulation all the United States notes "(greenbacks) that could be maintained at par with coin." More recently he announced that he could not maintain resumption if he must reissue all the greenbacks, and that he would exercise discretionary power in keeping out or keeping in greenbacks to the extent of three hundred millions.—Congress says $346,000,000 greenbacks must and shall be kept in circulation; but John Sherman, proclaiming himself above the law, says he will keep in circulation only so many notes "as can be maintained at par with coin." The Treasury statement dated July 19, 1878, shows that he is now, in violation of law, hoarding $62,000,000 of greenbacks—keeping them locked up, withholding them from circulation, preventing their use in the business transactions of the country. Should such a faithless officer not be impeached?

Let us now inquire into the motive that governs these men in their opposition to the greenbacks and their love for the national banking system. As before stated, there must be a motive for all this. In my search for this motive, I propose to confine myself closely to the record. Some months ago an "Honest Money League" was organized in the city of Milwaukee, with a branch at Chicago, the avowed purpose of which is to counteract the greenback movement that seems to have alarmed the projectors of said organization, composed chiefly of national bank officers, bondholders and money lenders. On the 3d of June last this "League" invited John Sherman to honor its members with his presence and deliver a speech. Mr. Sherman did not have the time to come in person, but he sent them a letter dated "Treasury Department, Washington, June 6." In this letter he says:

"It is manifest that my public duties will not permit me to leave this city at that time, or I should be glad to join with you in the efforts you are making to secure to the people of the United States honest money, BY WHICH I MEAN UNITED STATES NATIONAL BANK NOTES convertible at the will of the holder into gold and silver coin."

Here, gentlemen, is a bold, public declaration by the Secretary of the Treasury—the man holding the most responsible trust under the Administration—that no other kind of paper money except National Bank notes is "honest money." Greenbacks do not come within his interpretation of what constitutes honest money. By implication the greenback called into existence by the signature of the martyr President, Abraham Lincoln, is proclaimed to be dishonest money, scabs, shinplaster, rag stuff, &c. How well this definition corresponds with a vehement speech delivered in the lower House of Congress on the 13th of November, 1877, by Hon. S. B. Chittenden, republican member of Congress from the Third District of New York (the city of Brooklyn), during the discussion of the bill for the repeal of the resumption act, in the course of which he said:

"The pending bill was hurtful, discreditable, and without excuse. The country was now shaken by a wild blast of grand currency illusion which had swept over the plains of the South and prairies of the West, carrying the House by storm and threatening to engulf the national integrity. The greenback was the most powerful enemy the country had ever encountered—slavery alone excepted. It was a fraud, it was a sham; it familiarized the individual and public conscience with shams. It had muddled all the springs of honest thrift and solid enterprise; had confused and misled the public judgment; had sapped the courage and wisdom of the Federal Treasury, and had given immense comfort to demagogues."

Read and re-read this vehement slander, this vile denunciation of the money of the people. Ponder over it, and then compare the utterance of Mr. Chittenden with the covert attack of John Sherman. These men substantially agree, the only difference being that Chittenden proclaims outright, boldly and above board, that the greenback is a fraud and a sham, while the crafty Sherman, in more cautious language, proclaims the same atrocious sentiment.

Chittenden, in November, pronounced the greenback sentiment that has taken such deep root all over the Union, a "currency illusion," while in the recent republican State convention of Indiana, Gen. Benjamin Harrison cast about for an asylum wherein to lock up the men who doubt the wisdom of the Sherman-Chittenden finance policy. One would naturally suppose that the insulting speech of Mr. Chittenden would have aroused the indignation of every representative in Congress who entertained the slightest regard for the people's currency. The people of the Thirteenth Indiana District had the right to expect that their "distinguished representative" would resent the insult, the indignity, heaped upon them by the representative of the Brooklyn bondholders and Shylocks. I say the insulted people of this District had a right to expect that their representative would utter at least a few words in denunciation of the Chittenden calumny,—for the congressional record informs us that some eight months prior "our distinguished representative" made haste to "lock horns" (in more than a wordy sense) with another New Yorker, Mr. Abram Hewitt. Or is it to be inferred that "our distinguished representative's" indignation cannot be aroused by the intemperate denunciation of the greenback?—that it requires an electoral count to warm him up to such a pitch as to make him both noted and feared among his colleagues? Strange that a "distinguished representative" who exhibited a marvelous degree of bravery and valor in repressing Mr. Hewitt, should permit an opportunity to escape of "squelching" the irate Chittenden. Passing strange, indeed, that "our distinguished representative" had neither word nor nerve to confront the calumniator of the greenback, and that it devolved upon a Georgian (Hon. Wm. H. Felton—perhaps an ex-rebel) to shake his fist at Chittenden and with honest indignation hurl this anathema at him and his fellow-Shylocks:

"And yet you undertake to comfort the country by telling it that all these things will right themselves. Yes, I know that these things will right themselves when they have touched the bottomless pit of despair and poverty. Look yonder at that storm-driven ocean. Hurricanes and darkness are upon the deep; signal-guns are firing every minute; ships are going down by the hundred; thousands of precious lives are being engulfed, and in the midst of all the ruins there (pointing at Chittenden) stands the wrecker waiting for the spoils, and assuring those in peril of destruction that all these things will right themselves."

Let us pause a moment and imagine that Thad. Stevens and Abraham Lincoln had heard the words spoken in this debate. Contemplate the picture: Chittenden, frothing from excitement and venom, denouncing the greenback as a fraud and a sham, and the "Confederate Brigadiers," on the other hand, appearing in the attitude of defenders of the currency that throttled the rebellion! Or, imagine that some humble Republican from this District, strong in the faith of republicanism as taught by Lincoln and Stevens, had quietly listened to this debate, with no knowledge of the antecedents of the speakers; how great his astonishment had he then and there learned that the republican leaders,—Garfield, Foster, Hale, Frye, etc.,—had not a word of rebuke for the defamer of the Lincoln greenback, and that battle-scarred Confederate Brigadiers were foremost in defending the greenback and a suffering people!

But I must revert to the "honest money" which the Sherman and Chittenden financiers propose to substitute in lieu of the "fraudulent and shamlike" greenback. Let us see what kind of money they have in store for the people. The "honest money" these able financiers advocate is that issued by the national banks, the peculiarities and excellencies of which are accurately and tersely set forth in a speech delivered by Gen. Benj. F. Butler in the House of Representatives, November 27 and 28, 1867:

HOW A NATIONAL BANK GOT INTO EXISTENCE.

Let me state the way a National bank got itself into existence in New England during the war, when gold was at 200, and five-twenties were at par, in currency, or nearly that. A company of men got together $300,000 in National bank bills, and went to the Register of the Treasury, with gold at 200, and bought United States five-twenty bonds at par. They stepped into the office of the Comptroller of the Currency and asked to be established as a National bank, and received from him $270,000 in currency, without interest, upon pledging these bonds of the United States they had just bought with their $300,000 of the same kind of money. Now, let us balance the books, and how does the account stand? Why, the United States Government receives $30,000 in National bank bills more from the banks than it gave them in bills; in other words, it borrowed of the bank $30,000 in currency, for which, in fact, it paid $18,000 a year in gold interest, equal to $36,000 in currency, for the use of this $30,000. Let me repeat. The difference between what the United States received and paid out was only [illegible], and for the use of that the Government pays on the bonds deposited by the company, bought with the same kind of money, [illegible] a year interest in gold, equal to [illegible] in currency.

But the thing did not stop there. The gentlemen were shrewd financiers; their bank was a good one; they went to the Secretary of the Treasury and said, "Let our bank be made a public depository." Very well; it was a good bank; the managers were good men; there was no objection to the bank. It was made a public depository, and thereupon the commissaries, the quartermasters, the medical director and purveyor, and the paymasters, were all directed to deposit their public funds in this bank. Very soon the bank found that they had a line of steady deposits belonging to the Government of about a million dollars, and that the $370,000 they had received from the Comptroller of the Currency would substantially carry on their daily business, and as the Government gives three days on all its drafts, if the bank was pressed it was easy enough to go on the street if they had good security. They took the million of Government money so deposited with them and loaned it to the Government for the Government's own bonds, and received therefor $60,000 more interest in gold for the loan to the Government of its own money, which in currency was equal to $120,000. So that when we come finally to balance the books the Government is paying $150,000 a year for the loan of $30,000. And this is the system which is to be fastened forever on the country as a means of furnishing a circulating medium!

ANOTHER WAY OF RUNNING A NATIONAL BANK.

Let me state another case, which might be called an actual case, and perhaps I could call the name of the man. A very shrewd man takes his $100,000, and goes to the Treasury and obtains bonds; he then gets a banking charter, and receives his bills, amounting to $90,000; then he buys with those same bills $90,000 worth of bonds, and comes home and sits in his office, and that is his bank, and his money is all in circulation. Says he: Why should I trouble myself to lend my money to the farmers around me on sixty-day notes, when I can lend it at from ten to twelve per cent. on long twenty-year Government bonds, and Mr. Blaine says I am to be paid in gold for them; that is as good banking as I want to do; the bills never come home; they are going all over the West and South, and I am getting $22,800 interest on my original $100,000. What do I want more? I am comfortable and happy; I think this "banking system is the wisest one the world ever saw, and that it ought to be adopted all the world over."

IMMENSE PROFITS OF THE NATIONAL BANKS—FROM WHOM DO THEY COME?

But let us take the banks' own exhibit of themselves. I hold in my hand the abstract of reports of National banking associations for the 1st of October last. Let us see their condition. They have $419,000,000 of capital stock paid in; they have been in operation on an average of less than four years; they have divided from twelve to twenty per cent., about twelve in New England, and from fifteen to twenty per cent. where money is scarcer and the rate of interest rules higher. In addition to these dividends, take their own statement: "Surplus fund, $66,000,000; undivided profits, $33,000,000;" showing that they have got, after all these dividends, near twenty-five per cent. surplus of that capital stock laid away. What other business, taxed or un-taxed, if any untaxed business can be found in this country, will allow a yearly dividend of from fifteen to twenty-five per cent., and a surplus accumulation in four years of twenty-five per cent. on the capital? And from whom and from where do these profits come? They come ultimately from where all taxation, all profits, all productions must come—the labor of the country, and nowhere else; and we are asked here to perpetuate a system which takes these immense profits from the labor of the country and puts them into the hands of capitalists, without a pretense of adequate benefit received by the people.

Why, sir, it is an axiom in finance, if there are any axioms in finance, that any business which is safe should have small profits, and business that is hazardous should have large profits; but here the state of things is reversed; the banking business, which, if well conducted, is the safest business on earth, and which heretofore has always been content with small profits, is now the most profitable of all businesses, and has the largest returns without any risks.

This system, gentlemen, is the financial panacea that Mr. Sherman prescribes for a suffering people. What would have been thought of a man during the war who, in defining what constituted honest money, would have excluded the greenback? Would Seward not have tinkled his little bell and consigned him to Fort Lafayette?—What—pay our gallant soldiers with "dishonest money;" pay pensions to the widows in "dishonest money;" buy food and clothing for the army and navy with "dishonest money?" Is it possible that the great financier, John Sherman, for a long time the head of the Senate finance committee, could for years look on and see the obligations of the government discharged with what he now terms "dishonest money?" What has wrought this amazing change—this startling discovery?

The answer is this: There is now in existence in this country an organization known as "The National Bank Association," composed of over 2,000 corporations and more than 1,000 private bankers. These corporations have a fixed capital of five hundred million dollars and control in all two thousand millions of concentrated capital, centralized under one supreme central head, and constituting the greatest monopoly known to the civilized world. The object of this association is (1) the perpetuation of the national banking system; (2) the control of the finances of the nation; (3) to reduce labor to the lowest measure of compensation, and (4) to keep in operation its machinery "so that in any emergency "the financial corporations of the East "can act together at a single day's no-"tice, and with such power that no act "of Congress can overcome or resist "their decision." (Vide N. Y. Tribune report of Bankers' Association proceedings during pendency of silver bill.)

This, gentlemen, is the avowed object of this monster combination—a league of capitalists who have sucked from the life-blood of the nation over fifteen hundred millions of dollars as profits on their investments, and are now annually drawing over one hundred and eleven millions of dollars in interest.

It is time the people were aroused to a realization of the danger that threatens them from this gigantic monopoly. Unless the entire business of the country is to be virtually placed under the control of this gigantic combination; unless the people are content to relinquish the control of federal and State legislation to an encroaching Money Power; unless they are longing for the establishment of a monied aristocracy, a determined and earnest effort must be made at once, made now, to defeat this cruel conspiracy against the laboring classes of the land.

And let me say to you, gentlemen, the contest will be no trivial affair. The power of money is great. The Banking Association above referred to is officered and managed by men thoroughly skilled in the use of the appliances for the control of elections.—They have their agents in every quarter of the country. Their corruption fund is simply immense. They have subsidized the great public journals to do their bidding, to deceive and mislead the people by plausible statements and to prejudice them by vile denunciation. The so called "Honest Money League" of Milwaukee is but a branch establishment of the big institution in New York. Various are the methods adopted to accomplish their designs. Men in need of banking accommodations are made to understand that vigorous opposition to the national banking system is a barrier to further favors. Caucuses and conventions are manipulated by the tools of these institutions. Bankers and bondholders are ever on the alert when party platforms are to be constructed or candidates for Congress and the Legislature to be nominated. They do not always appear in person; that would be an act of indiscretion. But they scarcely ever find any difficulty in thrusting forward some "trusty" individual who knows all about the finances and political economy, but whose powers of manipulation far exceed his fiscal learning. Since staid national bankers are no longer deemed available for seats in Congress and Legislatures, it some times happens that a leading stockholder has a son or son-in-law, gifted in oratory and eloquence, who in some way is reluctantly persuaded into an acceptance of a congressional nomination, at a great sacrifice pecuniarily, and wholly with a view to vindicating the "great and glorious principles" of this or that party—but never, no never, for the purpose of accomplishing a little legislation in the peculiar interest of a kind father or father-in-law, or in the interest of the oppressed capitalist and the starving banker!

Audacious as it may appear, there are people to-day who express grave doubts as to the expediency of sending this class of persons to Congress. The national banking system is likely to meet with opposition at future sessions, and for some reason or other farmers, laborers and mechanics, who work incessantly, from "early morn 'til dewy eve," and yet find it no easy task to make both ends meet, seem to have reached the conclusion that the greenback is a good enough currency for all, and that there is neither sense nor justice in paying a bounty of seventeen millions each year to the national bankers for putting in circulation their notes, furnished by the government and secured by gold interest-bearing bonds. In other words, the working people of this country no longer see any propriety in the government paying the national banker from fifty to sixty cents per year for issuing a ten-dollar bill, which, before it goes into circulation, must be borrowed of the banker at a rate of interest varying all the way from 7 to 15 per cent., payable in advance—the rate depending upon the cheek and greed of the lender.

Of the 2,006 national banks in existence, 99 are located in Indiana. The bonds held by these banks and on which they draw from 5 to 6 per cent. interest in gold, aggregate $13,571,700. The annual interest paid thereon is $746,443.50, twice as much as it costs the State every year to maintain your public institutions—the hospital for the insane, asylum for the deaf and dumb, institution for the blind, soldier's home, house of refuge, State prisons, State University, &c. Yet no one will be foolhardy enough to declare that these banks are in any sense benevolent institutions. Banks are necessary for the transaction of business, but do not private banks answer every purpose? Is a draft issued by Judge Clapp, or Straus Brothers, or Sol. Mier, or Andrew Ellison, or Best & McClellan, or Hascall & Irwin, not fully as good as one issued by any of the national banks in this district? Are deposits not equally safe in the vaults of these private banks? Why then tax the people for the issue of bills by national banks that might as well be issued by the government direct? Uncle Sam does not subsidize manufacturing establishments, offers no bounty for extensive farming operations, pays now no bonus to railroads or stage coaches for carrying passengers or freight. Why then make an exception in the interest of these pampered national bankers?

The "honest money" policy advocated by Sherman simply means an increase of these bounti-fed national banking institutions. For every one hundred thousand non-interest bearing greenbacks national bank notes costing the people from $4,500 to $6,000 each year are to be substituted.—The bankers are to be made the exclusive judges of how much money is to circulate; they alone are to determine the volume of currency; make it scarce or plentiful. Are you prepared to intrust them with this dangerous power? Are you in favor of a system that compels the people to pay interest on bank notes, whether in circulation or hoarded by misers, bankers, or money sharks—whether sunk in mid-ocean or buried in the bottoms of your lakes and rivers? Let the answer come from the polls in October.

Lest I be accused of partiality in my statement of the "relief" offered a debt-burdened nation by the advocates of the so-called "honest money" system, I herewith append a "remedy" proposed in the New York Times, the foremost republican organ of the country. It is well known that eastern capitalists have about three hundred million dollars invested in mortgages on western farms. These mortgages bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually. From three to five per cent. was deducted from the principal to pay the agent's commission. To what extent the farms of the West are thus mortgaged may be inferred from the following statement published in the Indianapolis Journal, the State organ of the republican party of Indiana:

> URBANA, ILLS., February 2.—Examinations just made here of the debts on the real estate of Champaign County show a discouraging condition of property-owners. The real estate is mortgaged to eastern creditors to the amount of about $5,000,000, while its entire assessed valuation is less than double that amount, being $11,252,000. Half the value of all the land is owned in the East and pays to the East an interest of about $600,000 annually, besides a tax of about $416,000; total over $1,000,000. This is over $1.50 for every acre, and $22.50 for every man, woman, and child in the county. Add this to the immense debt unsecured by land and consider that crops have been poor four years in succession, and it can readily be seen why our farmers are almost bankrupt and scores of farms in every county are being sold under trust-deeds.

Champaign county is one of the richest agricultural counties in Central Illinois, and while it is to be hoped that the same deplorable state of affairs does not exist throughout, there is every evidence to show that the mortgages upon the farms of Indiana amount to millions of dollars. It is a well-known fact that a farm mortgaged to the extent of a few thousand dollars cannot, with the prevailing low prices of produce, be expected to yield more than the living expenses of the farmer and his family, taxes, and interest upon his debt. Time rolls on rapidly, mortgages become due, and foreclosure is inevitable. Need it be remarked that if the currency had not been remorsely contracted, that if more than half the circulating medium of 1865 had not been destroyed at the instigation of the Money Power, that if labor had employment and could create a demand for the farmer's product,—prices would be better, and real estate would not be enormously depreciated? Every man of ordinary intelligence must understand this fact.

But what is the remedy proposed in the columns of the N. Y. Times, above referred to? I quote from the Times dated April 25, 1877:

> "There seems to be but one remedy, and that is a slow one, and not immediately effective. To reach it both farmers and capitalists need to be educated to it, but it seems to be inevitable. IT IS A CHANGE OF OWNERSHIP OF THE SOIL, and the creation of a class of LANDOWNERS on the one hand, and of TENANT FARMERS on the other. Something similar, in both cases, to what has long existed, and now exists, in the older countries of Europe, and similar, also, to a system that is common in our own State of California. Those farmers who are land poor must sell, and become tenants in place of owners of the soil. The hoarded idle capital must be invested in these lands and turned over to the poor farmers, who will at once be set upon their feet; not to go and loaf about towns and villages spending their money while it may last, but to buy with this money stock, fertilizers, implements, machines, and go to work to cultivate the soil profitably. Instead of their money being sunk and dead in unproductive acres, it will be invested in cows, sheep, swine, of improved breeds; in guano and fertilizers, by which the crops will be doubled or trebled. It will thus become active and productive, and capable of doubling itself within the year. The farmers will be relieved from the burden of a bad investment on which he now makes no interest, and his money will be placed where it will do the most good. He will at once be lifted from poverty to financial ease and in place of an unsaleable farm, he will have to show for his money some property that will realize all that it is worth at a public sale at 24 hours' notice. VERY MUCH MORE THAN THIS IS IMPLIED IN THIS CHANGE that is so obvious to the practical man that it need not be particularized."

Here you have it, gentlemen. First the Money Power reduces the currency to such an extent as to render the payment of debts impossible, then comes the proposition to establish in free America the tenant system that has contributed so largely toward pauperizing labor in Great Britain. Ponder over it, ye farmers who have labored long and steadfastly for the ownership of homesteads that would afford you and your children a source of income. You may have built a barn or a comfortable dwelling, and it may have been necessary to incur an indebtedness which, under ordinary circumstances, you could have paid without serious difficulty, but which, under the remorseless contraction policy, you find yourself unable to meet. I know very well what answer the advocates of the Sherman policy will make to this observation. It will be about this: "He had no business to go in debt. He might have waited 5 or 10 years before building a comfortable dwelling wherein to raise his children, or a barn wherein to store his grain and shelter his horses and cattle." But, while admitting that the pay-as-you-go policy is the safest and best, yet I want to know whether we have come to this that enterprise is to be regarded a crime; whether this man, in building partly on borrowed capital, did not give employment to carpenters, masons, brick-layers, plasterers, etc., and thus contribute his mite toward the thrift and prosperity of the mechanic and laborer? Did not the hardware dealer and lumberman profit by the builder's expenditures, and did not the money-lender find a customer for his surplus capital? Were not all our railroads, canals, and all other great enterprises constructed on credit? Would this country be what it is if all corporations had waited until enough money could have been raised to "pay-as-you-go?" Did not the government itself preserve the Union on credit? Carry your theory strictly into practical effect, and the money lender's occupation will soon be gone; real estate will wait long for purchasers. The young, energetic plowman, possessed of a few hundred or perhaps a few thousand dollars, will wait many a year before investing his hard earnings in land.

But let us get a glimpse of the beauties of the British tenant system which it is proposed to transplant to the United States. In his great speech on the repeal of the resumption act Mr. Voorhees presented some facts and figures well worthy of every freeman's thoughtful consideration. I quote the following:

> Speaking of the land owners in England, Ireland, Scotland and other countries, he said the population of England is estimated at a fraction over 18,000,000. She contains 38,170,638 acres of land that are owned by her citizens. In the last report of the Financial Reform association of England the amazing fact appears that 16,[illegible] acres of these lands, being largely more than one-half the entire landed property of the country are owned by the insignificant number of 4,7[illegible] individuals. The rental income arising from these vast possessions amount to $172,219,613 per annum, thus showing an average ownership on the part of less than 5,000 persons of over 330,000 acres and an annual average income to each of them of about $35,000. The population of Wales is placed at 1,217,135 souls. The land held by private ownership amount to 2,632,[illegible] acres; and of these 2,363,033 acres are owned by 672 individuals, with an annual rental income, arising from the labor of a peasantry in a state of semi-starvation, amounting to $12,287,600. Scotland has a population of 3,350,567 inhabitants. Her lands are estimated at 18,946,694 acres. How incredible it appears to the American mind that 1,758 individuals own 17,584,628 of ther acres, nearly all the land of the entire country. And yet such is the fact. The lords and barons of these broad domains draw from porridge-fed tenantry who cultivate them the sum of $36,364,800 per annum.—The population of Ireland is computed to be 5,400,000. Her lands measure 20,159,678 acres, and 15,604,793 are owned by 3,722 individuals, who each year collect a rental income of $27,735,000 from the toiling men and women who inhabit that oppressed and impoverished island. The murder of a landlord a few days ago in Ireland attracted the attention of the civilized world. I have had the curiosity to examine the extent of his possessions, and consequently the extent of his power to oppress the landless poor. The Earl of Leitrim at the time of his death owned in county Donegal, 56,184 acres; in county Leitrim, 21,179 acres; in county Galway, 18,308 acres; and in county Kildare, 52; making a landed estate of 95,619 acres. A general summary of the landholders of the united kingdom of England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland therefore shows that, while the whole extent of land measured 72,119,861 acres and the entire population is 28,237,878, yet the meager number of 10,888 individuals own 51,365,118 acres, more than two-thirds of the lands of the entire kingdom.

Those familiar with the extensive landownership in California can tell how advantageous that system is to the "Golden State." The Genessee valley in New York, where immense tracts are owned by great capitalists, furnishes some index to the beauties of the tenant system. The decay of school-houses and churches tells the sad story of a once flourishing farming community. Tell me not that the tenant system is to be welcomed to the free soil of great America. Give us a multitude of small landowners, and you will always find true friends of liberty, religion and virtue.

With ample proof to show that the contraction of the currency has bro't untold misery upon the country, has made bankrupts of thousands upon thousands of men of enterprise and energy, has filled the land with beggars and paupers, is it not the duty of every good citizen to give earnest thought to the grave subject now before the country? Shall the people obtain relief, or is this misery and distress to continue indefinitely, until the ends of the "Money Leagues" are fully accomplished? Shall the country be brought upon the verge of bankruptcy in order to make John Sherman and his co-conspirators complete masters not only of all labor, all industry, all commerce, all wealth, but also of all political power? Encroachment of capital has ever wrought the destruction of republics And when we almost daily hear bondholders speak in glowing terms of the beauties of the English form of government, for the overthrow of which, upon American soil, our forefathers shed their precious blood, is it not time to sound the alarm? When such sentiments are openly proclaimed, it behooves the liberty-loving masses to assert their rights and their power. The demand of the hour is: wholesome laws for all; no class legislation; no distinction on account of wealth. The poor boy, endowed with mental vigor and power, and struggling manfully for an honorable position among his fellows, shall stand an equal chance with the sons of national bank presidents who have fattened on the money wrung from a tax-burdened people. Moral worth and personal merit shall not be out-weighed by dollars and cents.

What the people now want, what they need in the halls of Congress, are bold, earnest and able men—men whose hearts are enlisted in the cause of the people, men who will battle at all times and under all circumstances for the liberties of the people. Such men must be chosen now, while the power is yet in the people's hands.—The issue is made up and cannot be evaded. It is the industrial classes on one side and the national bankers on the other. The demand for silence, coming from republican conventions, at the dictation of the Money Power, comes too late. Too much mischief has been done in their interest to admit of silence now. Agitation, agitation is demanded in the interest of labor. The Money Power has had control of legislation for fifteen years; much of its work must be undone, if prosperity is again to bless this country. Silence now means humble submission to wrong, infatuation, poverty, ruin. Silence was demanded by the pro-slaveryites in 1852, when the slave oligarchy sought to extend its power. Pro-slavery Whigs and pro-slavery Democrats protested against "agitation," but free speech could not be suppressed; the spirit of freedom could not be subdued. The more silence was demanded, the more emphatic and determined came up the battle-cry of freedom. So it is to-day. Hide-bound partisans who persistently close their eyes and ears to the depressed condition of industry and to the wail of distress that comes from every quarter of this land of plenty, must be taught to understand that agitation will continue and increase until relief is afforded through wholesome legislation. Mother Earth has done all that could be asked, but legislation has been wholly in an opposite direction. Hence the obvious necessity of agitation—especially since John Sherman and the Money Leagues never tire of agitating for the extinction of the greenback.

To counteract and thwart the designs of the Money Power, men who have the prosperity of the country and the happiness of the people at heart, must look each other squarely in the eye. No matter what their past party affiliations may have been, they must come together and labor for the common good—for their interests, for their children's interests, and for the interests of the whole nation. A man has a perfect right to vote himself a pauper if he so chooses, but he has no moral right to vote his children into pauperism; he has no right to so abuse his rights of citizenship as to turn this nation over into the hands of the few, that they may fatten on the sweat of the toiling millions.

Profoundly impressed with the great importance of the pending contest, I have given the matter of acceptance or non-acceptance of the nomination, so kindly tendered me, the most careful and thorough consideration. The determination thus reached is therefore neither hasty nor inconsiderate. The fact that I was elected to the Judgeship of this Judicial Circuit two years ago for a period of six years, and that my success then was largely due to the generous action of kind friends, irrespective of party, who desired that I should occupy a seat on the bench, admonishes me of a solemn obligation to serve them in the position I sought at their hands. To relinquish that position eighteen months after entering upon a discharge of its duties, would in my judgment be inconsistent and in conflict with my efforts two years ago. Besides, the impaired condition of my health peremptorily forbids an engagement in a contest necessarily more or less exciting, and requiring exertions that I could not possibly endure. The injunction of my physician is imperative; the appeals of my family I cannot disregard. Even the labor attending the preparation of this document has taxed my system to its utmost capacity. However deeply I may feel interested in the out-come of the pending contest, and whatever disappointment my decision may occasion, I feel assured none of my friends would ask me to jeopardize life itself. I therefore beg leave to decline the nomination tendered me by the 17th of July convention. While this action on my part may put the organization you represent as a committee to the inconvenience of holding another convention, I feel that the loss of time may be more than compensated by the selection of some one younger in years, stronger in physical endurance, and more efficient on the stump, to carry aloft the banner of the people, and lead them to a great and glorious victory.

With assurances of profound gratitude for the honor so unexpectedly conferred upon me, I remain,

Truly yours,

HIRAM S. TOUSLEY.

THE DECLINATION of Judge Tousley will doubtless be a great disappointment to thousands in this District who desired to cast their votes for his election to Congress. Yet, when made familiar with the reasons that have prompted the Judge to decline, no real personal friend will feel like finding fault. It is true, the people have claims upon men in public life, but not to the extent of sending them to a premature grave.—Ligonier Banner.

The Lafayette Courier says that Mrs. Emma Molloy, who has just completed a very successful six months' temperance campaign in Massachusetts, was presented with a beautiful testimonial, signed by Wendell Phillips and nearly all of the leading temperance advocates in the State. Mrs. Molloy expects to sail for England in September, a public reception having already been tendered her in Liverpool.

—Judge Tousley has been quite ill since last Friday. If able to leave his room by the latter part of the week, he will seek rest and recuperation along the lakes of Michigan.—Ligonier Banner, Aug. 1.

HIS TALK WITH AN ENQUIRER MAN ON HIS WAR RECORD, AND SITS DOWN OF THE WORN-OUT LIES OF THE REPUBLICAN PRESS.

His Success Due to the Aid of Ex-Soldiers.

Special Correspondence of the Enquirer,

LAPORTE, IND., July 29, 1878.

I found Hon. D. W. Voorhees quartered at the Teagarden House, in this city, and, before he was aware of my intent, had drawn upon him a copy of a South Bend paper containing copious extracts from the Indianapolis Journal, which extracts were not as full of praise as they might have been. I at once prepared myself for business by saying:

"Mr Voorhees, it seems that the leaders of the Republican party, aided by the Indianapolis Journal, have decided to make this a personal canvass against yourself. Does not this strike you as a little peculiar and out of the usual way?"

The Senator leaned back in his chair, glanced out of the window for a moment, and then replied:

"Yes; I see no good reason why I should thus be singled out from among the large number of democrats in the State who are as justly entitled to be candidates for Senator as I am. I am not a candidate to the exclusion of the aspirations of others. I have simply tried to do my duty during the short time I have occupied that position, and if the people of Indiana shall approve my course it will be gratifying, but if they should prefer some one else it will not be a matter of complaint on my part."

"In your opinion, what will be the effect of these personal assaults upon you in this canvass, and the likelihood of your being returned to the Senate?"

"I can only say, in regard to that, that my success has always been greatest when my enemies have resorted to their present mode of attack. I have been six times a candidate for Congress in my old District, and five times elected. The only time I was defeated was in the Greeley campaign, when there was scarcely a word of abuse uttered against me in the entire canvass. During my successfull canvasses all the slanders and calumnies now being repeated in the Indianapolis Journal, and many more, were poured upon me in continuous torrents. The fact is, the matters now being published are a rehash of old cast off, refuted falsehoods which I have met and trampled to the earth a thousand times."

"But, Mr. Senator, here is a specific charge that you called Union soldiers Lincoln dogs?"

"That is a stupid lie—in fact, a brutal falsehood, and has been stamped as such by the written statement of Hon. Henry K. Wilson, late Senator from Sullivan county; by Major Griffith, one of the most reliable citizens of the same county; by Mr. Ed Price, Clerk of the Circuit Court, and the Rev. Joseph K. Wolf and scores of others, embracing people of the highest respectability and unquestioned veracity, who heard the speech in which it is said I used the language In addition, however, Hon. J. E. McDonald sat by me on the stand at that time, and has repeatedly stated that no more cruel or abominable falsehood was ever uttered than this charge contains. Besides all this evidence every man of sense must know it to be untrue from certain events which followed the close of the war. I was not a candidate for re-election in 1866. In the mean time the Legislative gerrymander of the State took place, which took Putnam County out of my district and put Monroe and Lawrence in it, making it, according to previous returns, a Republican District by about twelve or fifteen hundred majority. In 1868 I was renominated while absent and against my earnest wishes, but I accepted and made the race. That District had sent over twenty thousand gallant soldiers to the war."

"Let me interrupt you, Senator. What was the entire vote polled at the last election for Congressman in that District?"

"I think about 32,000. Well, my opponent was Major Carter, a good soldier and an officer from one of the regiments from the District. The survivors of the war, over 10,000 in number, were all at home, and for the first time I had an opportunity to meet them face to face in almost every township in the District and reply to the accusations which they had heard at a distance. I carried that Republican District by a hundred and twenty eight majority by the aid of the votes of returned soldiers themselves. If it could have been shown that I had called them hirelings and dogs while they were imperriling their lives under the old flag for the preservation of the Union, they would not only have defeated me at the polls, but they would have killed me, as they ought to have done. At the next election I was returned by nearly fifteen hundred majority by the same constituency."

"But the Journal seems to rely a great deal on your alleged sympathy with the South before the outbreak of the rebellion and your disloyalty to the Government during the war"

"So I preceive," he replied. "I was reared under the conservative influences entertained by both of the old parties on the subject of slavery. I always regarded human slavery as a vast evil, but I found it in the Constitution, and I feared worse evils growing out of an attempt to forcibly abolish it. It was natural, therefore, that I should cling to the last chance and hope of a compromise and settlement between the North and South, on the basis of existing institutions. I see that what purports to be an extract from a speech made by me at Greencastle, shortly before the war broke out, has been revived. There was no short-hand reporter present at that meeting and have no idea that my exact language has been retained, but at the same time I have no doubt I did say that I would not vote for men or money to bring on a conflict between the two sections as long as there was the slightest hope of a compromise. This was the position of Stephen A. Douglas, whose speech of March 15, 1861, in the Senate, I had just heard, but when the war came by the firing on Sumter, from that hour until Lee's surrender at Appomatox Court House, I voted for every man and every dollar demanded by the Government in its efforts to surpress the rebellion; every dollar which soldiers received in pay; every ration of food issued to them; every blanket, and every stitch of clothing that they received, had the sanction of my support in Congress. I can say the same with truth in regard to the bounties and pensions. I might also safely, were I disposed to do so, challenge a comparison between the private assistance which I have personally rendered Union soldiers and that which they have received from my bitterest assailants. All these facts are so familiarly known to my former constituency in the Eighth District that I would not now stop to mention them but for the fact that people of different parts of the State can not, of course, be so well informed in regard to them."

"Did you see in the Journal of a few weeks ago what purported to be a fac simile of a letter written by you in behalf of Shoup, in december, 1860.

"No. I did not see it. It was printed before my return from Washington. I do not remember having written the letter, but have no doubt that I did. Frank Shoup and I were schoolmates. My recollection is that in the fall of 1860 he desired to go south on account of the delicate health of a sister I was much attached to him, and doubtless gave him the general letter of commendation to the people of the South. So far from there being any thought on my part of recommending him for military employment. I had not then, nor had the country generally, the most distant idea that there would be a war at all. The statement that my sympathies on public issues at that time were substantially with the south must of course be taken in the light of the issues presented at that time, and not afterward. The Crittenden Compromise was then the most prominent issue presented. A Peace Congress had been called, or was in contemplation. The conservative men of both sections earnestly desired the success of such a proposed settlement, and it was my understanding then that a large majority of Southern people were in favor of it On the other hand, there was a class of extreme men in the North, headed by such men as Chandler, of Michigan, who were loudly asserting their desire for blood letting. As between this latter class and a compromise preserving the Union, and securing to all the State their then existing rights under the Constitution, my sympathies were certainly in favor of the latter proposition. But what sense or fairness is there in trying a man's fitness for the confidence of the people at this time on the issues before the war? Suppose I were to do so. Suppose I were to go musing through the sayings of public men eighteen or twenty years ago. Discoveries could be made by me as well as by others. I believe it is understood that Judge Martindale is a candidate for the Senate; yet the paper which he controls was at the very date of the Shoup letter a disunion paper. Day after day, as every body remembers, it announced that the Union might be broken up without resistance on the part of the North; that the Southern States might secede in peace; that a line of separation might be drawn across the face of the country with its consent. This was simply treason to the Union, as far as treason can exist in men's word. It may be answered that the proprietors and editors of the Journal have changed since then, but it was the organ for the same party it speaks for now. It was controlled and edited, I believe, by Hon. J. D. Defrees and Mr. Benjamin Sulgrove, one at this time a Republican office holder at Washington, and the other still a writer for the Journal. I know of no Republican Convention which has repudiated the treason of the Journal in 1860 and 1861. The New York Tribune, then and now the great organ of the Republican party, boldly announced similiar sentiments of disunion. I am reliably informed that the Republican State Central Committee of Indiana is now engaged in aiding the circulation of that paper as a campaign document in the present canvass. Its sins are all overlooked, and its treason forgiven without repentance. The Cincinnati Commercial occupied substantially the same ground as the Tribune and Journal, and hundreds of men from the South who labored to stem the tide of disunion before the rebellion broke out have since assured me that such newspaper articles as these organs contained did more to lead the South into secession and into a belief that they could establish a separate Government without bloodshed than all the efforts of Yancy, Slidell and other extreme men of that section put together. It is a well known fact of history, too, that Chase, Stanton, Holt and many others were in full accord with the views contained in the papers mentioned. It seems to me that the Indianapolis Journal and the leaders of the Republican party had better clense their own political reputations before assailing mine. The truth is, that when the inevitable struggle growing out of the institution of slavery became immediate and imminent, the wisest and best minds of both parties were blinded by the magnitude of the issue and were guided substantially by their previous education and training. Some, while holding that slavery was a monstrous perversion of natural rights, and their faith still so strongly grounded in the compromises of the Constitution that they were willing to make the greatest sacrifices rather than resort to the sword. I am not disposed to assail the living or the memory of the dead on this question. I would rather ascribe patriotic motives to all in the light of the events that then surrounded them. This is all that I claim for myself, and I willingly concede it to others."

"What do you think will be the result of the approaching contest in this State?"

"Well, I have not the slightest doubt that the people of Indiana, without regard to party, are with me by an overwhelming majority. And I believe, further, that the Democratic State ticket will be elected by the largest majority given by either party within twenty years."

"How about the Legislature Senator?"

"Of course, I am not blind to the fact that by reason of a wicked and criminal apportionment of the State the Republican party has large advantages in regard to the Legislature; but at the same time I am confident of a democratic majority in both Houses. The truth is the Republicans are offering nothing to the people. The Republican platform contains nothing which meets the popular desire. On the other hand, the Democratic platform contains, especially on the financial question, what two-thirds of the voters of Indiana would indorse if that issue were directly submitted without the influence of party bias. Our people are an intelligent, reading and thinking people; they know what they want, and they will find out practical methods of obtaining it."

"What do you think of the Nationals and Greenbackers?"

"They have a great deal of strength in the State, and as a general thing are sincere, honest and intelligent men. While, perhaps, a few of their leaders are governed by motives of political ambition, as is the case in all parties, the great mass of the organization is made up of independent, unselfish persons. Like all pioneer movements, it embraces some speculative minds who go too far, but in the main their tendency is in favor of much needed financial reform. I do not apprehend injury to the Democratic party on account of their votes. Those who are sincerely acting to acomplish great ends must necessarily see at this time in Indiana they can not do so through their own organization. They also see that the Democratic party stands pledged in its platform to carry out the substance of their principles, and in my opinion their votes will not be thrown away, but will be cast where they will produce substantial results." Thieving Indian Agents.

Shown to be in keeping with other republican rascalities by the Indianapolis Sentinel, which says:

The accounts of the frauds, thefts and scoundrelism generally which have distinguished the administration of Indian agents are perfectly astounding, notwithstanding the people have been made familiar with every conceivable form of rascality as practiced by the radical party. These Indian agents have robbed the Indians, robbed the government, robbed the frontier settlers and robbed the employes of the government. They have been in the business for years, and have doubtless divided with heads of departments a la Belknap It is not presumable that the government was not cognizant of the thefts, embezzlements and forgeries and perjuries of its agents. The probabilities are that the rascals had been stealing upon shares under Grant, and now Hayes desires to make changes, by virtue of which some lusty conspirators will have a chance to place their friends where they can steal themselves fat and rich, and at the same time pay a liberal per cent. into the radical corporation fund. Livingston began to steal as soon as Grant gave him an opportunity, and has been stealing since 1870. The telegraph account says:

The details show that they stole everything in sight, and prostituted the whole agency machinery to their private use. Feeding and civilizing the Indians was a secondary matter. The affidavits, false vouchers, forged pay-rolls and ring letters laid before Commissioner Hoyt prove that Livingston began in 1870, when first appointed. Since then he has accumulated a fortune, a matter of record. Besides his large landed interest, he is a part owner in three silver mines in Nevada Livingston and his "pards" owned two cattle ranches, with stock, rations, etc., regularly supplied from Crow Creek and Cheyenne agencies. They were both seized by the Government. They conducted a hotel, supplied regularly with beef, milk and potatoes from the agency, and forced their employes to board there. They used the agency blacksmith shop and material for private gain. All their private stock were fed at the government crib. Livingston sold agency wood to the steamboats and hay to the Black Hills wagon trains. Crow creek is the stopping place of the Fort Pierre route to Deadwood. Indian annuities and rations were stolen and sold. Two steamboat loads of Indian goods for the lower Brule agency were unloaded at Crow creek, under the protest of the steamboat captain, who insisted that they belonged to Brule. The Indians put up large quantities of hay and wood, and were paid in their own rations and annuities. The ring would charge the government for this hay and wood, and get paid for them, and then sell the same to the steamboats, military posts and bullwhackers, and get paid a second time. The crops raised on the agency were sold, and the proceeds not accounted for. The trader would sell the Indian his own potatoes. The trader's warehouse was inside of the stockade, and ten feet from a government warehouse. The former was stocked from the latter. Of course all the stolen property was reported issued to the Indians. Whole bands a dozen times a year had their rations cut off for alleged offenses, and the rations not accounted for. There were rations and annuities drawn for 300 more Indians than there were on the agency. The money appropriated by congress during Livingston's administration for the management of the agency and the employment and incidentals amounted to $170,000. He stole all he could. His employes were all very ignorant men, and any excuse for non-receipt of wages was accepted. They were glad to get rations and clothing. The false vouchers, not all discovered, already number 150, ranging from $50 to $1,500. One laborer, whose name was Hooker, was freely used on fraudulent vouchers, was so badly frightened by the ring that he went into a loft and shot himself through the heart. The instances of perjuries are too numerous to mention. Livingston was an Episcopalian appointment. He gave fonts and stained windows to the chapels. This is only a skeleton of the worst plundering ever made public in the Indian service out west. The forgery, perjury, and robbery continued over eight years, and turned in to the agents thousands of dollars.

There are other chapters of this radical management of the Indians equally repulsive. It will be remembered that the democrats tried to get Indian affairs out of the hands of theiving radical agents, but this didn't suit a radical senate, and the important charge was defeated. The conclusion is invitable that the radical senators know full well that the change proposed by the democrats would lead to the exposure of more radical thieves, and this, in view of the investigations of the Potter committe, was not desirable. But the rascalities of the Indian agents are so overgrown that they can be no longer obscured, and now, after eight years of stupendous villainies, a great hullabaloo is kicked up, as much as to say, "All this stealing has been going on unknown to the government." As a consequence, the old thieves will be removed and a fresh set put on the trail of the Indians to steal and rob and lie as in the past and when sufficient time has been given for all hands to get rich another discovery will be made, providing the radical party has control of the government that stealing has been going on upon a large scale. The way to get rid of this public steal business is to get rid of the radical thief party. As long as it is in power thieves will be appointed to important offices and stealing everything in sight will be the rule.

From California.

The following letter is from the pen of a former resident which we are kindly permitted to publish:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 28, '78.

DEAR FRIEND.—I write you at last according to promise. Have finally got settled in our new home, and am very much disappointed in California if San Francisco is a specimen of the entire state; but it is said to be the most undesirable place to live in on account of its high winds and heavy fogs which I consider very unpleasant, and the weather is extremely cool. We are obliged to keep fire every evening and morning. There are a few hours during the middle of the day that a fire can be dispensed with; it seems very strange that there should be so many different climates in one state. It is so cool and unpleasant here while just across the bay, in Oakland, it is warm and pleasant, with no winds nor fogs, and up by Sacramenty and Stockton it is very warm with scorching winds. In the southern portion of the state the heat at times is almost intolarable.—San Jose is called the most beautiful place in California. It is situated about 50 miles south of San Francisco; I am expecting to go there ere long. Mr. Dawson's mother will make us a long visit in a short time, and then will be my opportunity for seeing a little of the country. I expected to be cured of catarrh after coming to this country, but this climate only agravates the disease, and San Francisco is death to all consumptives, so warn all your friends with weak lungs who contemplate coming to this city for a permanent residence. I enjoyed the trip through much better than I expected; for any one that is traveling for pleasure and have not the little hindrance that I had, the trip would be splendid. For miles and miles after leaving Omaha, there is not much to be seen that is interesting, and as you travel farther west you see nothing but sage brush and sand until you near the Rocky Mountains, then the scenery becomes beautiful. No pen can describe it as it is in all its grandeur. It has to be seen in order to realize how it looks. A small town called Sherman is situated upon the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and when that attitude is gained you are 8212 feet above the level of the sea, but you cannot realize you are so high up in the world. Last Sunday we visited Woodward's gardens. These grounds were laid out by a gentleman of that name, and were intended to beautify and adorn his private residence, which is situated near the centre of the grounds. It is useless for me to attempt to describe these beautiful grounds and do justice to the subject—they must be seen to be appreciated. There is an art gallery with rare paintings, and in the zoological department are different kinds of wild animals; an aquarium with a varied assortment of fish. There is also a museum, a music hall, theater and skating floor. The grounds are beautifully laid out with board walks, evergreen trees, fountains, small lakes, flowers and one lake with a circular boat to amuse the little ones, rustic seats and statuary, also a beautiful arbor filled with plants and flowers of all descriptions. These grounds are open to the public on Saturdays and Sundays only. We spent one entire day there and then did not see half there is to be seen. They are said to occupy 5 acres of ground. I miss the Methodist church and the good old fashioned people. I am situated in a Catholic neighborhood and the few acquaintances I have made are all Catholics. I dislike to go off to a strange church alone, so I have not been inside of one since I came here. I wish I could step over to your house this week and have several games of croquet. Do not think the people play here as I see no grounds or any other evidence of such a game. Our yard is so cut up with walks and flower beds there is no room for a set. People here (over at their hotels) have lunch at noon and the six o'clock meal is dinner. Everything is so entirely different it seems impossible to get used to it. We have to pay for all the water we use. How is that after living in a free water country for so many years. Good bye.

MRS. M. J. DAWSON.

THE MORTGAGE.

BY LIZZIE HULL.

Ten years—and the hair on my temp'es
Is turning and mixing with gray,
And my face has grown aged and care-worn,
Its lines deeper day by day;
My comrades are want and privation,
They've clung to me close for years,
And I've borne them with unflinching patience,
Though laden with trouble and fears.

This eve, while the sun has been dipping
His rays down the fair, rosy west,
I've been over the farm I once planted,
With hope of serene age and rest;
But to-morrow a white-covered wagon,
On its long westward journey will start,
And Mary will smile, though she's hiding
A weary and desolate heart.

I've walked the last time through the orchard;
This autumn its first fruit will yield;
The vineyard is laden with clusters
And yellow with corn is each field.
When full of youth's hope and ambition,
My wife and I left dear old Maine,
With only the blood-boughtthen pittance
I'd saved from a "private's" poor gain.

But Mary was happy and cheerful,
And I strong with vigorous health
With eighty good acres of prairie
We seemed on a short road to wealth.
[illegible]
A poor little shanty was built;
How poor, but one room, and unplastered,
So meager its poverty felt.

Then stables, and horses, and cattle,
And harrows, and wagons, and seed,
And hundreds etceteras unthought of,
That ever a pioneer needs.
And every thing came at the highest,
And called on my small stock of cash,
Till I found, ere I'd half done with buying,
My dollars had gone like a flash.

For five dreary, desolate winters,
With summers of labor between,
We suffered, yet thankful if autumn
Rewarded with measures of grain.
And there, in that kitchen and parlor
And chamber combined, one bright morn—
With poverty every where 'round them—
Our little twin children were born.

And later our Mabel, our idol,
Came to us, yet soon fled away;
And we felt there were griefs that are greater
Than want—that sad burial day.
But I built to the house an "addition,"
And made things all cozy and warm;
And bought forty acres of "timber,"
And for it we mortgaged the farm.

Then "hard times" grew harder, and ever
Misfortune has followed alway,
With failure on failure of harvests
That no mortal foresight could stay.
The mortgage is closed, and our homestead
Is gone for its half, and is sold;
No help—for it's law, so it's justice—
And avarice clutches his gold.

So out—heaven help us—we wander;
Our youth and our labors are lost;
Ah, little we dreamed when we signed it,
The anguish that mortgage would cost.
Out over the prairie to-morrow
A white-covered wagon will roam,
And eyes that are misty and blinded
Shall take a last look at "the home."

"AS COMPANION TO A LADY."

"I'm very sorry, miss, but I'm only a poor woman myself, and, if you don't pay the rent of this room, I don't see as you can afford the rent of the one up stairs."

Here the landlady rubbed her nose viciously upon her apron, and stared straight out of the very dirty window.

As this was evidently a challenge to me to reply, I said, as firmly as I could, a few words which brought out the reason for the woman's visit that morning.

"Am I to understand, then, that you wish me to leave?"

"If you please, miss, at the end of the week, for there's the gent on the first floor would like to have this bedroom."

"Very well, Mrs. Ruddock, I said; I will find a room elsewhere."

"Thanky, miss," she said, sharply; and giving her nose another vicious rub, she left me to my thoughts—and my tears.

For I was weak, faint and heartsick, and the coins in my purse had dwindled down, so that if I did not succeed in obtaining an engagement in a very few days I had no resource but to creep back to the country and avow my failure.

Just three months since, and we were all so happy in the little country vicarage; and then, in visiting one of his people, my poor father caught a dangerous fever, while in tending him my dear mother was stricken with the same complaint, and ere three weeks had passed Minna and I sat in the little study alone, in deep black; for the struggle had been brief, and those we loved lay together in the green churchyard, and we were only intruders now in the little vicarage that had been our home.

We were nearly penniless, too, but a brother clergyman of my father's, quite as poor, came forward and offered us a temporary home till, as he said, some opening should occur for us.

I gladly accepted it for Minna; but for myself, I was determined to try great London, and, unaided, battle for myself. In two years John Murray was to come back from Australia to fetch me for his wife, and till then I would be independent. So the day came at last when, with many tears, we two girls had to separate, and with aching heart I left the old Lincolnshire home, and reached the great dreary void of London early one afternoon.

I was not long in getting a place where I could stay, in the shape of a second floor front room in one of those heart-aching streets near the Foundling—streets that echo from morning to night with mournful cries uttered by venders whose goods it is impossible to surmise, and with the dismal echoing tones of the various organs. So painful were these last to me, that often of an evening, when I have returned from a weary, disheartening search for an engagement, and sat alone and hungry, fearing to spend my money in anything beyond the tea and bread and butter upon which I existed, those doleful strains—cheering, maybe, to some—have had such an effect upon me that I have sat and sobbed till, utterly worn out, I have fallen asleep, to wake, perhaps, hours after, to find it very late, and crawl shivering off to bed.

As the weeks passed on and my advertisements and fees paid to the various registry offices had been without effect, I used to crawl back to my room, growing more and more disheartened. I was always a plain, sallow-looking girl, and now in my fast-wearing black I began to feel that I was day by day growing more shabby and weary-looking, and that my feeble chances of obtaining a post were growing less and less.

I used to sit and ask myself whether I had tried hard—and I knew I had—but it was always the same. Whether I advertised for a situation as governess, or went from a registry office to offer myself as companion to a lady, it was always the same. I noticed a look of disappointment as soon as I entered the room, for I was neither pretty nor bright-looking, and my mournful black helped to sadden my aspect. It was always the same—the lady did not think I should suit her, and in blank disappointment I had to return.

And now it had come to this—that my landlady had grown as tired of me as the people at the registry offices, where I had more than once been told rudely that I was not likely to get a place as governess or companion, but had better look lower. That afternoon, evidently suspicious of my ability to pay, and perhaps disgusted with my miserable way of living, and afraid I should be left an invalid upon her hands, she had—rudely, it seemed to me—requested me to leave.

In my present circumstances I was utterly prostrated by the news, for I dared not take lodgings elsewhere; and I could see nothing now but to sell a portion of my scanty wardrobe and go back to beg for assistance from my father's friend.

What a change! and how soon had my hopes of independent action been blighted! I was heartsore as I felt how that in that great city there was wealth being squandered in luxury around me while I was literally starving; for my poor living was telling upon me fast. What should I do? What should I do?

It was with weary iteration I had said those words and wept till tears came no more, and a dull, stolid feeling of despair had come upon me. I had almost shrunk away in the streets from the bright-faced, happy girls I passed, and at times I found myself asking what had been my sin that I should be thus punished.

I lay awake that night for many hours, watching the light from the street lamp playing upon my ceiling; and at last, towards morning, the remembrance of words I had often heard came to me with a calm sense of repose, trust and restfulness, and I believe I fell asleep at last with a smile upon my lips, repeating a portion of that comforting sentence ending, "Are ye not much better than they?"

It was a bright, sunshiny morning when I awoke, to hear some one knocking at my door, and, hurrying on a few things, I answered.

"Ah! I was just agoing to take 'em down again," said my landlady harshly. "Some folks can afford to lay in bed all day; I can't. Here's two letters for you. And mind this, Miss Laurie; I never bargained to come tramping up to the top of the house with letters and messages for you."

"I'm very much obliged, Mrs. Ruddock," I said gently, as I took the letters with trembling hands, while, muttering and complaining, their bearer went down stairs. It seemed very hard then, but I believe it was the woman's habit, and that she was not bad at heart, but warped and cankered by poverty, hard work, and ill-usage from a drunken husband, whom she entirely kept.

One letter I saw at a glance was from Minna, the other was in a strange, crabbed hand, and I longed to read them, but exercising my self-denial, I dressed, lit my fire, and prepared my very frugal breakfast before sitting down and devouring Minna's news.

What right had I to murmur as I did last night, I asked myself, when she was evidently so happy and contented? and then I opened, with fluttering hand, the other letter, and was puzzled by it at first; but at last I recalled the fact that three weeks before I had answered an advertisement in the Times where a lady wanted a companion.

The note was very brief and curt, and ran as follows:

"If Miss Laurie is not engaged she can call upon Mrs. Langton Porter, 47 Morton street, Park Village South, at 11 o'clock to-morrow (Thursday)."

"At last!" I said to myself joyfully, and with beating heart I prepared myself for my journey, for the appointment was for that morning.

Just as I had pretty well timed myself for my walk a sudden squall came on, the sky was darkened, snow fell heavily, and in the place of a morning in spring we seemed to have gone back into winter, for the snow lay thickly in a very short time, and the branches of the trees in the squares were whitened.

Weak as I was this disheartened me, but I fought my way bravely on, and just at 11 rang timidly at the door of an important-looking house, and was superciliously shown, by a stout, tall footman in drab livery, into a handsomely furnished room. Everything in the place I noticed was rich and good; heavy curtains hung by window and door, skins and Eastern rugs lay on the polished wood floor, and a tremendous fire blazed in a great brass fireplace, and the flames danced and were reflected from the encaustic tiles with which it was surrounded.

"I'll take your note in," said the footman, as I handed it. "You can sit down."

I preferred to stand, and, as soon as I was alone, I shivered with fear and cold, as I caught a glimpse of my pale, sallow face in the great mirror. Every moment I expected to see the owner of the place, but I remained standing wearily for an hour, and then I sighed and turned wistfully to look at the door, wondering whether the footman had taken in the note which I had given him as my passport.

I started, for close behind me, having entered unheard, was a rather plump, tall lady in black. She was dressed as if for going out, and well wrapped in furs.

"Oh! you are waiting," she said, harshly, and a shade of displeasure crossed her face as she looked full at me till my eyes dropped. "There, Miss—Miss—Miss—"

"Laurie," I suggested.

"Yes, yes; I know," she said, sharply; "it is in my note. Pray, why in the name of common sense did you not sit down? Take that chair. Now, then, have you ever been companion to a lady before?"

"No, ma'am," I replied; and then, in answer to her questions, all very sharply given, I told her as much as was necessary of my story.

"I don't think you will suit me," she said; "I've had misery enough, and I want some one cheerful and pleasant, a lady whom I can trust and who will be a pleasant companion. There, I'm sure there is not such a body in London, for the way I've been imposed upon is dreadful! I've had six in six months, and the number of applications I have had nearly drove me out of my senses. I've had one since you wrote me—a creature whose sole idea was herself. I want one who will make me her first consideration. I don't mind what I pay, but I want some one tall and lady-like; and you are not pretty, you know."

I shook my head sadly.

"Humph! Well," she went on, "you won't be so giddy and be always thinking of getting married. There, you need not blush like that; it's what all the companions I have had seem to think about. You don't I suppose?"

"I am engaged to be married," I said, hanging down my head, "in a couple of years."

"Ho! Well, he mustn't come here, for I'm a very selfish, pragmatical old woman; and if I engaged you—which I don't think I shall do—I should want you all to myself. What is he?"

"A settler—abroad," I faltered.

"Ho! That's better; and perhaps he'll settle there altogether without you."

I [illegible] at her [illegible] and she laughed.

"Ah! I know, my good girl. I haven't lived to eight and forty for nothing. How old are you?"

"Twenty," I said, shivering, for her rough way repelled me, and I longed to bring the interview to an end.

"Why, the girl's cold," she said, roughly. "H'm, twenty! Here, go up to the fire, and have a good warm; it's dreadful weather. There, pull off your bonnet and jacket. Put them on that chair, and go closer to the fire; I've a deal to say to you yet, for I'm not going to engage any young person and have to change directly."

I obeyed her, trembling the while, for I was very weak; and she went on asking me questions and making comments.

"I don't like your appearance at all; you look pale and unhealthy. Not a bit like a girl from the country."

"I am very sorry," I said; "but, indeed, ma'am, I have excellent health."

"Then your face tells stories about you. You play, of course?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"You're warm now. Go and play something. Can you sing?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Then sing, too; and look here, Miss—Miss—Miss—"

"I was about to tell her my name, but, remembering the last rebuff, I was silent.

"Now, look here, my good young lady, how am I to remember your dreadful name? What is it?"

"Laurie, ma'am," I replied.

"Of course it is; I remember it quite well. Now go and play and sing something, and mind, I don't want my ears deafened with fireworks, and the drums split with parrot-shriek bravuras. Sing something sweet and simple and old-fashioned, if you can," she added, ungraciously.

I crossed the room and sat down to the magnificent piano, and for the next five minutes I seemed to be far away, down in the old home, as I forgot where I was, in singing my poor dead father's favorite old ballad, "Robin Adair;" while, as I finished, I had hard work to keep back the tears.

"Ro—bin A—dair," she sang, as I rose, in a not unpleasing voice. "Now let me hear you read. I always make my companion read to me a great deal; and mind this, I hate to hear any drone like a school-girl. Go over there into the corner of the window and stand there. Take that book; you'll find the mark left in where Miss Belleville—bah! I believe her name was Stubbs and her father a green-grocer—left off. Now, then, begin."

She pushed a lounge-chair close up to the window and sat down with her hands in her muff, while I stood there, feeling like a school-girl and ready to drone, as I began to read with faltering voice what happened to be Thackeray's most beautiful chapter—the death of poor old Col. Newcombe. I know my voice trembled at times, and a strange sense of choking came upon me as I went on battling, oh, so hard to read those piteous, heart-stirring lines! but I was weak and suffering, I was faint with hunger and exertion, sick with that despair of hope deferred, and at last the room, with its costly furniture, seemed to swim round before me, a cold perspiration bathed my face, and, with a weary sigh, I caught feebly at the curtains and then fell heavily upon the polished floor.

I have some faint memory of being lifted and wheeled in a chair whose castors I heard chirrup to the front of the fire, and then, as my senses began to return, I seemed to feel arms round me and a pleasant voice saying, half aloud:

"And she just lost her poor father, too—to set her to read such a thing as that! I declare I'm about the wickedest, most thoughtless and unfeeling old woman under the sun."

Then there was the refreshing odor of a vinaigrette, and the sick feeling began to pass away.

"I—I beg pardon," I faltered, trying to rise.

"I beg yours, my dear," she said, tenderly. "Sit still, sit still. Now, then, try and drink that."

Some sherry was held to my lips and then I was almost forced to eat a biscuit. They, however, rapidly revived me, and I found Mrs. Potter had torn off her bonnet and mantle and was kneeling by my side.

"That's better, my dear," she said, smiling at me, as she passed her arm round me and drew me nearer to her, and kissed me in a gentle, motherly way. And now this was too much, for I was weak and hysterical. I could fight against harshness, but her tender words and ways unlocked the flood-gates of my grief and I laid my head down and sobbed as if my heart would break.

An hour later, after she had literally forced me to partake of the breakfast that was ordered up, she sat beside me, holding my hand, and more than once I saw the tears steal down her pleasant face as she won from me, bit by bit, the story of my troubles and my bitter struggles here in town.

At last I rose to go, trembling and expectant. Would she engage me? It was more than I dared to hope.

"Sit still, my child," she said, tenderly. "It has pleased God to make me—a childless, widowed woman—His steward over much wealth, and if I did not make this a home for one of His tempest-smitten lambs I should be a worse woman than I think I am. Stay with me; we shall be the best of friends."

I stayed—stayed to know her real worth and to win her motherly love—stayed to find, when John Murray returned, that his love was greater for my sister than for me, and patiently resigned my love to her, and then battled with a long illness, when they had gone together to their far-off home. But every day gave me a new lesson on not judging too hastily. That is ten years since; and I am still in my peaceful, happy home, though only "as companion to a lady."—Cassell's Magazine.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

Scenes in Italy.

The skies of Italy, however, so far as the two or three days we have seen them enable us to judge, bear no comparison in clearness and beauty to those of our own fair land. They are much softer than ours, making it difficult at times to distinguish between mountain and cloud, or rather to tell where the mountains end and the clouds begin. The olive and the vine continue to be the main products, but as we approach Rome they give place to fields of wheat, rye, rice and maize. The wheat was just ripening for the harvest south of the Alps, but after we crossed the Appenines the harvest was in progess. We passed immense fields of wheat in which were long rows of reapers cutting it with sickles in the old-fashioned way. One or two overseers on horseback superintended each gang of workmen. Instead of placing it in shocks, they haul it together at once and thresh it by treading out with horses in the open field. We saw but few stacks of grain, and nothing that approached to our barns. Their horses, cattle and sheep are kept all the year round in the open field.—Cor. Reading Times.

The Stores of Venice.

The ladies are surprised at the number and the magnificence of the stores of Venice, especially of the jewelry stores on St. Mark's piazza. They are more numerous than those of Rome, and if sharply bargained with will sell their goods lower than anywhere else in Italy. Even Roman and Florentine mosaics can be bought cheaper here than in cities where they are made. The dry goods and fancy stores, although small, have a good display of goods of fine quality. They are scattered through the narrow streets, and a great number are in the vicinity of the Rialto bridge. The majority of the stores, however, are for the sale of provisions, groceries, etc. Here we have, as elsewhere in Italy, very few, if any, gin palaces, and only an occasional beer saloon. Diamonds can be purchased in Venice cheaper than anywhere else in Europe, provided the purchaser will bear in mind that the asking price is generally about one-third more than they will be willing to take for the article offered. The best plan is to select what you want, ask the price, and then offer one-third less. They seldom allow a customer to go away without selling him what he wants, and if they cannot get their own price they are very apt to take what he offers. —Cor. Baltimore American.

A Stupendous Sanctuary.

Nine miles north of Cintra is the stupendous Mafra Sanctuary, a second Escurial, without the royal sepulcher. Like its Spanish counterpart, it consists of a palace, church and convent combined in one immense parallelogram. One authority states the longest side to be 770 feet, and another 1,150 feet, the usual discrepancy where measurements are concerned. To give an idea of the internal magnitude of this structure: It contains 886 apartments, 5,000 doors, 9 courts, and space on the roof for 10,000 soldiers to maneuver. The architecture must be described as plain, though not without richness in certain parts, as the facade of the basilica, for instance. The foundation of this wonder is due to Dom Joao V., who vowed that if an heir should be granted him he would erect a great monastery on the site of the humblest sanctuary in Portugal. And thus he fulfilled his pledge upon the birth of a son. The work was commenced in 1717 and consecrated with great festivities in 1730. No monks have resided in the cells since 1834, when Portugal ordained the extinction of their fraternities. The buildings now stand a monument of mistaken zeal, prodigality and inutility, depriving the suffering of the world of millions that might be joyfully expended in the work which covereth a multitude of sins.—*Lisbon Cor. Beer-Drinking in Vienna.

Water is undoubtedly a very scarce commodity in Vienna, cistern water being mostly used for drinking purposes. There are very slow-running hydrants on the streets, and they are invariably surrounded by girls and women with buckets and tubs, waiting their turn to secure a supply. There are also wagons with hogsheads that go around to sell water. It is said to be unwholesome, and, if drunk continuously, will lead to chronic affections of the bowels. It is what is called hard water, but we have never found it unpalatable, though a lump of ice is a great improvement to it in this weather. There are, however, very few people in Vienna who drink water, and many who never touch it. Beer is the daily and hourly drink of almost every one, old and young. It is part of their daily food, just as coffee or tea is with us. When families are dining at the restaurants the beer-mug stands by the plate of old and young, male and female, and it is even put to the lips of infants. Vienna beer does not, however, seem to have any intoxicating effect, and it never occasions a headache. We have seen and been in the company of men who will drink a dozen large glasses of an evening without observing the slightest inebriating effect. We doubt if they could drink as much American beer with impunity. The Austrians are undoubtedly a sober people, as it would be difficult to find a place where spirituous liquor is sold.—*Cor. French Forests.

In France what is called a "forest" would, in America, be styled a "clump of trees." But mark the difference of results. In France woodlands are highly prized, though she imports some 3,000,000 francs' worth of timber per annum. Exclusive of fire purposes she uses 9,500,000 metres of wood every year for works of industry and art. Some 30,000,000 acres of land are devoted to timber, of which 6,000,000 belong to the state. If we in America esteemed wood as prudently as the people of France, better results would arise. The timber lands of America offer an important theme, well worth studying. To-day I have been looking at trees of small dimensions growing under a treatment of artificial coloring. Ash is stained so that it grows up like satin wood, and pine becomes similar to rosewood. Indeed, this commanding of nature by science in this respect is very interesting, and strongly suggestive of the French mind.

Resin and turpentine, coming chiefly from the maritime pine of the South of France, are very important products of this country, and divide the competition of our Carolinas and Georgia. A pine in France yields till it is 60 or 70 years old and produces gum in the "boxes" much more profusely and profitably than I have seen in North Carolina. Distilling is done at a saving of some 30 per cent. over the American process, as there is no extravagance or waste of any kind. From the moment the tree is stripped, or "axed," to the time the resin and turpentine are barreled, economy and system are prevailing powers. I have seen in the Carolinas as much improvidence in a day as would drive a French pine planter mad in a month.—Paris Cor. Baltimore Sun.

Affection, Despair and Suicide.

Charles S. Sauvinet, who, under the Warmoth Administration, was Civil Sheriff of the city, committed suicide at his residence, No. 5 Kerlerec street, corner of Dauphine. His devotion to one of his sons, a youth about 16 years of age, who is seriously afflicted with a pulmonary disease, was the cause which led him to destroy himself. When the youth, who in his earlier years had shown great aptitude for study, was sufficiently old to be separated from his parents, he was sent away. Some time since, having received a brilliant education, he returned home. His success at school increased the affection of his father, who became devoted to him. Hardly had he returned home than the first symptoms of the terrible malady became visible. Slowly and gradually it progressed, though every effort was made to check it. Yesterday Sauvinet, who had thus far clung to the hope that his son might recover, commenced to lose that hope, and, accompanied by the youth, called on Dr. Roudanez, the family physician. After conversing with the physician, he said to him: "Doctor, is my son going to die? If he does, all that remains for me to do is to throw myself in the river. I cannot see him die." Dr. Roudanez replied that the youth was better, but Sauvinet said that all doctors said that, and added: "What can I do if my son dies?" The doctor reasoned with him, saying that it was his duty to live and take care of his son. Shortly afterward Sauvinet left, and proceeded toward his residence. On the way, owing to his son's feeble condition, they were compelled to stop several times. This confirmed Sauvinet in his apprehension that his son's end was approaching, and when he reached his residence he appeared so pale and careworn that the members of his family, astonished at it, inquired from him whether he was ill. He made no reply, but saw his son to bed and then retired to his own chamber in front of the building. Upon arriving there he removed his coat, secured his revolver, a Smith & Wessen, and laid down on his bed. He then applied the muzzle of the pistol to his right temple and pulled the trigger. The report of the pistol attracted his family, who found him insensible on his bed. Dr. Formento was immediately summoned, and upon examining the wound declared science powerless. After lingering for three-quarters of an hour, during which time he was insensible, Sauvinet expired. He was 49 years of age, and leaves a large family.—New Orleans Picayune.

The Salaries of Circus Men.

"How are the salaries of the performers in the equestrian profession, Mr. Barnum?"

"Well, I pay my best rider $100 a day, Sunday included; that is, $700 a week. The leading lady equestrienne gets $300—they generally receive about $150 to $200 from other concerns. Pad-riders get about—well, say from $100 to $125 per week."

"How are the acrobats and gymnasts, and that class of performers, paid?"

"From $50 to $100 per week, according to ability and the danger of their performance. There are a great many of them to be had; always plenty on the market, but I always have the best."

"Do clowns receive——?"

"Clowns always command good salaries, and a really first-class clown is worth from $150 to $175 per week, and some, such as Ted Almonte—poor Ted!—who died recently, was earning more in the season."

On advertising he was quite sane:

"Ah!" said the great showman, with half a sigh, "advertising is a heavy drain, but then if I didn't advertise I wouldn't make anything. My pictorial printing this year has already cost me $43,000, but my newspaper bills in a season amount to a great deal more. My expenses on my trip three years ago amounted to $650,000, and in that year in six months the profit was $60,000. —Cleveland Herald.

Pigeons.

It is not safe to bet on flying pigeons. One of the men who had birds in the "race" from Columbus to New York said, the other day: "My bird made the trip from Elmira last year in one day, but on another trip from the same place, he was gone eight days. They must have very clear weather, and no wind. When I saw by the dispatch that the weather was cloudy I had no hope that the pigeons would return. On being let loose, they rise high up in the air, and fly round in circles until they discern some conspicuous distant object, toward which they fly. If the air it foggy, they fly round and round, sometimes for two or three days, until they become exhausted. Then they flock in with the first pigeons they chance to meet. I have taken birds a few blocks from their coop, and set them loose in cloudy weather, and found them days afterward among pigeons living but a short distance from my house."

ONLY ONE BEER.

He enters in your beer saloon,
With kindly words of cheer;
"How do you do, my boy!" he cries,
"Things look right easy here!"

"My health! None of the best, you know;
Kidney complaint, I fear.
I just popped in to have a chat;
I'll only take one beer."

His gaze while speaking thus to you
Most surely is sincere;
You pity him, and really think
He'll only take one beer.

Then you converse of various thing
Ridiculous or dear;
And ere a minute has elapsed
You rap again for beer.

Now he forgets his feeble health,
His eyes are calm and clear;
And while you pay another dime
He drinks his second beer.

Then, as the conversation flows,
And other friends appear,
This man who only came for one,
[illegible]

His voice grows loud as he narrates
His wonderful career,
And down his restless throat he pours,
At your expense, more beer.

And when dull midnight comes around,
In ways far from austere,
You carry to some distant stoop
The man who takes one beer.

A SONG OF THE SEASON.

The lusty athlete of the year,
When birds begin to sing,
Leaps from the forests brown and sear,
And makes his annual spring.

And thinks he'll go and cool off sum'er.
With luscious fruit the branches bend,
To tempt the boy who long has sought'em;
His head and knees in anguish blend—

White Slavery.

The two little Italian slaves have been rescued from their weary life in New York, but the slaveholder goes free. The testimony of the child-musicians showed conclusively that they were driven like slaves to their cheerless task, rated like slaves if they failed to bring home as much money as their master thought they ought to have earned, fed and lodged like slaves, and were surrounded with influences that must have made them in time the victims of a still more degrading bondage. What was even worse, their testimony proved that they were deliberately sold by their parents into this miserable existence.

Religion in the Family.

The family is the divine unity, not the individual. We have opportunities for well-doing there of the greatest importance. All good ought to begin in the family. Luther has remarked that the Canaanitish woman, when apparently repelled, took the sword out of the Lord's hand and turned it against himself. Then Christ said, "Oh, woman . . . be it unto thee according to thy word." Should we not learn from her patience and perseverance and faith in this thing!

How are we to labor? Begin by setting forth Christ at home. Some feel a difficulty of this kind; strangers do not know our faults, and we can speak to them about Christ, but at home they know our faults, and we have all enough of them. We feel our consistency is watched. Now, when we feel that we are hindered from speaking to our own children by a consciousness of our own unfaithfulness as Christians, nothing can appeal more forcibly to an affectionate and earnest mind in favor of repentance and a new life. In many cases our prayers do not seem to be answered. I do not wonder at it when our lives are so inconsistent. Love wins, but it is the love of Christ in us that becomes useful in drawing other souls to the Lord Jesus. In regard to sickness in our homes, it is a time when the word of God can be brought to bear with great effect. Sickness is appointed for an object. Do not think that nature explains everything, as is presumptuously asserted by some. Nothing in the nineteenth century will be so much wondered at in the twentieth as its presumptuous babbling about finding truths which it has not really found.

Then as to our children at school, we need to pray for them. But we are responsible for sending them there; therefore pray for guidance in selecting schools to send them to. As to young men entering on life, the period is very momentous, and while prayer is offered for them let us be very sympathetic and encouraging.—Dr. H. S. Patterson, in The Christian.

A Word to the Boys.

When I was just 15 I believed in the Lord Jesus and joined the church of Christ, and nothing on earth would please me more than to hear that those I am writing to had been led to do the same. It is twenty-five years ago now, and I have never been sorry for what I then did; no, not even once. I have had plenty of time to think it over, and many temptations to try some other course, and if I had found out that I had been deceived, or had made a gross blunder, I would have made a change before now, and would do my best to prevent others from falling into the same delusion.

I tell you, boys, the day I gave myself up to the Lord Jesus to be His servant was the best day of my life. Then I began to be safe and to be happy; then I found out the secret of living, and had a worthy object for my life's exertions and an unfailing comfort for life's troubles. Because I would wish every boy who reads these lines to have a bright eye, a light tread, a joyful heart and overflowing spirits, I therefore plead with him to consider whether he will not follow my example, for I speak from experience and know what I say.

Once, as I stood musing at a window, I saw a fly upon it, and made a brush with my hand to catch it. When I opened my hand the fly was not inside, but still on the same place on the glass. Scarcely thinking what I did, I made another brush with my hand, and thought I had captured the insect, but with the same result. There was the victim, quietly retaining his place in spite of me. It was on the other side of the glass. And when I saw that it was so, I smiled at my own folly. Those who attempt to find pleasure out of Christ will experience a like failure, for they are seeking on the wrong side of the glass. When we are on the side of Jesus Christ, and, having believed in Him, are cleansed and forgiven, then our pursuit of joy will be successful; but till then we shall labor in vain, and spend our strength for naught. It is of no use digging for coal where the strata show that there cannot be any; and equally useless is it to try after happiness where God's word, and the experience of those who have gone before us, assure us that happiness cannot be found. But then it is all the more needful that we should seek it where it can be had, and give ourselves at once to the search. He who believes in the Lord Jesus is blessed in the deed.

What hinders you from believing? Boys, why should you not, while yet you are boys, believe in the Lord Jesus unto salvation? May the Spirit of God lead you to do so!

Do not imagine that you cannot now be Christians; the gifts of our heavenly Father's love are not reserved for a certain age; boys may be saved, boys may be workers for Jesus, boys may bring great glory to God. Hence it is that just now, at this particular turning point in your lives, we are anxious to see you resolute for the right way. May the Holy Spirit incline you to resolve to be the Lord's. Others may despise your conscientious choice, and make mirth of your holy carefulness, but what matters it? Some of us have been laughed at for these twenty years, and are none the worse for it; we have had all manner of evil spoken falsely against us for Christ's name's sake, but we are all the happier for it. Oh, boys, if you are renewed in heart, and become for life and death the Redeemer's, none can really harm you. All must be right with him who is right with God.—C. H. Spurgeon, in The Christian.

QUICK WORK.

Bread from Standing Wheat in Four Minutes and Thirty-seven Seconds.

[From the Carrollton (Mo.) Democrat.]

About fifty men were present by invitation to see Jim Lawson beat his own time of two years ago, when his wife had bread baked in eight and a quarter minutes after the wheat was standing in the field. At 4.6 10. o'clock the reaper, drawn by Cy. Dunnell's dun mules, stood at the corner of the growing wheat, machine in gear ready for a start. Men were stationed every few feet along the line of grain ready to seize an armful as it fell from the reaper, and rush with it to the thresher close by, which, under the direction of veteran drivers, was getting under way for business. At the mill, just sixteen rods away, Lawton stood at the window watching the moment when McCaw, on the swiftest horse in the county, should start from the thresher with the grain, while Mrs. Lawton and her niece, Miss Alice, had all the preparations made to make griddle-cakes and biscuit in the shortest possible time. At the drop of the hat the dun mules sprang to the work, and in 1m. 15s. the threshed wheat, about a peck, was in the sack on the horse and the race commenced for the mill. There were two bridges to cross, and the excited spectators could only see a column of dust, hear a couple of taps on the plank bridges as the horse flew over them at lightning speed, and the wheat was delivered to Lawton in the mill. In 1m. 17s. the flour was delivered to Mrs. Lawton, and in 3m. 55s. from the starting of the reaper the first griddle-cake came from the hands of Miss Alice, was gobbled by a dozen eager hands and —that was the last of it. In 4m. 37s. from the starting of the reaper, according to the best double-timer stop-watch in the country, a pan of biscuits was delivered to the hungry crowd by Mrs. Lawton, and that was the last seen of them. Then other pans of delicious biscuits were baked more at leisure, and boiled ham and "one-minute biscuits" formed a sandwich it was right hard to beat, and then, as it would be impossible for a Western gathering of any kind to be worthy the name without a speech of some kind, Mr. Smiley proposed that Gen. Shields make a speech, which he d'd in those incomparably graceful words of his that fill even so prosaic a proceeding as grinding wheat with the poetry of eloquence. Then Lawton, in his modest way, had to say something, and he made a little speech that was heartily applauded as well as that of Gen. Shields, and the party separated.

The Useful and the Beautiful.

The tomb of Moses is unknown; but the traveler slakes his thirst at the well of Jacob. The gorgeous palace of the wisest and wealthiest of monarchs, with cedar, and the gold, and ivory, and even the great temple of Jerusalem, hallowed by the visible glory of the Deity Himself, are gone; but Solomon's reservoirs are are perfect as ever. Or the ancient architecture of the Holy City, not one stone is left upon another, but the pool of Bethsaida commands the pilgrim's reverence at the present day. The columns of Persepolis are moldering into dust, but its cistern and aqueduct remain to challenge our admiration. The golden house of Nero is a mass of ruins, but the Aqua Claudia still pours into Rome its limpid stream. The Temple of the Sun, at Tadmore, in the wilderness, has fallen, but its fountain sparkles in its rays, as when thousands of worshipers thronged its lofty colonnades. It may be that London will share the fate of Babylon, and nothing be left to mark it save mounds of crumbling brick-work. The Thames will continue to flow as it does now. And if any work of art should rise over the deep ocean, time, we may well believe that it will be neither a palace nor a temple, but some vast aqueduct or reservoir; and if any name should flash through the mist of antiquity, it would probably be that of the man who, in his day, sought the happiness of his fellow men rather than glory, and linked his memory to some great work of national utility or benevolence. This is the true glory which outlives all others, and shines with undying luster from generation to generation, imparting to works some of its own immortality, and in some degree rescuing them from the ruin which overtakes the ordinary monument of historical tradition or mere magnificence.—Edinburgh Review.

Blood Transfusion.

A remarkable cure by blood transfusion has been wrought in Boston. Cecilia Merkel, a child of 7 years, was attacked first by diphtheria, next by reflex paralysis, and finally by sanguinea purpures, and her life was despaired of. Her father, who is a physician, consented to have the experiment of blood transfusion tried. Blood was taken from the veins of a young man of 18, and injected with a syringe into the child's system. Subsequently the little one took cold and began coughing, with a mucous rattle in her throat, so that the father was compelled to afford artificial respiration. He then took blood from the veins of his servant, a healthy girl of 19, and the effect of the transfusion was charming. The child fell into a peaceful sleep, and a remarkable change came over her. When she awoke she asked for her playthings, and from that hour her improvement was rapid.

Struck by Lightning.

A very remarkable incident occurred on the voyage of one of the ice ships lately arrived at Bombay from America. The vessel was struck by lightning, and, the electric fluid passing into the body of the ship through the foremast, pierced a hole some ten feet in diameter through the ice, melting about thirty tons, and setting fire to and slightly burning some of the beams of the ship in its passage. It is seldom that vessels are struck in this manner, and the fact is the more remarkable when it is considered what a good mark for the lightning ships nowadays are, with their ir n hulls and masts.

LIGHTNING.

Danger from the Electric Fluid—How to Avoid It.

[From Chambers' Journal.]

Under what conditions is damage from lightning possible, and what are the means by which the risk may be lessened or avoided? An isolated tree, standing either upon a wide plain or upon an eminence, is obviously likely to determine a lightning discharge, to "attract the lightning," to use a common expression. The top of the tree is the nearest point to the cloud, and, since the tree is a better conductor than the air, a line drawn vertically through it to the cloud marks the shortest and easiest course along which the electricity may pass. If, when the charged cloud arrives directly over this point, the tension is sufficient to overcome the resistance along the line, a discharge will take place, and the tree will be struck. But if the tension be not sufficient, the cloud will pass harmlessly over. Hence it appears that a person standing during a thunder-storm beneath a tree so situated is exposed to some risk. On no account, therefore, should the traveler take refuge under an isolated tree; generally he will do well to avoid its neighborhood altogether; but, should he be overtaken on the plain with no shelter near, the tree may still be made to afford him some protection. If he take up a position near it, but not under its branches, he will probably escape unhurt should the lightning descend upon it. The safest distance from a tree is that which is equal to its height. To approach much nearer than this is to incur the risk of being within the influence of its stroke; to remain at a much greater distance away is to place one's self in the same conditions of isolation as the tree itself. It will have been remarked by all observers of the phenomenon that whenever a tree has been struck by lightning it has generally occupied an isolated position. In describing the position as one of isolation, however, it is not meant that the tree is necessarily standing alone, but that it is not one of a numerous group. When there are many trees together, their collective conductivity is often sufficient to cause an indestructive discharge of the electricity. This is especially likely to happen when the trees are wet with rain, for then their surfaces are covered with a film of water, which is a good conductor. For this reason the danger from lightning is much less after rain has begun to fall than before, when everything is dry. It appears, therefore, that the safest situation during a thunder-storm is in the midst of a wood, particularly if the neighborhood of the tallest trees be avoided. In such a place of shelter the traveler may take refuge in full assurance that he will there be effectually shielded from harm. The greatest risk of injury from lightning is undoubtedly incurred by persons traveling across a wide and very flat plain, because in such a situation they are the only elevated objects. To lessen the risk, which may here be somewhat serious, advantage should be taken of whatever undulations of surface may exist, to keep upon the lowest ground. No doubt the prostrate position would in these circumstances afford greater security than the erect. It happens not infrequently that animals are killed by lightning under a tree to which they had betaken themselves for shelter. In these cases the tree is struck partly in consequence of its isolation, and partly on account of the presence of the animals beneath it. Usually there are several, and often many of them assembled together, huddled probably by terror into contact one with another. The air, heated by their bodies, rises above them laden with moisture, derived mainly from their breath. Who has not noticed the cloud of vapor that in the early morning and in certain states of the weather hangs over a flock of sheep or a herd of kine? The column of moist air ascending through the branches of the tree toward the cloud offers, in consequence of the comparatively high conductivity of water, a favorable passage for the electricity. A herd of cattle under an isolated tree is thus exposed to a double risk; also it is evident that these animals are in the open country less secure from injury than human beings, who cannot affect the atmosphere in a like degree.

Bread Upon the Waters.

In 1853 Miss Myra Kellogg, eldest daughter of the late Simeon Kellogg, and sister of Mark H. Kellogg, who fell beside Gen. Custer on the Little Big Horn, was married in this city to Mr. Truman J. Safford, who had represented Green county in our Legislature in 1852, and who, in the year above named, had removed to the promising village of La Crosse. The next spring, however, the young couple moved down into Iowa, and, we believe, settled on a farm, and several years since went into Dakota. He was an honest, hard-working man, but never succeeded in accumulating much of this world's riches. Four years since, just after the evening meal had been eaten, a dirty, ragged, foot-sore tramp called at his house and begged for something to eat, saying that he was on his way to California, but had had hard luck, having been taken sick after starting. Mr. Safford made him welcome, and his wife went to work and cooked supper for the stranger. After partaking of the meal prepared, they allowed the tramp to remain over night, and, becoming interested in the stranger, he was entertained for a week, during which time he recuperated his health, and, bidding them good-by, started on for California. Two months since, the stranger who, during his four years' absence in California, had "struck it rich," came back to Dakota and inquired out his old entertainers, and, in disguise, again spent the night under Mr. Safford's roof. The tramp was particular to inquire into the circumstances of Mr. Safford, and was told by that gentleman that he had "plenty of hard work to do, but very little money." The next morning the tramp departed without making himself known, and the conversation and incident had been forgotten, when Mr. and Mrs. Safford received, through the Postoffice, a sealed package which contained the deed of one of the finest farms in their neighborhood, having a good house, barn, stock, horses, wagons, agricultural implements, and everything complete, which was accompanied by an explanatory letter, stating that he wished them to accept the deed of this farm, which he had purchased especially for those who divided with him when in need, and treated him kindly when foot-sore and poor, and assured them that he was the tramp they entertained years before. Volumes could not say more, and Mr. and Mrs. Safford are now enjoying the gift made them by the stranger.—La Crosse (Wis.) Democrat.

Legend of a Musket.

Mark Twain tells the following story, related by a fellow-passenger, who, bantered about his timidity, said he had never been scared since he had loaded an old Queen Anne musket for his father once, whereupon he gave the following:

You see, the old man was trying to learn me to shoot blackbirds and beasts that tore up the young corn and such things, so that I could be of some use about the farm, because I wasn't big enough to do much. My gun was a single-barreled shot-gun, and the old man carried an old Queen Anne musket that weighed a ton, made a report like a thunderclap and kicked like a mule. The old man wanted me to shoot the musket sometime, but I was afraid. One day, though, I got her down and took her to the hired man and asked him to load her up, because it was out in the field. Hiram said:

"Do you see those marks on the stock—an X and V, on each side of the Queen's crown? Well, that means ten balls and five slugs—that's her load."

"But how much powder?"

"Oh," he says, "it don't matter; put in three or four handfuls."

So I loaded her up that way, and it was an awful charge—I had sense enough to see that—and started out. I leveled her on a good many blackbirds, but every time I went to pull the trigger I shut my eyes and winked. I was afraid of her kick. Toward sundown I fetched up to the house, and there was the old man waiting on the porch,

"Been out hunting, have ye?"

"Yes, sir," says I.

"What did you kill?"

"Didn't kill anything, sir; didn't shoot her off—was afraid she'd kick." I knew blamed well she would.

"Gimme that gun!" the old man said, as mad as sin.

And he took aim at a sapling on the other side of the road, and I began to drop back out of danger, and the next moment I heard the earthquake and saw the Queen Anne whirling end over end in the air, and the old man spinning around on one heel, with one leg up and both hands on his jaw, and the bark flying from that old sapling like there was a hail storm. The old man's shoulder was set back three inches, his jaw turned black and blue, and he had to lay up for a week. Cholera or nothing else can scare me the way I was scared that time.

Perils of Base-Ball Playing.

The actuary of a life-insurance company has prepared a table of statistics full of matter, deep and dangerous, regarding the mortality and casualties resulting from too assiduous attention to mastering the national game. His figures show that during the ball season in this country the monthly death-rate from ball-playing is 0.04; the number of cases of concussion of the brain is 4.7; incipient heart disease, 5.103; dislocation of the hip, 0.01; fracture of the shoulder-blade, 1.01; compound fracture of the sternum, 0.0002; broken ribs, 25.012; dislocation of the spinal column resulting in permanent disability, 0.00001; fracture of the arm, including fore-arm and above the elbow, 19.3; dislocation of the elbow, 7.05; sprained wrist, 47.07; broken fingers, 352.02; fracture of the hip, 0.03; dislocation of the knee, 1.006; sprained ankle, 15.03; injuries to the foot and toes, necessitating surgical aid, but not causing permanent injury, 225.09. In addition to the above rather suggestive array which recounts injuries resulting in death or the fracture of bones, including dislocation, he demonstrates that there are 197.01 noses broken and 473.05 teeth knocked out.—Utica Herald.

Clear the Way

For the escape from the system of its waste and debris, which, if retained, would vitiate the bodily fluids and overthrow health. That important channel of exit, the bowels, may be kept permanently free from obstructions by using the non-griping, gently acting and agreeable cathartic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which not only liberates impurities, but invigorates the lining of the intestinal canal when weakened by constipation or the unwise use of violent purgatives. The stomach, liver and urinary organs are likewise reinforced and aroused to healthful action by this beneficent tonic and corrective, and every organ, fiber, muscle and nerve experiences a share of its invigorating influence. Unobjectionable in flavor, a most genial and wholesome medicinal stimulant, and, owing its efficacy to botanic sources exclusively, it is the remedy best adapted to household use on account of its safety, wide scope and speedy action.

A DANGEROUS Sickness can often be averted by prompt use of remedies; so if you have any disease of that delicate organ, the Heart, do not delay, nor promise yourself that you will be better in time, but procure a bottle of Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR, and find relief. It is guaranteed to cure all symptoms of Heart Disease, either organic or sympathetic. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send for a pamphlet of testimonials to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H. The HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

MEDICAL students will be pleased to learn that the Faculty of the Louisville Medical College (Louisville, Ky.,) now give three complete courses of lectures in seventeen months, and so arrange their prices that a student saves $297 in his medical education, and gains his third course of lectures; all other colleges give, in this time, only two courses. Beneficiary privileges are limited, we see, to five per cent. of the class. Next session begins October 1, 1878. Students should at once apply, as above, for catalogues.

EVERYBODY knows that, so long as there is proud flesh in a sore or wound, it will not heal. The obstacle is speedily removed and the flesh reunited by HENRY'S CARBOLIC SALVE, the finest embodiment in existence of that supreme purifier, carbolic acid. Its emollient ingredients modify its pungent acid basis, so that it never cauterizes, stings or scarifies the diseased part. Sores and eruptions of all kinds are cured by it. All Druggists sell it.

GRACE'S Salve, manufactured by SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Boston, is becoming more and more popular every day, and its sales are rapidly increasing. It cures Cuts, Burns, Scalds, Felons, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ulcers, Flesh Wounds, &c. 25 cents a box. By mail 35 cents.

APHONIA BANISHED.

THE DUMB SPEAK.—Prompted by sympathy a St. John druggist induced a daughter of Joseph Armstrong, Esq., of Greenhead, to substitute Fellows' Hypophosphites in place of using a blister, which had been recommended to restore her power of speaking. The surprise was as delightful to our apothecary as to the patient, when, an hour after taking the first dose, the lady returning, audibly thanked him for having restored her voice.

The unique strengthening effect produced upon the nerves and muscles explains the vitalizing efficacy of Fellows' Hypophosphites in Wasting Diseases, Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Congestion of the Lungs, Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, Debility from long illness, such as Diphtheria, Fevers, Excesses in Life, or Irregular Habits, Prostration from residence in unhealthy localities or hot countries—from Nervous or Mental Depression, Hypochondria, etc.

Fellows' Hypophosphites is the most genial blood and flesh-producing agent known.

The name of JAMES I. FELLOWS, the inventor, is seen in water-mark upon the yellow wrapper, by holding it before the light. To avoid disappointment, use none but Fellows' Hypophosphites.

Gov. James D. Williams and Hon. David S. Gooding will address the people of DeKalb county at Auburn, Monday afternoon August 26th, 1878.

Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees at Waterloo Thursday afternoon, September 19th. Put the Democratic house in order for a grand reception.

Meeting of the Democratic Central Committee.

Notice is hereby given that the members of the Democratic Central Committee ot DeKalb Co., will meet at their Committee Room in Auburn on Saturday, August 17th, 1878, for the transaction of business partaining to their interest. It is also expected that the candidates and as many democrats as can will attend the meeting of said Committee. By order of the Central Committee. W. L. BLAIR, Chair.

Marshal county has the distinction of having the only Greenback county ticket in the Thirteenth congressional district. Marshall county has the distinction, also, of being the only reliable Democratic county in the district. Now we would like to inquire if there is a necessity for the Greenback organization at all, why is it not necessary to make local nominations in Republican counties?—Plymouth Democrat.

Don't undertake to monopolize the Greenback business Bro. Dan, DeKalb county is even with you on the county ticket business, she too, is regarded as Democratic, and the inquiry as to the necessity for the Greenback organization can be put with considerable force here, more especially since the candidates on the Democratic ticket in this county are all known to be out and out Greenback Democrats.

The republican party of Laporte sold out its cannon, campaign torches, etc., to pay its old campaign debts. The democratic central committee bid them in. The republican party of Laporte county will be knocked off this fall to the democracy in the same way.—South Bend Herald.

Make it a "job lot," the democracy will take the whole state, kid-gloves, lime-kiln and all.

We invite the attention of every reader of the COURIER who takes any interest in politics, and desires the truth as to the slanderous items now being circulated by the Republican press of Indiana against Hon. D. W. Voorhees, to an article on the first page of this paper, wherein the Senator "sits down on the worn out lies."

The grandson of his grandfather elevated the bloody shirt at Richmond, Ind., last Friday evening. His effort to step into Morton's shoes as the leader of the Republican party of Indiana was a total failure. Alas, poor Benny! God—love's your competitor for the leadership.

Dan. Voorhees' "talk with an Enquirer man" as found on the first page of this paper, might be found interesting reading matter for Republican editors who have been "in labor" for several weeks concocting all manner of falsehood concerning that Honorable gentleman.

Hon. Franklin Landers' speech, delivered at LaFayette on last Saturday is one of the most convincing arguments on the question of finance that has been delivered thus far in the campaign. We will endeavor to publish some extracts from it next week.

The congressional convention at Kendalville yesterday endorsed Hon. John H. Baker, and nominated him for the third term in congress.

Col. Williams and Jno. B. Stoll are named in connection with the democratic congressional nomination in this district.

Choose Ye Between Them.

The Goshen Democrat in urging the nomination of a straight Democrat for Congress in this district, says; let us have the best man within the ranks of the party in the district placed upon the track to try conclusions with Mr. Baker on a straight democratic platform, incorporating the financial plank laid down by the state convention. We can see no reason why greenbackers should hesitate to give such a nomination their undivided support. The differences between the position taken by the republican and democratic conventions is radical, and leaves no room for hesitation between them on the part of the voter who would put a curb upon the encroachments of the money power and favors legislation on this question in the interests of the people rather than exclusively for the bondholders and monopolists.

If the adherents of the greenback or national party are in earnest in their desire to effect a reform in the financial affairs of the country, and are possessed of average intelligence, they will, in all cases where they have not the numbers to elect candidates of their own choosing give their support to the democracy, as reflecting more nearly than any other party their own views. But, if the movements is simply designed to open another avenue to office—to furnish another opportunity for disappointed aspirants from both the old parties to prosecute their plans for political preferment in a new field—then their action will be governed by policy rather than principle, and their votes be cast to further personal ends.

The platform enunciated by the democratic state convention embraces about all the practicable financial reforms contemplated by the greenbackers. It declares that national bank notes should be retired, and legal tender treasury notes to an equal amount be issued in lieu thereof. That greenbacks should be a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, save where expressly agreed to be paid in coin. That this money should be issued to the full extent of the business requirement of the country. That this, like all other money, should be subject to state taxations, for the restoration and unlimited coinage of the old standard silver dollar, and for the unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

The republican platform on the contrary was framed to meet the well known views of the secretary of the treasury, whose dogged and defiant determination to accomplish specie resumption in January next, at whatever cost to the country, and in contempt of the wishes of three-fourths of the people, it is pledged to support. The presiding officer of the convention which adopted this platform in his opening address referred to the members of the greenback party as "flat idiots," and suggested the propriety of erecting an "asylum for idiots" in this state for their special benefit.

Between these two parties the greenbacker must choose, and if he honestly entertains the sentiments ascribed to him, his vote will, as it should be, cast with the democracy.

If the national greenback labor party earnestly desires to benefit the laboring classes, if it is organized in the interest of reform and a better, wiser and more economical administration of national affairs, if it has for its object purity of character and honesty of purpose, with a firm conviction that a change of administration is the only salvation for the country, why is it that the leaders of that party are so explicit in denouncing the Democratic party as being equally guilty and alike responsible with the Republican party for the gross mismanagement, startling frauds and wholesale theiving of the last eighteen years, during which time the republican party alone has had the controling power? Why so enthusiastic in the abuse of bondholders and bankers, and in demanding that the people be represented by the hornyhanded sons of toil; when a large majority of their nominations for important positions as made up to this time, are capitalists with princely incomes, or professional men who would not stoop to do manual labor; most of whom would scarcely notice the men who honored them, in other than election times? Is it a fact that "Brick" Pomeroy, Ben Butler, "Plan" Buchanan and a host of other acknowledged leaders of the different factions are seeking personal aggrandizement and political favors at the hands of working men and disatified politicians? Is it the desires of such men that the toiling masses of the country are so anxious to gratify? Indications seem to point to a short life under such leadership, and the sooner Democrats who have been inclined to favor the greenback movement begin to consider the consequence of a division of votes on the questions most important to the public, upon which the Democratic party of Indiana stands pledged in unmistakable language, the sooner they will see the folly of a movement indirectly in the interest of the radical party. It is acknowledged that the main issues of the Democratic and Greenback parties are synonmous, then why divide forces in the great struggle? thereby allowing the combined strength of the radical party to gain the victory and continue in power the promoters and encouragers of a bonded aristocracy. Let us unite our forces and muster under the same banner in the pending battle, and thus secure to the American people another season of prosperity and happiness.

Col. I. B. McDonald.

Col. I. B. McDonald, of Whitley county, who stated in the Congressional Convention recently held at Ft. Wayne, that he was "satisfied that no soldier can receive a nomination at the hands of the Democracy of the Twelfth District," has joined the greenbackers, and is posted for a speech at Rome City on the 14th, inst. The Colonel had better have joined the Republican party, where the services of a Union soldier are appreciated.—Kendalville Standard.

Such is the character of squibs that have been going the rounds of the radical press for weeks; the Col., however, is not inclined to be flattered or driven into any false position by those who are seeking to injure both himself and the Democratic party, as will be seen by the following letter which we find in the Fort Wayne Sentinel:

COLUMBIA CITY, Ind., Aug. 3, 1878.
TO THE EDITOR OF THE SENTINEL:

DEAR SIR:—A very good friend at Decatur, Ind., writes me, asking as to whether I had joined the "nationals," I answered him very emphatically that I had not. Now I deem it not improper, under the existing circumstances, to define my position as to some matters connected with the issues in the present political canvass. Upon the issues connected with the finance question, I am what may be called a "Greenback" man. I have at all times been opposed to much of the pernicious radical legislation of the national congress as to the finances of the country. I regarded the legislation as connected with this question in 1869, in changing the character of the bonds, as an outrage. I said so at the time. I regarded the radical trick covertly made in 1873, demonetizing silver, as an outrage on the people of the whole country. I regarded the resumption act as the crowning outrage under the circumstances and condition of the country. I have regarded nearly all of the legislation of the radical congress since the acts of March 2nd, 1861, at which time $20,153,455 in treasury notes were issued; the act of July 17th, 1862, at which time the sum of $60,000,000 of demand treasury notes was issued, and the act of February 25, 1862, when the legal tender notes were issued, every act of the radical congress since the issue of the full legal tender notes were issued, has been in the interest of the money power and against the labor and muscle of the country. If all the "greenbacks" had contained all and full legal tender quality, for the payment of any and all debts, both public and private, duties on imports included, then we would have a different state of affairs. While our state platform might go a little further on this finance question, I say to all that I fully endorse the whole platform, and more particularly the following, to-wit:

The democracy of the State of Indiana, assembled in delegate convention, declare:

That national bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government an equal amount of treasury notes with full legal tender quality.

That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except such obligations only as are, by the terms of the original contracts under which they were issued, expressly made payable in coin.

That the right to issue paper money, as well as coin, is the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound business interests of the country may from time to time require.

That we are in favor of such legislation by congress as will authorize the taxation, by the states, of the United States notes in common with all other money.

That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to enact any further legislation for the funding of the national debts abroad, through the means of home syndicates or other methods; and we believe the true policy of the government and the best interests of the people would be subserved by legislating so as to distribute said debt among our people at home—affording them the most favorable and practicable opportunity for the investment of the savings in the funded debt of the United States.

That we are in favor of such legislation as shall fix the rate of interest at not exceeding six per centum per annum.

We demand the restoration of the silver dollar of 412½ grains to the coin of the country, and with full legal tender quality in the payment of all debts, both public and private; and that the coinage thereof shall be unlimited, and upon the same terms and conditions as may be provided for the coinage of gold.

That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

That we are in favor of the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and we declare that the fees and salaries of all public officers should be reduced.

That we are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt act.

When the democratic state convention unanimously adopted the above, I was in duty bound, as a democrat, to stand by the same. All good democrats and "greenback" men can certainly endorse these doctrines. The fight in this contest is one squarely between the democracy and the radical party. While there are some most excellent men and gentlemen in this "national" movement, and while there are many that are bitterly opposed to the radical legislation on the finance question, I cannot but think that it would be to their interest and the interest of the whole country, for them to vote with the democracy, and help drive from power the party which is now holding power by one of the most stupendous frauds known to this or any other country, except Mexico. Let us turn this party of fraud out of power, and then go to work to relieve the people as fast as possible from the effects of radical legislation, which has well nigh bankrupted the whole country.

In conclusion, let me say that I am a full fledged greenback democrat; want to see a gold dollar, a silver dollar, and "greenback" dollar, all worth 100 cents each, with full and complete legal tender qualities, for all and every purpose. Believing that the democracy will stand by the whole people, and interests alike I shall, if I live, cast my vote for the whole democratic ticket, state, district and county. If, perchance, men who desire a nomination, get defeated, and their ambition is a little thwarted for the time being. They should not set the "sorehead" at their party and principles and run off to some other party. If men have real or fancied grievances politically, let them stay where they can correct the same. If a man loses an article, let him find it where he lost it. So we will stand by the democracy, not for place, but for principle.

ISAIAH B. MCDONALD.

B. D. HARRIS, Deputy. 33-4w.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein John J. Kinney is plaintiff, and Perry Blodget et ux is defendants, requiring me to make the sum of one thousand, eight hundred and seventy-eight dollars and thirty two cents, ($1878 32) with interest on said decree and costs I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY, SEPT. 7th, A. D. 1878.

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M. of said day, at the door of the Court House in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate to wit:

The south half of the south east quarter of section twenty-three, (23), township thirty-four, (34), north of range thirteen, (13), east, containing eighty (80), acres, in DeKalb county, Indiana.

And if such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief what ever from valuation or appraisement laws.

OBITUARY.

Died in this place at ten o'clock Sunday evening, August 11th, 1878, Wyllys Griswold, aged seventy-four years, ten months and twenty-one days.

He was born in Litchfield county Connecticut, and there resided and married Abigail Clemens who still survives him, on the 9th of February, 1826, until 1837 when he moved into Eastern Ohio, and from thence to this place in 1848. Over fifty-two years he was a devoted, kind and affectionate husband and over fifty years an earnest and zealous advocate and exemplar in the temperance cause. Over forty-seven years a devout, humble and sincere christian and member of the Presbyterian church—always a faithful and assiduous worker in the Sunday School. Over twenty-five years a member of the Independent order of Odd Fellows, and over twenty years a Master Mason.

A man of intelligence, integrity and energy, he has during his residence in our midst, been frequently selected by his neighbors to fill many offices of trust, having been Recorder of this county from 1855 to 1859, a justice of the peace and nearly, if not all the lower offices in our township and village corporations.

On all questions in which the good of society and mankind were at issue, the subject of this article was always found in word and deed, whether it be the church, the temperance cause, the Sunday school, the charitable orders or in public enterprises in the erection of public edifices, the building of railroads churches, school houses, highways or even sidewalks, he was the warmest friend, advocate and promoter. Whatever would encourage and disseminate religion, morals and education, found in him an earnest supporter, and whatever would render life more pleasant, convenient and enjoyable he was always found in the foremost ranks of, either as the originator, the prime mover or the steadfast upholder—whether in the chair as moderator, on the floor as an advocate in the local meetings of our citizens, in all these good works he was the same humble, earnest worker, and his heart was so much bound up in that which he thought would redound to society's good, that he never felt ashamed to perform even the most menial part. He thought it not above the dignity of manhood to act as the sexton of his church, the Sunday, public and singing schools, the charitable orders to which he belonged, or to make cheerful and comfortable any place for a public meeting in which was held any society which had in view those things which were so dear to him. Although of but limited means, he gave freely of what he was blessed, to the poor with an encouraging word and friends advice, whether the cause of their penury was of their own indiscretion or otherwise.

Indeed his place in our community, churches and their auxiliaries in the different classes of schools and in all various phases of a well regulated society, will be difficult to fill, if in fact it ever can be. The members of the church will loose his cheerful admonitions, the officers of the schools their most intelligent adviser, the children their kind instructor, and the poor and unfortunate their charitable friend and kind benefactor, will miss him and many years will elapse before the name of Squire Griswold will be forgotten.

But he is at rest and has gone to that reward which is inherited by the humble, charitable and zealous christian. His funeral was largely attended on Tuesday by the citizens of this place and neighboring villages, from the Presbyterian church. The services were performed by the pastor, Mr. H. Johnson, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Fowler, of Waterloo, and Revs. Ward and Rice, of this place, after which his body was interred in the cemetery of which he was the proprietor, and in which he spent so much time and means to adorn and beautify, with the imposing and feeling ceremonies of the masonic brethren.

In his life he exemplified the teachings of Him "who spake as never man spake" with Friendship, Love and Truth and with Faith in God, Hope in immortality and Charity to all mankind.

Indeed it was a fitting sequel that a life of so many years of religious toil, should at the closing hours of the quiet, beautiful Sabbath evening, when all nature seemed in repose and wrapt in the soft, silvery light of the orb of night, should pass away. So he too in the bright halo of the hope of a life beyond the tomb has quietly and peacefully breathed his last.

M. SEILER, School Sup't.

WATERLOO, IND., Aug. 11, '78

MR. EDITOR.—The campaign was fairly commenced here on Thursday the 8th inst., in joint discussion by two of our citizens of the republican and greenback persuasion, and the arguments were very strikingly enforced by cane and fist until interfeared with by the by-standers, when they shook hands and retired in good order. One of the parties had occasion for the service of an M. D to repair damages, but there was nothing serious—a black eye or two and some cuts about the head and face. Is it not disgraceful for men of pretended respectability to make such an exibition of themselves; what an example to the rising generation. If it had been some poor devil from out of the town they would have been hussled off to the cooler, and then been brought up before a justice of the peace and fined, but as one was a member of the bar, and the other an apostle of the greenbackers; and also a member of the bar (not the same kind of a bar), there was nothing said about it, and now everything is quiet. We hope not to be treated to another such an exhibition during the campaign. S. B, Corunna Items.

—MR. EDITOR, Sir.—Seeing that some of your correspondents are reporting the yield of grain per acre, I thought I would do likewise:

—There was one hundred and fifty-three loads of wheat unloaded at the Corunna elevator on last Saturday. That and the wheat that was already in filled it up full to the rafters.

—Mr. Henry Becher threshed the wheat that grew on four acres of land and it yielded him one hundred and fifty-six bushels, machine measure, which is considered pretty good for this country, being thirty-nine bushels to the acre.

FRANCIS.

Concord Items.

—Daniel Baker's wife is quite ill.

—Farmers will be late with their seeding.

—The protracted effort of dances ended last Friday night with successful results.

—Considerable dissatisfaction exists among Concord Republicans, regarding the Republican candidates. No wonder.

—Miss Josie Rush, of Auburn, is visiting her sister near Concord. She occupied the organists place at the M. E. church last Sabbath.

Boys you want to be in a hurry and hunt up the other half of yourself before election time and get the license, they are cheaper than ever—yes, he gives them away.

SONNY.

Butler Center Items.

—Elon Andrews has gone to Mich.

—Amos Roberts, of this place, has been very sick.

Wm. Merica has a felon on each hand. He never gets sleepy.

—Paul Long received serious injuries last week by falling on a pail.

—James Smith, of Richland township, gave our town a call last Saturday.

—Bro. Burns, a Winebrenarian minister, preached at Cedar Creek last week

We hope the good old temperance members will come out next Sunday night and talk business to the people.

—John Ammons proposes to do his own horse-shoe pitching in the woods by himself, so that no one can beat him.

OCCASIONAL.

Spencerville Items.

—Mr. C. Silberg has returned from Michigan.

—Wilmington ghosts are haunting the vicinity of Spencerville.

—The festival given by the band Saturday evening was a success.

—An effort is being made to move the M. E. parsonage to this place.

—Miss M. Knight has moved her millinery goods into the house formerly occupied by Dr. Houghton.

—A son of Oscar Spitler had his arm dislocated at the elbow joint a few days ago, caused by a fall.

—Mr. Nicholas Jones died Monday evening, August 5th, aged 88 years, 9 months and 20 days.

—We do not know how friend Charlie would be on a stump speech, but we do know he is the best spouter in town.

Butler-tp. Items.

—Farmers are busy plowing.

—Sunday school at Cedar Creek has nearly "played out."

—J. B. Ross and family intend moving to Texas soon.

—Amos M. Roberts, of the Center, is quite sick with billious fever.

—Two physicians have recently located in this township, one at Cedar Creek and the other at St. John's. Brace up Brother, don't let that "liver complaint" trouble you any more, and you will hold your own with any of them.

—A young child of Sanford Holbrook's died very suddenly last week. It was left in bed asleep in the morning apparently well, and not getting awake at its usual time, Mrs. H. went into the room and found it dead. It is supposed it died with a fit.

—By "Occasional's" items of last week it appears he has changed his political sentiments somewhat, as he has been the leader of the greenback party in this township, one of the first to join a club, and the only delegate from this township to the greenback county convention. We are not surprised though for we well knew if he carefully considered both sides of the question and compared the nominations, he would not "go back on" his old party. C.

St. Joe Items.

—Quinine is in good demand.

—E. Bell is on the sick list with chills and fever.

—A daughter of Mr. Corbin is very sick with typhoid fever.

—Geo. W. Woodcox's youngest child lies sick with congestion of the brain.

—Concord bowery dance did not pan out very well, only four ladies being present.

—The base ball club of Bear Creek has been furnished with a bright new uniform.

—John Somerlot has commenced work on his new residence, and will soon have it under good headway.

—The wife of Randolph Sechler, near Orangeville, died very suddenly on Friday morning, August 9th. Disease, gastric fever.

—The greenbackers of this vicinity we think are about persuaded that, like the Prodigal son, they will return to their father's house and partake of the feast of the fatted calf.

—We were informed by the telegraph operator that Jack Downey, formerly a conductor on the B. & O. R. R., was killed on Saturday at Bowling Green, Kentucky, by falling between the cars of a moving train.

—Democrats are jubilent and Republicans despondent over the coming election. Fight it out, gents; we will help you all we can, we think Republican chances small, and will try and make them smaller.

THE NEW PARTY.

For the COURIER.

The fact that the Greenback party exists, is perhaps to be taken as sufficient evidence that it has in it some of the elements of life, but whether it has vitality enough to enable it to play a part of any importance in the political campaigns of the near future, remains to be seen. The present time is regarded as being peculiarly favorable to the organization of a new party. For ten years the non-capitalists of the country have been suffering under the iron heeled tyrony of the money power. Such, indeed, has been the working of our pernicious financial system that, although the granaries of the farmer all over the land are bursting with their unparalleled fullness of corn, the laboring man is suffering the keenest distress because he can not earn money enough to buy his bread. It is urged, moreover, that both of the existing parties are old. That the issues upon which they were formed are gone; consequently those parties exist only in name. That the administration of public affairs has been characterized by a degree of corruption unparalleled in the history of the country. Rogues in the public offices has been the rule, and honest men the exceptions. The voice of the people has been smothered at the ballot box by villainous officials, and members of the national congress have sold themselves for gold. There are, therefore, thousands of men of both parties who, knowing that they cannot do worse, and hoping to do better, are ready to join the new party.

The new party professes to be organized to meet the exigencies of the times. It offers to the people more money, relief from an unjust system of taxation, and fewer rogues in the government offices. Such a promise is calculated to render the party popular with the great mass of the people; hence its growth in many sections of the country has been unusually rapid.

It may be said that the object which the party professedly aims to secure to the people, commends itself to every one who is a lover of justice, and who desires the highest welfare of all classes of our citizens; but there are many who object to the method which it proposes to adopt in securing the object.

There are men who would scorn to identify themselves with a party which would secure to the people temporary financial advantages at the expense of the national honor. Nor would they embrace a theory, no matter how plausible it might appear, which a little thought would show to be a delusion. Such men are in doubt concerning the new party.

That party proposes to pay off the national debt at once. As a means to that end it is proposed that the government immediately issue greenbacks in sufficient volume to pay off the entire debt, principal and interest. This extraordinary proposition is one of profound significance. It has a direct bearing upon one of the most fundamental, and therefore the most important principles relating to the functions of a republican government. To noble minded men,—men who place the national honor above personal convenience, it suggests two questions which must be settled in their minds before they will vote the greenback ticket. Those are, first: Suppose the government should issue greenbacks in sufficient volume to cover the face of its bonds and the interest thereon, and by declaring them a legal tender, force the holders of government bonds to accept them, would that be paying the debt?

Second: Would such a course be honorable?

Now, a greenback is not money. It is only a promise to pay money. It is in all essential respects a government bond. It differs from the ordinary government bond, however, in two important particulars; it bears no interest, and it specifies no time at which it is to be redeemed. It is simply a paper upon which the government says to the holder, "I owe you five, ten or a hundred dollars, (as the case may be.) I have at present no money with which to pay, (else why issue notes at all?) and possibly I never shall. I received from you real value. I give you this as a promise that sometime I will pay you therefor. Just when I shall be able to pay you I do not know; and because I do not know I have specified no time of payment. This bill, being only a promise, is of itself no value, nevertheless, I command it to be a legal tender; by which I mean that you must take it and use it as though it were money until such time as I may be able and willing to give you money for it."

We have said that the greenback is a bond because it is a promise to pay. Now, we do not see in what sense the national debt is paid when the government merely takes up one set of bonds by means of another which it calls "greenbacks."

The second question is equally perplexing. A bona fide contract is just as binding upon a state as upon an individual. Such a contract exists to-day between the government and those who hold its bonds. Whether the contract was made wisely or not has nothing to do with its binding character. It was made by the people through their representatives, and the national honor is pledged to its fulfillment, no matter how much duplicity there may have been on the one side, and grasping avarice on the other. The contract was made in an emergency the most extraordinary in our national history. The government was prosecuting a war at the prodigious cost of three million dollars per day! To meet this enormous expenditure, unusual methods had to be employed to raise money. Of these the most effective was the issuing of bonds under stipulations that assured their rapid sale. They were to draw a high rate of interest. That interest was to be payable in gold, and the bonds were to be exempt from taxation. These were sufficient inducements. Capitalists bought the bonds, and the government was able to meet the expenses of the war. Of these bonds some will not be due for years. Does the greenback party propose to compromise the national honor by paying off the bonds now, instead of when due, and by paying the interest on them in greenbacks instead of gold, as per contract?

We ask these questions not by way of eliciting controversy, but to secure information for ourselves and for others who may be in like difficulty. Will some enthusiastic greenbacker lead us into the light?

Our fellow townsman H. C. Peterson, was nominated by the Republicans yesterday at Kendalville, for Prosecutor in this Judicial district.

The speech of Hon. D. W. Voorhees at South Bend has furnished provender for the Republican leaders, which they are unable to masticate.

Senator Matthews refuses to testify before the Potter committee, and Butler proposes to report him to the house for their action in the matter.

TOWN TALK.

The Star sells a fine unlaundried, all-linen bosom and cuff shirt for 75c that sells all over the town for $1.00.

Other clothing men keep pacing up and down in front of the Star Clothing House, and wonder "how" the thing is done.

"They can't sell at such and such a price. It's mere talk," etc. Still our people get convinced on visiting the Star.

Brother clothiers engage men to buy up our cheap suits for them; still they say we are not offering bargains.

We again assert that we sell not sell our goods to merchants, our customers shall derive all the advantages of low prices.

Our sales in two days were $2,300.00.

All our citizens who study economy, quality and style, should inspect the stock of Sam, Pete & Max.

An extra force of salesmen in attendance at the Star Clothing House.

As we have stores in all the principal cities in the west, we have facilities for buying that small dealers do not possess.

8 oz. Duck Overalls for 40c at the Star Clothing House. They are selling at 75c elsewhere.

A German friend of ours who has the misfortune to be in the same business as we are in, stood in front of the Star Clothing House, threw up both hands, and exclaimed, "Mine Gott, vat a crowd of beeples!"

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

AT Philadelphia, a few days since, a church tent, in which a large congregation had assembled to listen to the preaching of the gospel, was struck by lightning, creating the wildest consternation. A little girl was killed, two children dangerously wounded, and several other persons prostrated by the electric fluid....R. D. Conant, cashier of the Eliot National Bank, of Boston, is a defaulter to the extent of $70,000. Speculation. ....Michael Winn, of West Randolph, Vt., fatally shot his wife and babe while they were in bed sleeping, and killed himself to avoid arrest.

BY a collision on the Vermont Central railroad, near Northfield Farms, one night last week, the engineer, fireman and one passenger were killed.

ROYAL B. CONANT, the defaulting cashier of the Eliot National Bank, of Boston, has been held for trial in bonds of $20,000.... Vernon Brothers' paper mill, near Northampton, Mass., has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $112,000.

THE WEST.

A SALT LAKE dispatch announces the total destruction, by fire, of the town of Alta, Utah. The place contained about 200 wooden buildings, all of which are now in ashes. The loss is estimated at $100,000, and is the most disastrous that has ever visited the Territory.

CHICAGO papers announce the failure of Mr. James H. McVicker, the proprietor and manager of Chicago's leading theater. His embarrassment was caused by his liability as a bondsman for David A. Gage, the defaulting City Treasurer of Chicago. Judgment was given against himself and his fellow-bondsmen for $500,000—a sum which the veteran manager felt that he never would be able to pay. The public generally will be gratified to learn that Mr. McVicker will maintain his position as the manager of his theater, and that the latter institution will not be closed on account of his financial misfortune. The theater will reopen on the 19th of August, and will continue, as heretofore, to maintain its position as the leading place of amusement in the West.

A SILVER CITY (Idaho) dispatch says there are now over 100 volunteers out from Boise and Owyhee in pursuit of the savages. The latter are traveling leisurely through the country helping themselves to stock along the line of march....A San Francisco dispatch says that "Michael Reese, news of whose death at Wallenstein, Germany, has just been received, leaves an estate approximated at $10,000,000 or more, and, with the exception of Senator Sharon, was the largest real-estate owner in the city. Some years ago he made a will leaving the great bulk of his estate to benevolent institutions."

THREE women were yesterday killed in the Mississippi bottom, ten miles west of Jonesboro, Ill., by the fury of the elements. The top of an oak tree was twisted off and fell upon them while they were running toward a house for shelter.....The Topeka (Kansas) National Bank has failed. It is claimed that the bank is able to pay in full all depositors. ....Late news received from Montana indicate that the Nez Perces Indians, who escaped and joined Sitting Bull after their defeat at Bear Paw mountain last fall by the troops under Gen. Miles, are returning to their former home in Idaho in small bands.

CHICAGO elevators contain 325,944 bushels of wheat; 1,052,476 bushels of corn; 128,730 bushels of oats; 72,242 bushels of rye, and 253,613 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 1,833,005 bushels, against 1,744,-932 bushels at this period last year.... At Fort Keogh, D. T., a gambler named Collins shot Bigler Thomas, of the Twenty-fifth Cavalry. The soldiers of his company surrounded the jail and wounded the Sheriff. The Sheriff then abandoned the jail, and a fight ensued between the prisoner, Collins, and the soldiers. A soldier named Hurley was killed, and another named Sanders wounded. Another company of soldiers put down the riot.

A TERRIBLE disaster occurred to a passenger train on the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis railroad, near Mingo Junction, Ohio, a few days ago. A passenger train, running at a speed of forty miles an hour to make up lost time, collided with a freight train coming in an opposite direction, was thrown down an embankment thirty feet high, and completely wrecked. Fifteen persons were killed on the spot, thirty-three badly wounded, several of them beyond hope of recovery, and fifteen slightly hurt. Most of the victims were English and German immigrants who were on their way to the West. The accident took place just before daybreak. A dense fog prevailed at the time, which obscured the view and added to the misery of the situation. The cause of the calamity is attributed to the conductor of the freight train, who acknowledged that his watch stopped twenty minutes before the collision, but without his knowledge.... Encouraged by the absence of troops, the available forces having all been sent to Idaho to look after the hostile Bannocks, the Arizona Indians are becoming troublesome. Numbers of them have gathered in the neighborhood of Yuma, creating great alarm among the people, who have armed themselves and made preparations for defense.

THE SOUTH.

ROBERT THOMPSON, colored, and Mary Cross, white, who were married in 1877, and who have since lived together as man and wife, were arraigned before a magistrate in Alexandria, Va., last week, and committed to jail to await the action of the Corporation Court. The penalty fixed by the law for the principals is confinement in the Penitentiary not less than two years.

THE yellow-fever pestilence is increasing at an alarming pace in New Orleans. A peculiarity is observable that the disease attacks all classes and in all localities in the city, the native and colored elements, usually exempt, suffering along with the rest. It is agreed, moreover, that the pestilence is of home origin, and not imported from tropical points, and that the filthy condition of the city, arising from insufficient drainage and lack of proper sanitary measures by the local authorities, is the cause of its existence and rapid spread. The most extraordinary precautions are being taken by the river towns above New Orleans to ward off the approach of the epidemic.

THE prevalence of yellow fever at New Orleans has isolated that city almost as effectually as though it were located in another hemisphere. Towns in Texas and on the Mississippi river are enforcing quarantine regulations with such strictness as to impose absolute non-intercourse with the Crescent City. At Vicksburg a New Orleans man who persisted in landing from a steamboat was fined $250 and forcibly ejected from the city.

THE three internal revenue officers under indictment in South Carolina for the killing of an illicit distiller, while resisting arrest, have been surrendered to the Federal authorities, in obedience to the writ of habeas corpus recently issued, and there will probably be no more trouble about the case.... In the United States Court at Charleston, S. C., last week, 138 illicit distillers pleaded guilty with the understanding that judgment be suspended and they no more violate the law.

POLITICAL.

THE Democrats of Delaware have nominated John W. Hall for Governor....Eugene Hale has been renominated for Congress in Maine.

THE new Legislature of North Carolina is Democratic by a large majority. There will be a lively fight for the Senatorship. Senator Merrimon is a candidate for re-election. His most formidable competitor is Gov. Vance. ....The Democrats of the Tenth Ohio Congressional District have nominated Gen. Tom Ewing for re-election to Congress....Hon. Godlove S. Orth has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Ninth Indiana District....Maj. E. A. Burke, who figured in the celebrated Wormley Hotel conference, has been nominated for State Treasurer by the Louisiana Democratic convention. Burke has developed from a common day laborer, in ten years, to great wealth and controlling political influence....Four delegates to the Louisiana Democratic State Convention, who offered to sell their votes, were summarily expelled from the hall.

BEVERLY DOUGLASS, the fighting Virginia Congressman, has been defeated for renomination....The Republicans of Colorado have nominated F. W. Pitkin for Governor, and James B. Belford for Congress....The South Carolina Republicans held their State Convention at Columbia last week, and resolved to make no nominations for State offices.

GENERAL.

THE army Commission authorized by the recent session of Congress, and which has been holding secret sessions at a Virginia watering-place, adjourned last week without, it is believed, coming to any practical conclusion....Bob Ingersoll, accompanied by his family, sailed for Europe last week, intending to remain abroad three months.

FAILURES: The Mastin Bank, of Kansas City, Mo., holding large amounts of public funds, including $250,000 belonging to the State of Missouri; the Crowther Iron Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., liabilities $160,000; the Cincinnati grocery firm of R. M. Bishop & Co., of which the Governor of Ohio is the head, liabilities $360,000; the marble-mills of Vail, Shortwell & Co., New York, liabilities $100,000. ....Lew Davis, a song and dance man with the California Minstrels, cut his throat in the dressing-room of Dockrell's Opera House, St. John, N. B., just before the commencement of the performance.

IN a recent trial of speed at Buffalo, the celebrated horse Rarus eclipsed all the records heretofore made in trotting, and put in the shade the 2:14 of Goldsmith Maid, which stood unequaled for so many years until Rarus trotted into the same notch at Cleveland. In the Buffalo race it was not expected that the horse would equal his Cleveland performance, as the track is not considered as fast as that at the former city, but in the second heat he trotted the mile in 2:13¼. The time of the heat was as follows: First quarter, 33½ seconds; second quarter, 32¼ seconds; third quarter, 32¾ seconds; fourth quarter, 34¾ seconds. Mile, 2:13¼. This performance entitles Rarus to the credit of the fastest heat on record, and he now stands credited with the fastest mile on record (2:13¼), the fastest mile on a half-mile track (2:16), the fastest first heat (2:14¼), the fastest second heat (2:13¼), the fastest third heat (2:14), and the fastest three consecutive heats on record (2:14¼, 2:15, 2:14).

GEORGE AVERY, John Parr, and Frank Dillworth were killed, and four other men seriously wounded, by the explosion of a boiler in a saw mill at Enterprise, W. Va....The city of Toronto, Canada, was visited, the other day, by a violent rain and hail storm, which damaged property to the amount of $500,000. Montreal was visited by a small section of the gale, preceded by a perceptible shock of earthquake.

THE authorities at Washington have advices from the Mexican border which indicate that the Mexicans are about to make a show of resistance to the passage of United States troops across the Rio Grande in pursuit of cattle-thieves. Several successful incursions have recently been made by the soldiers under Gen. Mackenzie, and Mexican dignity appears to have been wounded by these frequent expeditions.

THE International Monetary Congress met at Paris on Saturday, Aug. 10. The object of the conference is to bring about a greater uniformity of the coin system between nations, especially as regards the double gold and silver standard. The American delegates in the gathering are ex-Gov. Reuben E. Fenton, of New York; Prof. Walker, of Yale College, and Mr. Groesbeck, of Ohio. A similar monetary conference was held in Paris in 1867.

WASHINGTON.

COMMISSIONER RAUM has addressed a letter to Collectors of all districts in the South where troubles have arisen on account of illicit distilling, setting forth the willingness of the Government to deal leniently with all who will stop their violation of the law.

ADVICES have been received at the Interior Department that the railroad companies in the West intend to combine with the Union Pacific Railroad Company in fighting the recent decision of Secretary Schurz upon the question of title to land grants now held by railroad companies. Schurz' decision was, that after three years from the time work was completed all lands not then sold by the company should be subject to pre-emption. The railroad companies intend in every case where a settler moves on to lands under this decision to serve him at once with a writ of ejectment, which will have the practical effect of vitiating the decision of the Secretary, as no one settler or any combination of settlers can afford to fight the united capital of the railroad companies....The 4 per cent. bonds continue to go off "like hot cakes." The demand promises to be so heavy and continuous that the Secretary of the Treasury has ordered a resumption of work by the Government paper-mill.

ANOTHER call for the redemption of five million dollars' worth of 6 per cent. bonds has been issued by the Secretary of the Treasury. The funds for their redemption will be obtained from sales of 4 per cents. Interest will cease on the called bonds on the 5th of November....The capital was visited one day last week by one of the worst wind and rain storms which it has experienced in a long time. The wind bordered on a hurricane through the northwestern section of the city, and unroofed a large number of buildings. The damage to public and private property will reach at least $75,000.

THERE were coined in the United States mints in July, $89,000 in eagles and $1,847,000 in standard silver dollars, including minor coins. The value of coinage was $2,627,-983....The President and family and Secretary Sherman visited Newport last week.

MR. G. K. CHASE, an agent of the Department of Justice, who was sent out to investigate affairs in Utah, has returned to Washington, and, it is said, will shortly submit a report recommending the removal of Gov. Emory and Chief Justice Shaffer, both of whom have been playing into the hands of the Mormons....The President has commissioned Eugene J. Ball, of Indiana, as Consul at Pesth, Austria; Asa C. Prindle, now Commercial Agent at the Balise, Honduras, as United States Consul at Para, Brazil; and William Thompson, now Agent at Southampton, England, to be Consul at that port.

IT is stated from Washington that "our authorities have decided not to treat with Sitting Bull upon his arrival in this country, but to arrest him, with his principal followers, and hold them as prisoners of war."

FOREIGN.

SOME idea of the strength of the Socialist movement in Germany may be gleaned from the fact that in the recent Parliamentary elections they polled 30,000 votes in Hamburg, 12,000 in Altona, 7,-000 in Kiel, 10,000 in Breslau, 13,000 in Dresden, 14,000 in Leipsic, 11,000 in Elberfeld, 10,000 in Nurnberg, 6,500 in Hanover, 4,000 in Frankfort, and 4,000 in Stuttgart. ....Lord Hartington's resolution, condemning the course of the British plenipotentiaries at the Berlin Congress, was rejected in the House of Commons, by a vote of 338 to 195, and Plunkett's amendment, taking the opposite course, was adopted without a division.

LATE advices from South America state that a pestilence is sweeping the inhabitants of Bolivia, and a famine is threatened. In the smallest curacy in the Department of Cochabamba 600 bodies have been buried, while in Sipesipe 500 deaths have occurred, and the interment is daily augmented in number. The fields are desolated, crops remain ungathered, unclaimed cattle roam in all directions, almost all the dwellings are abandoned, and all those which are inhabited are so many scenes of death and disease. Hundreds of children are uncared for, and sustain their lives by eating grasshoppers. Many bodies, in some instances those of entire families, remain uninterred, because the grave-diggers are not sufficient in numbers to execute the painful duty.

IN his speech at the banquet given by the corporation of the city of London, a few days ago, Lord Beaconsfield quoted, in defense of his belief in the capacity of the Turks for civilization, a statement sent by American missionaries to the Emperor of Germany. In this paper the toleration enjoyed by Christians and the progress of education in Turkey since the Crimean war, are dwelt upon. The premier insisted that this testimony was superior to any official report, for "it was that of men of the highest principles and of sublime character, who devoted their lives to the benefit of their fellow creatures."....A cable dispatch announces reported negotiations between France and Turkey for the cession to the former of Rhodes and Scio, two important islands in the Grecian Archipelago, near to the west and southwest coast of Asia Minor. Rhodes has an area of 420 square miles and a population of 30,000; Scio an area of 508 square miles and a population of 62,000....Nobeling, who attempted to murder the Emperor of Germany, has made a second attempt to take his own life.... The complete returns of the German elections show the result to have been the return to Parliament of 98 Conservatives, 110 Liberals of various shades, and 96 Ultramontanes. In sixty-six cases second ballots will be necessary....The ratifications of the treaty of Berlin have been exchanged by all the powers except Turkey. The Sultan, however, has signified that he recognizes the validity of the treaty....Formal proclamation of the independence of Servia will be made at Belgrade on the 22d of this month. On the same day the rule of martial law will cease.

A BELGRADE dispatch says the excitement throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina is rapidly increasing as the Austrians advance, and the inhabitants are collecting in bands. The Austrians, advancing toward Mostar, in Herzegovina, fought a short engagement near Catlak with 500 insurgents; killed several of them and made some prisoners. Four Austrians were wounded. Austrian troops are also meeting with resistance in Bosnia. At the village of Zepce the hussars were received by the inhabitants with a volley, which was returned. They were again attacked in Zwornik, and seventy Austrians killed.

THERE are 47,000 Russians sick in Bulgaria, and constant reinforcements are necessary to keep up the effective army. Gens. Todleben and Schouvaloff are down with typhus....The Mark Lane Express reports the English wheat crop in fair condition, and thinks the yield will be an average one—that is, about thirty bushels to the acre.

THE Turks are slowly removing their men and material from Varna, one of the magnificent fortresses which Russia was unable to wrest from them by force of arms, but which strikes its colors to the authority of the treaties of San Stefano and Berlin. The evacuation will be completed in about two months. No movement toward the surrender of Batoum has yet been made, and the Russians are becoming urgent on that point....The fever is increasing in Cyprus alarmingly. Forty members of one British regiment have been attacked....Three thousand Montenegrins have joined the insurgents in Herzegovina....There are indications of an intention to proclaim a holy war in Bosnia.

RIGHT HON. WILLIAM E. FORSTER, the well-known Liberal leader, will visit America in the autumn....A marriage has been arranged between Prince Louis Napoleon, son of the Emperor Napoleon III., and Princess Thyra, third daughter of Christian IX., King of Denmark. The Princess Thyra is a sister of the Princess of Wales.

Bold Brigands.

An attack was recently made by brigands upon the village of Thor, in the Spanish province of Catalonia, while the population were at church. Eleven men, armed with daggers and revolvers, posted themselves at various points, six of them going to the church. Four stood at the door to prevent egress, while two walked boldly in and ordered the priest to conduct them to the vestry. After rifling his pockets there and taking all the valuables pertaining to the altar, they conducted him back, and with a low bow, asked him to continue the mass. They emptied the pockets of the principal members of the congregation, and then conducted them home by turns, taking all valuable articles there which were portable. After this they were reconducted to the church and guarded. The richest man of the place, named Chanso, was not only robbed, but carried off to a neighboring wood with his valet. In the evening, the valet was sent to Chanso's relatives with a request for $4,000 as ransom, if they wished to preserve his life. In the meantime, the neighboring villages were aroused, the forest was searched and three of the brigands were caught. The rest escaped, and Chanso was saved.

Toads as Pets.

Within a few days we have visited a house where great numbers of toads are cared for in the garden, where they follow members of the family about like kittens through the walks. Also, in the large cellar, where there are half a score or more, these social reptiles sit about, looking wisely upward while the churning is being done, and one old warty fellow has a favorite spot that he always occupies with evident satisfaction during the operation; it is on the boot-toe of the churner, a perch that he never quits so long as he is not shaken off.—Paterson (N. J.) Press.

IT is well known that persons who have been deprived of one or more of the senses commonly acquire increased acuteness in the remaining ones. The following case, cited by Dr. Erasmus Darwin, is a remarkable instance: "The late blind Justice Fielding walked in my room for the first time, when he once visited me, and, after speaking a few words, said, 'This room is about 22 feet long, 18 wide and 12 high;' all of which he guessed with the greatest accuracy by the ear."

A PIOUS French priest recently gave out an announcement of a procession to take place next day as follows: "If it rains in the morning the procession will take place in the afternoon, and, if it rains in the afternoon, the procession will take place in the morning.

USEFUL INFORMATION.

CLAY weighs 135 pounds to the cubic foot.

THERE are usually 225 sheets in a box of tin.

ONE THOUSAND bricks, closely stacked, occupy fifty-six cubic feet.

HAY, sprinkled with a little chloride of lime and left for an hour in a closed room, will remove the smell of new paint.

IN hoisting heavy machinery or other weights, by means of pulley blocks, if the ropes stretch and the blocks come together too soon, wet the rope, and the object will be elevated by the contraction of the rope without any other force.

TO CLEAN SMOKY MARBLE.—Brush a paste of chloride of lime and water over the entire surface; grease spots can be removed from marble by applying a paste of crude potash and whiting in this manner.

CARBOLIC SOAP.—There are two or three grades of carbolic soap. The toilet article is very excellent for human beings, as it destroys all odors and is very healing. The toilet is much weaker than the kind used for dumb animals. If children's heads were occasionally washed with carbolic toilet soap no insect would be there after the operation. It ought not to be put into the mouth, as it is a poison.

GLOSS STARCH.—For a gloss for shirt bosoms, take two ounces of gum arabic powder, put it in a pitcher and pour on a pint of water; cover it and let it stand over night. Pour carefully from the dregs into a clean bottle; cork and keep for use. A teaspoonful of gum stirred into a pint of starch made in the usual way will make the most beautiful gloss on any linen or cotton goods, and will make lawn look like new.

TO REMOVE blisters from veneer, first wash the exterior of the blister with boiling water, and with a coarse cloth remove the dirt and grease; then place it before the fire; oil its surface with common linseed oil; place it again to the fire, and heat will make the oil penetrate quite through the veneer and soften the glue underneath; then, while hot, raise the edge gently with a chisel, and it will separate completely from the ground. Repeat this process, to entirely separate the veneer; wash off the old glue, and proceed to lay it again, as a new veneer.

IT is stated on good authority that a teaspoonful of cayenne pepper mixed in a quart of oil, if rubbed on harness, will effectually protect it against the gnawing of rats. It is also said that an ounce of aloes to one gallon of oil will afford the same protection. Our remedy heretofore has been, and we have never known it to fail, to hang the harness up so no rats can molest it. But, as some people are careless in this respect, the red pepper, and the aloes and oil remedy had better be adopted. A friend at our elbow says carbolic acid is a sure remedy.

A HOME-MADE PLAITER.—Let me tell you how to make a plaiter for plaiting dress-trimming; you will find it a great help in altering over old dresses: Go to a tinner and get two strips of tin one inch wide and ten or twelve inches long. Take an awl or any sharp instrument and put in holes along one edge only of both strips as close together as possible; the closer the holes are the finer and prettier your plaiting will be. Then take an inch-thick pine board not quite as wide as a knitting-needle, tack on the tin strips, bringing the holes a little above the board on each side of the board. Get a bunch of knitting-needles (I bought three dozen for 25 cents) and you are ready to go to work. Have the goods to be plaited hemmed, lay the wrong side up, beginning at the end, of course. Place a knitting-needle through the first and third holes across the board. Lift the goods back over the third needle and place a needle through the second hole, thus forming a small plait. Lay the goods back on the board and proceed until the needles are used up. Then lay a damp cloth over the needles and press with a hot iron until dry. It is beautiful when well done, and expensive to hire it done.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

How to Keep a Piano.

The piano is constructed almost exclusively of various kinds of woods and metals; cloth, skin and felt being used in the mechanical portion. For this reason atmospheric changes have a great effect on the quality and durability of the instrument, and it is necessary to protect it from all external influences which might affect the materials of which it is composed. It must be shaded from the sun, kept out of a draught, and, above all, guarded against sudden changes of temperature. This latter is a most frequent cause of the piano getting out of tune, and the instrument should be kept in a temperature not lower than fifty-four degrees and not higher than eighty-six degrees Fahrenheit. When too cold, the wood, cloth and skin swell, and the mechanism works badly; when too warm, these materials shrink and cause clinking, squeaking, and other disagreeable sounds. Moisture is the greatest enemy of the piano, and it cannot be too carefully guarded against. In a short time damp will destroy every good point in the instrument.

The tone becomes dull and flat, the wires rusty and easily broken, the joints of the mechanism stiff, and the hammers do not strike with precision, and, if these symptoms are not attended to at once, the piano is irretrievably spoiled. Therefore do not put your piano in a damp ground-floor room, or between two windows, or between the door and the window where there is a through draught. Never leave the piano open when not in use, and above all when the room is being cleaned. Do not put it near a stove, chimney, or hot-air pipes. Always wipe the keys after playing. Never pile books, music, or other heavy things on the top. Be careful when using the soft pedal not to thump the notes. Do not allow five-note or other exercises of small compass on a piano you have any regard for. A leather cover should be kept on the instrument when not in use, and removed every day for the purpose of dusting. A cushion of wadding or a strip of flannel laid on the keys will help to keep them white and preserve the polish. Never leave the piano open after a musical evening or dance. If you are obliged to have it in a damp room, do not place it against the wall, and raise it from the floor by means of insulators, and always cover it after playing. Employ the best tuner you can get, and, if a new instrument, let it be tuned every two months during the first year, and at least three times a year afterward. Always have it tuned after a soiree if the room has been very hot.

The Law of Periodicity.

Astronomers have endeavored to account for the difference of temperature between one summer and another or between one series of summers and another and succeeding series, and have put forth various theories on the subject. Sir W. Herschel attributed the changes to the presence or absence of spots on the sun's disk. His theory was that the presence of spots and other disturbances indicated a large formation of heat and light in the sun, and was a prognostic of hot weather and fine seasons. He thought he had also discovered by such data as he had in his possession, that "the price of wheat always rose when the sun was without spots, and fell when they began to reappear." How open to question both these ideas were we shall presently see from what has been made public since then by other observers. An able article on the subject of the sun was published in the last number of the Scientific American by Prof. Langley, of Allegheny Observatory, Pa. Indirectly he takes up this theory of Herschel, and, although not completely disposing of it, casts too much doubt upon its correctness to warrant placing any implicit reliance upon it. Prof. Langley gives an account of the daily record of the spots on the sun made by Schwabe, a German observer. This record, running through a period of forty years, was extended by other observers for twenty years more, and diagrams are given which confirm to some extent Herschel's theory; but, as Prof. Langley remarks, "the price of wheat depends on many things quite apart from the operations of nature—on wars and legislation, for instance," and, therefore, any deductions drawn from the presence or absence of sun spots and their effect upon the seasons and the price of wheat must necessarily be to a large extent fallacious. But the patient observations of Schwabe on sun spots led to the discovery of a remarkable law of periodicity. It was found that the sun spots increased and diminished through successive cycles of about eleven years; that the number of spots increased through a little less than four years, and went on steadily diminishing through a little over seven years. At this time we are reaching the close of the fourth cycle. The last minimum occurred about February, 1867, and Prof. Langley states, in confirmation of this law of periodicity, that "the sun's face is at present free from spots almost beyond any past remembrance." Next year, therefore, another cycle will commence, the spots will begin to reappear, and will go on increasing in number and expanding in size until they reach their maximum, about 1882, when they will begin to decline gradually until they almost or quite disappear in 1889. The present heated term and the absence of sun spots go far, therefore, toward refuting the theory of Herschel that the greatest and steadiest heat occurs when the sun spots are most numerous, while the low price of wheat at this time—lower than it has been for many years—would seem to disprove his other theory, "that the price of wheat always rises when the sun is without spots, and falls when they begin to reappear."—Baltimore Sun.

Thirty-Three Children.

Think of a father climbing out of bed at daylight and calling to each of his thirty or more children to get up, and then assigning them their several duties for the day! Such a man was Antoine Louis Descompt Labadie. With his father and two brothers, this somewhat remarkable son of Gaul emigrated from France, and settled in Detroit in 1750. Nineteen years thereafter he married Angelique Campau, and the two went to housekeeping over the river. Antoine Labadie lived happily with his wife for five years, when she died, having borne him seven children during that time. He had traded extensively with the Indians, and had treated them with such uniform kindness and consideration that upon the death of his wife they entreated him to marry a maiden from out their tribe. This he did, choosing the daughter of a Santeuse Chief, as the records of the Catholic Church at Sandwich have it. Seventeen children his dusky bride presented him, and then her spirit fled to the happy hunting grounds. Aboriginal and Norman blood mingling in the veins of the seventeen descendants of this last union helped to build up a hardy and rather industrious community, and still Labadie faltered not. He was wedded to Miss Charlotte Barthe, and the fruits of this union were nine children, the oldest son being the father of Gregoire L. Labadie, of this city, and Capt. Charles F. Labadie, of the firm of Labadie & Parent, Windsor. The latter still holds a portion of the old homestead in Walkerville.

Old citizens say that it was not an uncommon thing for the old French settlers to raise families of eighteen and twenty children. An old resident says that Van Avery, who lived on the present site of the water-works, was the father of twenty-three children, all by one wife.—Detroit Post.

The Wasp's Nest.

Reaumur states that for twenty years he endeavored, without success, to discover the materials employed by wasps in forming the blue-gray papery substance, so much used in the structure of their nests. One day, however, he saw a female wasp alight on a sash of a window, and it struck him while watching her gnawing away the wood with her mandibles that it was from such materials she formed the substance which so long puzzled him. He saw her detach from the wood a bundle of fibers, about the tenth of an inch in lenght, and finer than a hair; and as she did not swallow them, but gathered them into a mass with her feet, he had no doubt but that his opinion was correct. In a short time he saw her shift to another part of the window, and carry with her the fibers which she had collected, and to which she continued to add. He then caught her, and began to examine her bundle, and found it was neither yet moistened nor rolled into a ball, as it is always done before being used by the wasp in her building. He also noticed that before detaching the fibers she bruised them into a kind of lint with her mandibles. All this he imitated with his penknife, bruising and paring the same wood till it resembled the fibers collected by the wasp; and so he discovered how wasps manufactured their paper; for these fibers are kneaded together in a kind of paste, and, when the wasp has formed a ball of them, she spreads it out into a leaf, nearly as thin as tissue-paper; and this she accomplishes by moving backward, and leveling it with her mandibles, her tongue and her teeth. And so the wasp forms paper, placing layer upon layer, fifteen or sixteen sheets deep, and thus preventing the earth from falling down into her nest.

A Police Superintendent Assassinated.

Another police prefect has been assassinated in Russia. Baron Heyking had an office at Kiev corresponding to that of Gen. Trepoff at St. Petersburg. Both were chiefs of the gendarmerie, and also of the secret police, and in this latter capacity were held responsible for the doings of the mysterious Cabinet Bleu. The Baron was enjoying one evening the coolness of the air, smoking his cigarette and strolling down the main street in company with an old friend. Suddenly his comrade heard him cry out, "Help! I am murdered!" and turning round saw him sinking to the ground. A long dagger had been driven through his side up to the hilt. The Baron's friend raised the cry of murder, and several persons started in pursuit of the assassin, who was running down the street. A lad of 15 was the first to overtake him, but a shot from a revolver brought the pursuer to the ground. The murderer escaped and even his name remained a mystery. The Baron died in a few days, and the chances are that his murderer was one of the mourners at the funeral. Secret whippings are said to have been frequent in Kiev. Whenever a rash youth or a free-tongued woman undertook to discuss politics in wine-room or parlor, the heedless speaker would be invited to an interview with the chief of the gendarmerie, and would invariably be treated with every courtesy. The high official would express his regret that imprudent words should have been spoken, and leave the room, when the visitor's chair would sink with him or her, the upper half of the body remaining above the floor, while below unseen hands administered a flagellation the severity of which was only equaled by its ignominy. This over, the trap-door would rise again, and the victim, suffering severe bodily pain, and even more harrowing moral anguish, would be bowed out by the ever courteous and affable chief.

Legal Advertising in Co-Operative Newspapers.

An important decision, touching the legality of advertising in newspapers printed on the co-operative plan, has been rendered by the New Jersey courts. A mortgage sale was advertised in a newspaper printed on this plan, and the property was sold as advertised. The owner of the property protested against the proceeding, on the ground that the advertisement thereof was not legal, because the newspaper printing it was a so-called "patent inside." A petition to set aside the sale was accordingly filed in chancery. The petition fully and squarely raised the issue as to whether a newspaper using a "patent outside," printed outside the State, was a newspaper printed and published in the State, in which land sales might be legally advertised. The question was fully argued before the Vice-Chancellor, at Newark, N. J., and a decision rendered "that such an advertisement was legal and sufficient, and was both a substantial and literal compliance with the statutory requirement;" and the motion to set aside the sale was denied and petition dismissed.

THE condition of Nobeling, who attempted to assassinate the German Emperor, is improving. He sits erect in bed, eats with an appetite, and answers in a fragmentary way questions that may be addressed to him. All his replies, however, are accompanied by an idiotic smile, and medical men consider that if his life should be saved he would never perfectly recover his senses.

THE POLITICAL FIELD.

Extract from the Speech of Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, Delivered at South Bend, Ind.

When we look plainly and candidly at the present position of political parties, we are at once forcibly struck with the fact that the party now in power in national affairs is totally destitute of a single issue in the interest of the great mass of the American people on which to go before them for their confidence and support? [illegible] proposition. In whatever direction you view the political field you will find absolutely nothing offered by the leaders of the Republican party calculated to promote the public welfare. In a period of great corruption and debasement of the public service; in the midst of official scandals and debaucheries, connected both with the last and the present administration, and bowed down as the people are by the most appalling business distress ever known in a civilized commonwealth, I challenge the production of a single measure, by those who now lead and control the Republican party, which has in it elements of popular relief. It is true, when the present administration was placed in power, lofty promises of purity and reform in the civil service of the Government were proclaimed to the world. It appeared then to be the purpose of Mr. Hayes and his advisers to institute a contrast with the administration which had just expired. It was given out in formal official declarations that those who were engaged in the service of the Government should not be the mere henchmen of the administration in power, but that they were to discharge their duties to the public on an independent and self-respecting basis. You all remember how the public ear was captivated by statements of this kind, that no man should be displaced as long as he honestly and efficiently discharged the duties of his position. You also have not forgotten the repeated announcements made by Mr. Hayes and his Cabinet, that the odious and corrupt practice of assessments levied on Government office-holders for the purpose of carrying elections, was thenceforth to be utterly and entirely abandoned. The proposition, in substance, was that the offices of the Government belonged to the people, and that while the duties in which alone the people are interested were faithfully performed, the incumbent should not be molested; nor should he, like a slave, be compelled to pay tribute to party managers for his place, nor was he required or permitted to seize upon the control of local politics by virtue of the influence of his office. How long, however, did this virtuous impulse last? In less than six months after its proclamation the old arts and devices of unscrupulous politicians were again in the ascendant. The Federal office-holder again resumed his practice. He was again the chief of the caucus, of the ward meeting, and the controlling spirit of County and State Conventions. The teachings of the administration were openly disregarded and despised, and it had not the courage or self-respect to make them heeded. Among the best officers, also, many were displaced or sought to be displaced, without cause and in defiance of the rules laid down, while those who have violated every principle of the code of civil-service reform have in no instance been punished or even rebuked. Worse than this, however, what do we next behold? The following circular has been issued at Washington, in the immediate presence of Mr. Hayes and his Cabinet, and with their knowledge and consent, as it plainly states:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., May 27, 1878.

"SIR: This committee, charged with laboring for the success of the Republican cause in the coming campaign for the election of members of Congress, call with confidence on you as a Republican for such a contribution in money as you may be willing to make, hoping it may not be less than $——. The committee deem it proper in thus appealing to Republicans generally, to inform those who happen to be in Federal employ that there will be no objection in any official quarter to such voluntary contribution."

This circular, after giving some false reasons for such an extraordinary measure, closes with the following significant admonition:

"Please make prompt and favorable response to this letter, and remit at once, by draft or postal money order, to Sidney F. Austin, Esq., Treasurer, etc. * * *

"By order of the committee.

"GEORGE C. GORHAM, Secretary."

It has been ascertained that the amount being levied upon Federal office-holders is in no instance less than 1 per cent. of the salaries, and it oftener equals 2 per cent. There are now not less that 80,000 persons holding office in the civil service of the United States, and it is very safe to assume that their salaries will average $1,000 per annum, making an aggregate of $80,000,000. An assessment of 1 per cent. on this amount yields the enormous sum of $800,000, to be used in the approaching elections. The mission of this money is to corrupt the ballot-box, to debauch, as far as possible, the virtue of the people, and to fasten on the country a policy contrary to the will of the majority. It is raised by extortion to be used in jobbery and bribery. A more dangerous movement than this can hardly be conceived. It is full of peril and menace to the very existence of popular liberty. On the one hand it seeks to reduce the entire force in the public service to a species of servitude, and on the other it attempts to poison the very fountains of all free Government. There are over 40,000 Postmasters in the United States, and this great army of officials, together with Collectors of custom, of revenue, and all their subordinates, as well as the helpless, trembling clerks in the departments at Washington, whose wives and children depend upon their places for bread, are all, this hour, writhing under the party lash, under this cruel demand for party tribute, which means a compliance with its terms or a discharge from office. It appears that within a few days past some reluctance to comply with this demand has manifested itself in certain official quarters. We therefore find this same Republican committee issuing a new order still more imperative in tone, and more significant of danger to such as refuse its mandates. This order closes by saying:

"We have, therefore, arranged with the treasurer, Mr. Austin, to attend at the National Bank, corner of F and Seventh streets, from 4 to 5 o'clock p. m., to receive contributions from those in your department who have not already responded."

The salaries of clerkships under the Government range from $700 to $1,500 per annum, and, in a few instances, higher. It requires, therefore, no stretch of the imagination for us to behold, each evening of these days, between 4 and 5 o'clock, the clerks under this administration, male and female, old and young, white and black, wending their heavy and sorrowful way to meet this Mr. Austin, the Corruption Agent of the leaders of the Republican party, there to contribute the per cent. of their earnings so sadly needed in their stinted and barren homes. Honest voters of Indiana, do you not turn with loathing from such a spectacle as this? Men of the Republican party, where is the high spirit of your once great organization? Has it sunk so low that it has no other means to sustain itself, to continue in power, than to extort from the helpless and dependent of both sexes, all ages, every color and every condition in life? Fallen and miserable, indeed, must be its once high estate when it is compelled to come before the public with so disgraceful an issue; with its broken pledges of civil-service reform, with its shameless disregard of public morality, leaning for its support, as it totters to its downfall, on those who are so unfortunate as to hold official places under it. I arraign the leaders of the Republican party at the very threshold of this canvass as the organizers of corruption, the assessors of blackmail to be used in destroying the purity of elections, and in the overthrow of the rights of the people. If their schemes can be made successful and prevalent throughout the country; if the policy of controlling elections by the use of money, now openly proclaimed by the party in power, shall receive no condemnation at the hands of the people, then our institutions of free government will perish, and our name will become a hissing and a byword in all the four quarters of the globe.

A claim is sometimes put forth in behalf of the present administration by a portion at least of the Republican party that it has what is known as a Southern policy, which commends it to fair-minded people. The fact that the Southern States are no longer governed by military power; that their elections are no longer determined by the bayonet; that they have been restored to their places under the constitution, has been heralded to the world as an evidence of the statesmanship of those who are at the head of our national affairs. It is difficult to treat such a false pretense with patience. When, where, in what State, and before what audience, from Maine to Oregon, was this policy ever announced as Republican doctrine? The war closed more than thirteen years ago, and I challenge the proceedings of every convention of the Republican party, from that hour to this, to furnish a single speech or a single resolution in favor of such a measure. On the contrary, we find one campaign following another, political contest succeeding political contest, all forming an unbroken record of hostility to the constitutional rights of the Southern States and people. Two years ago in Indiana the Republican candidate for Governor announced with bitter emphasis that the ensanguined symbol of perpetual hate was the banner under which he made his canvass. Every subordinate speaker in the State followed in the same strain. A speech made at that time in behalf of the policy since pursued by Hayes would have at once excluded the speaker from membership in the Republican party. The entire battle of 1876 was fought everywhere by the leaders of that party on their old doctrine of rancor, strife and blood. The Democratic party confronted it, as it has done from the close of the war, with the constitution as the only measure of power and warrant of Government for States South as well as States North. We have held from the hour of Lee's surrender that the surest and speediest method of restoring the South to peace and prosperity was to extend to her people the equal protection of the constitution and the laws. It was thought then, as it is now, that an appeal to the honor and manliness of a conquered people of our own race and blood would be met by a renewed and faithful allegiance to the Government. The wisdom of our faith has been so fully exemplified, and has grown so strong in the public opinion of this and all other countries, that a Republican administration, carried into office in hostility to it, has at last been forced to accept and to administer the Government on its principles. The so-called Southern policy of Mr. Hayes is simply a forced concession to the power of a public opinion created by the courage and devotion of the Democratic party. When inducted into an office to which he was not elected by the people he placed himself upon a platform on which neither he nor his party had ever before stood. In fact, neither the office which he holds nor the principles on which he administers it in his dealings with the South belongs to him or his party. He has appropriated them both without right. Indeed, the most powerful and stalwart leaders of his own party do not hesitate to declare his Southern policy to be of Democratic origin, and that the true title to it is in the Democratic party. What Republican State Convention has given it unqualified indorsement? When an indorsement has been attempted at all, as in the late Republican State Convention of Indiana, it has been in a timid, half-hearted and distrustful manner. On the other hand, such bold, strong men as Conkling, Blaine, Cameron, and, indeed, a large majority of the recognized leaders of the party, miss no opportunity to disclaim for the Republican party all responsibility for the Southern policy of the administration.

In the midst of its widespread demoralization, however, a strange and violent attempt has recently been made to revive the waning fortunes of the Republican party by a sensational attack on the investigation now being made into the alleged frauds by which the present administration was placed in power. When this investigation was ordered by a Democratic House of Representatives a sort of hysterical scream burst out from the entire Republican press. To dispassionate ears, however, it sounded more like the cry of conscious guilt and fear of detection than of patriotic apprehension for the country. A new word was coined, prophetic of evil to our Government. We were informed with oracular emphasis that our Government was to be "Mexicanized." Mexicanized! Do those who have hurled this word into our political vocabulary have any conception of its real meaning and application? From the conquest of Cortez to the present hour Mexico has been a land of revolution and lawless turbulence. One of the leading features of her history has been the usurpation of power by those who were not entitled to it. Fraud and violence have controlled her highest official positions. The question there has not been who was not elected President of the republic, but who had the means of chicanery or force to obtain the position. Lerdo was but yesterday driven from the place, and Diaz now holds it in violation of the Mexican constitution, and without the sanction of popular suffrage. But does the evil example of Mexico apply to the conduct of a party which investigates fraud and seeks to ascertain the true expression of the popular will? Does it not rather apply with crushing force to that party which, having procured control of the Government by the openly confessed means of false returns, now seek to stifle all inquiry on the subject? Which policy would soonest and most certainly Mexicanize the American Government? What party is on the plainest road to that bad end? Is it the Democratic party, which aims to discover fraud, and to hold its criminal perpetrators up to public execration, or is it not, in fact, the Republican party, whose leaders have desecrated the ballot-box and sapped the very foundations of popular government, through the instrumentalities of the Andersons, the Webers, the McLins, the Dennises, the Jenkses, and that brazen gang now so conspicuous before the public? Who can be harmed by investigation? None but the guilty. Who dreads investigation? It is my experience that the innocent have no fears, while it is the experience of mankind that the guilty flee even when no one pursues. How much greater, then, must be their fear and flight when they are hotly pursued by the indignation of a free people burning with a sense of wrong!

I do not wonder, therefore, at the notes of alarm which filled the land when it was proposed to sift this great political crime of the nineteenth century to the bottom. It was right that it should be done. When the Electoral Commission was created the entire American people, with the exception of a few leaders who were in the conspiracy, expected it to make a thorough investigation of the facts, and to ascertain who in reality was chosen President. Its refusal to perform this plain duty was a surprise and a disappointment to every honest man of every political party. The Electoral Commission decided the great question of the popular will in the choice of a Chief Magistrate upon a meager, barren technicality. When it decided not to go behind the returns, it gave a legal title to Mr. Hayes, binding in law, but entitled to no more respect than the liberty which an offender in court obtains by relying on a flaw in his indictment rather than a trial of the merits of his case. In view of this state of facts, could the House of Representatives do less than order an investigation? But further: The Electoral Commission had not only failed to do its duty in this regard, but in a brief space of time the instruments which were used in the great conspiracy to defeat the popular will began to reveal the whole plot. This was to be expected. Sherman, Matthews, Stoughton, Noyes, and others who visited Louisiana and Florida, are now undergoing the same fate which has always attended those who do unlawful things by the hands of others. History is simply repeating itself on this point. The tool of the conspiracy is always swollen with a sense of his own importance by reason of the guilty secret which he shares with men of position and character. Sooner or later he seeks to make this secret a source of profit to himself, nor will he ever be satisfied. The result is inevitable; he first threatens, and then those who are in his power, finding themselves unable to appease his constant and insatiate demands, he reveals everything, as if thereby he atoned for the original crime. Such is the philosophy of the course pursued by McLin and Dennis in Florida, and by Anderson and others in Louisiana. Nor is there anything new in the manner in which high officials at this time bear themselves toward those who are giving testimony against them. John Sherman and his associates are not the first who have drawn themselves up in well-affected disdain, and disclaimed all knowledge of the tools they once used and cast aside. Others before him have exclaimed to their former confederates, who returned plague them: "A vaunt, I know you not!" But when was the world—the great thinking, intellectual world—ever imposed on by such conduct? Who is McLin, of Florida? Soon after the inauguration of Mr. Hayes he was appointed Chief Justice of the great Territory of New Mexico. There are many future States in that Territory as large as Indiana. The influence of the administration of her laws reaches far into the future, and becomes a matter of the highest importance. This solemn duty was intrusted to Mr. McLin. Who will say that the President made so important an appointment in ignorance of the character of the man he appointed? The Senate, however, being properly advised, rejected the nomination. McLin waited for something else, but waited in vain. Doubtless it was thought the debt due him was paid. At any rate, whether from motives of revenge, or moved perhaps by a quickened conscience, he has told the story how by his own instrumentality, and that of others, a clear and distinct majority for Tilden and Hendricks in Florida was, by perjury and forgery, wiped out, and the electoral vote of that State given to Hayes and Wheeler. He cited the records at various precincts in corroboration of his statement. Then came a man by the name of Dennis. It appears that he has been an object of the tenderest care and solicitude on the part of the Government. He held office and drew his salary without discharging a single duty for many months. Mr. Hayes himself personally recommended him to the Secretary of the Treasury as a first-class person for a position in the revenue department. He too, however, guided by that law, vague and undefined though it may be, which sooner or later reveals wrong-doing, added his statement to that of McLin. Anderson, in whose behalf Senators, Secretaries, Collectors of Customs and the President himself, were sorely anxious for more than a year, laid open the conspiracy by which a Democratic majority of between 5,000 and 10,000 in Louisiana was obliterated, and a majority of between 3,000 and 4,000 placed to the credit of Hayes and Wheeler. This state of affairs in Louisiana and Florida was made known, and an investigation ordered by the House of Representatives. Is there a man in Indiana who says the House could have done less? It is asserted that this investigation may result in disturbing the title of the present occupant of the White House. My answer is plain and simple: By the forms of law he was inaugurated. He has a legal right without the equitable right. He will remain where he is to the end of the constitutional term, unless he should be removed by virtue of that provision of the constitution which has applied to every President from the foundation of the Government. He is liable to impeachment, and to no other process for removal. If I am reminded that the President can only be impeached for acts while in office, my answer is that that is true with this qualification: If it should be proved in this investigation, or any other, in reference to Mr. Hayes or any future President, that he was an accomplice in the commission of unlawful acts by which he procured his place, he would undoubtedly be liable to impeachment for such acts. In the present instance, I do not apprehend such result, whatever the real facts may be. The great wrong will be redressed at the ballot-box. The investigation will emphasize the crime which has been committed agains the American people. It will go into history as a warning to future times, and the fate of those who committed it will make it less likely to ever occur again.

There are some circumstances, it is true, that make it appear probable that Mr. Hayes shared with John Sherman and others a knowledge of the kind of services that were rendered him in Louisiana and Florida. It is difficult to account for his strange distribution of patronage on any other hypothesis. Of those who are implicated by the proof, and who are stigmatized in the judgment of the world as participants in the frauds in Louisiana and Florida, scarcely one has failed to receive rich rewards. This feature of the conspiracy is filled with startling significance. The choicest places in honor and emoluments in the Government have been bestowed upon, and are now enjoyed by, the principal actors in falsifying the votes of those two States. John Sherman, the bosom friend of the President, heads the list of those who visited Louisiana. He was rewarded by the place of most power in the Cabinet. He was made Secretary of the Treasury, and is now cursing the country in that position. Stanley Matthews received the direct and open support of the President of the United States in his election to the Senate as a recognition of his services. Such an interference on the part of the National Executive was unheard of until then. Mr. Stoughton, of New York, added his support, and received the magnificent Ministry to Russia as his reward. Kellogg, of Louisiana, in consideration of his services, received his seat in the Senate by the vote of Mr. Matthews. Packard was a part of the general plan, and he has his remuneration in being made Consul at Liverpool, the richest Consulate in our service. Every one of the memorable Returning Board, Wells, Anderson, Cassanave and Kenner, have been recognized and rewarded by the men in whose interests they committed perjury and forgery. To these might be added a number more who played their part in minor capacities, and who have been taken care of accordingly. Turning to the State of Florida, we find another intimate friend of the present incumbent of the White House, another Ohio man, heading the list of those who changed the vote of that State. Mr. Noyes, for his services, was speedily appointed to the very high position of Minister to France. Mr. Kasson, of Iowa, a coworker in Florida, was at the same time made Minister to Spain. Gov. Stearns, who performed important services, was made one of the Hot Springs Commissioners; and Mr. Cowgill, who put the finishing touches upon the whole transaction, was made a United States Marshal. Of McLin and Dennis, and their rewards, I have already spoken. I venture to say that such recognition of special and doubtful services was never before given by the head of any enlightened Government. It carries with it the self-evident proof of corruption, of bargain and exchange, of base services and peculiar rewards.

The question of economy in the public expenditure is the one which next claims our attention. In connection with a false and oppressive system of finance there has been under Republican administrations a most reckless extravagance in the use of money raised from the hard earnings of the people. In proof of this fact it is only necessary to make a few brief and plain comparisons. The ordinary expenditures of the United States for war, navy, Indian, civil and miscellaneous list, exclusive also of pensions from the commencement of the Government up to and including the fiscal year of 1861, the year the war broke out, embracing a period of eighty-two years, amounted to $1,506,726,146. Passing by the extraordinary expenditures during the war, and computing the public expenses for ten years from June 30, 1867, to June 30, 1876, inclusive, we find that they amounted, exclusive of the national debt, interest thereon, and pensions, to the sum of $1,528,917,197 — a sum greater by over $20,000,000 during ten years of peace under Republican administrations than during eighty-two years before that party obtained power. If we estimate the expenditures of ten years under Democratic administrations from June 30, 1852, to June 30, 1861, we find the amount to be $527,872,260, being $956,044,875 less than the ten years of Republican administration already computed. A reliable exhibit on this subject is as follows:

Net ordinary expenditures of the United States, exclusive of public debt, premiums, interest and principal, and exclusive also of pensions, for ten years, from June 30, 1852, to June 30, 1861, both inclusive, and for ten years from June 30, 1867, to June 30, 1876, both inclusive:

TITLE.	Ten years of Radical rule — June 30, '67, to June 30, '76, both fiscal years inclusive.	Ten years of Conservative rule — from June 30, '52, to June 30, '61, both fiscal years inclusive.	Increase of ten years' Radical rule over ten years' of Conservative rule for same periods.

Totals	$1,528,917,197.[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

This shows an increase of 167.52 per cent. for ten years since the war over ten years previous to the war. Taking as a basis the census of 1860, the cost per capita for the net ordinary expenditures above named for ten years before the war was $18.21, while the net ordinary expenditures for the ten years since the war on the basis of the census of 1870 was $39.65. There are other facts, however, which are even more conclusive, if possible, than those already cited. The Democratic party has had a majority in the lower house of both the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congress. For the first time since 1861 that party is justly chargeable with a part of the responsibilities of the Government. Let us, therefore, compare its works with those of its opponents. There are eleven great appropriation bills usually considered and passed by each succeeding Congress. They embrace the expenditure of the public money for the following objects: The army, the navy, the Legislative, Judicial, and Executive Departments of the Government; the Military Academy, fortifications, Consular and Diplomatic Service, the Postoffice, pensions, river and harbor improvements, and sundry civil. By an examination and comparison of the official records it appears that the appropriations made in these bills by Democratic Houses for the years 1877, 1878 and 1879, show a reduction of $88,270,236.47 under the appropriations made in similar bills, and for the same purpose, by Republican Congresses for the years 1584, 1875 and 1876. The reductions were much greater when the bills originally passed the House, but the Senate, in every instance, largely increased the sum appropriated, and the House was sometimes, in committees of conferences, compelled to make concessions. These important facts, full of significance for the future, will not be successfully disputed. They are beyond the reach of controversy; they are imbedded in the legislation of the country, and they appeal strongly to the people in behalf of those who have placed them there. Economy in public affairs was the cardinal doctrine of the Democratic party in the days of its greatest power, and it is encouraging to witness the exercise of the same great virtue as soon as it obtains even a partial control over the public moneys. Such a record, made under adverse circumstances, with the Senate and the Executive in opposition, will sustain those who made it against all assaults. An over-taxed people will readily yield their confidence to a party which furnishes acts of relief rather than mere empty professions. Had the guides sent forward by Joshua to explore the Promised Land returned empty-handed, the Israelites would have listened with impatience and distrust to their report, however glowing and enticing it might have been. But when they showed the rich fruits which they had gathered, the grapes, the figs, and the pomegranates, a weary, anxious people believed that the country before them was good, and they pressed forward to enjoy it. And so now the Democratic party does not come before you with mere promises of something in the future; it exhibits the fruits of its labors, and on them invites your confidence.

CURRENCY CONTRACTION.

The present general prostration of business and depreciation of values of labor and all kinds of property were mainly caused by reducing the volume of our circulating medium available as an attribute of exchange over $1,000,000,000 from 1865 to 1873. We did not so seriously feel its effects while the fact was not generally known. It was not felt by the great mass of the people while confidence existed among business men and their credit was good at the banks, as individual checks and bank drafts supplied the deficiency. Then bankers were happy, and their profits on real capital invested were 25 to 50 per cent. per annum, with prominent officials drawing good fat salaries. There has been no time within the past twenty years, or in the commercial history of our country, when labor was more remunerative or property and merchandise were more readily and generally sold for cash, or when all classes of people were more able and willing to pay their taxes, duties, imposts and excises, except cupia capitalists and railroad wreckers, than during the years of 1865-6-7. Then Congress had provided for the "general welfare of the people" by providing an ample circulating medium of exchange of $40 to $50 per capita, although of but partial monetary power. But to gratify the cupidity of the money power, over $1,000,000,000 of that indispensable element of the people's prosperity was transformed into untaxed bonds, and a bankers' syndicate was formed to transport them to a foreign land, not only depriving the people's industries of the essential means for developing our mechanical and agricultural resources and property providing for the home consumption of our home productions, cultivating our waste lands, increasing our revenues and the facilities of education, promoting the cultivation of art and science and all essential elements of civilization, the adornment of homes, providing parks for healthful recreation, public halls for lectures and amusements and churches for devotion; but it has also sapped the vitality of those previously developed, by the payment of commissions, usurious discounts and interest on those bonds and current national, State and municipal expenditures.

The practical experience of the past ten years has demonstrated that it is not the price of gold, but the volume of money available for use, that gives prosperity to our people and value to property, and the millions of unpaid taxes in all parts of our country, uncollectable because the people are unable to pay them, demonstrate that, with the present volume of money in circulation, taxation to pay interest on untaxed bonds and national, State and municipal expenditures, inevitably results in confiscation of all home comforts and many homes of the great mass of the people, especially laboring people, invalids, widows and orphans. With the business of the country paralyzed, confidence destroyed a multitude of laborers out of employment, the bills of bankers—even gold and silver—are worth no more than so many cords of granite, hoarded in bank vaults and sub-treasuries, for the promotion and support of the people's industries.

In 1873, by the payment of interest on deposits from corresponding interior banks, a few New York banks (controlled by Wall street gold gamblers and railroad robbers) were enabled to concentrate and corner most of the then existing money, and crush the Northern Pacific railroad enterprise of Jay Cooke & Co., because it promised competition with that corporate monopoly, the Central Pacific (built with untaxed bonds, plundered from the people), producing thereby a panic which demonstrated the insufficient volume of money available for circulation—compelling our banks to suspend granting their usual discounts and the payment of the people's money deposited with them, and destroying confidence among business men, while, for want of a proper volume of money as a medium of exchange, all kinds of industrial productions, labor and property depreciated in salable value, until millions of laboring people were deprived of remunerative employment, and insolvency and bankruptcy became the inevitable fate of all active business men outside of administrative, revenue and expenditure rings.

I find in the Inter-Ocean of July 16 the following statistics, compiled from official sources and a volume called "Gold and Debt," showing the amount of our circulation per capita, and its contraction, from 1865 to 1877:

Year.	Currency.	Population.	Amount per capita.
1865	$1,651,282,373	34,819,581	$47.42
1866	1,803,702,726	35,537,148	50.76
1867	1,330,414,677	36,269,502	36.68
1868	817,199,773	37,016,949	22.08
1869	750,025,989	37,779,800	19.86
1870	740,039,179	38,555,983	19.19
1871	734,244,774	39,750,073	18.47
1872	736,340,912	40,978,607	17.97
1873	738,291,749	42,245,110	17.48
1874	779,031,589	43,550,756	17.89
1875	778,176,250	44,896,705	17.33
1876	735,358,832	46,284,344	15.89
1877	696,443,394	47,716,000	14.60

The following statistics compiled by W. P. Kimball, of New Haven, Ct., showing the price of gold, flour and beef from 1860 to 1874:

Year.	Gold.		Flour.	Beef.
1860	$1.00		$5.25	$10.75
1861	1.00		5.50	9.00
1862	1.00	$1.37	5.47	12.00
1863	1.37	$1.72½	5.87	12.50
1864	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1865	1.46½		9.73	20.50
1866	1.41		7.63	19.00
1867	1.37		9.42	18.50
1868	1.36		8.70	15.00
1869	1.24		6.70	14.00
1870	1.10		4.92	14.00
1871	1.18		5.60	12.50
1872	1.11		6.00	10.00
1873	1.12		5.96	11.00
1874	1.13		5.96	10.37

which demonstrate that the value of gold as money has not been governed by the volume of currency, and that it is not the price of gold that governs the value of products or confidence among business men or the stability of their commercial relations.

I notice in the Railway Age a computation taken from the Financial Chronicle two years ago (high authority):

A STATEMENT OF DEFAULTING RAILROADS.

	Number of Roads.	Amount of Bonds.
Defaults before 1873	37	$134,654,600
Defaults in 1873 before Sept. 30 (the panic)	35	91,740,500
Defaults in 1873 after Sept. 30	25	182,233,250
Defaults in 1874	71	265,068,701
Defaults in 1875	25	140,498,214
Defaults in 1876	8	29,803,000
Total	201	$814,316,265
Total bonded railroad debt in United States		$2,175,000,000
Per cent. of defaulted bonds to total		38.7
Total bonds—stock and debt of railroads in United States, about		4,775,000,000
Total bonds—stock and debt of defaulting railroads, estimated		1,800,000,000
Per cent. of investment in defaulting roads to total investment		38.7

In a later summary for 1876-7 I find for the entire year 1876:

	No. of Roads.	Mileage.	Capital Rep.
Sold under foreclosure	30	3,846	$217,748,000
Receivers appointed and proceedings commenced	46	7,576	$[illegible]

And in 1877:

	No. of Roads.	Mileage.	Capital Rep.
Sold under foreclosure	54	2,873	$198,984,400
Proceedings commenced	44	5,409	$20,681,920
Sales ordered	16	2,326	255,755,300
Total	114	11,622	$775,421,630

These figures show that this destructive process is going on with increased velocity—as the fatal day of resumption approaches—which has brought and must bring fearful results, unless prompt measures are taken to stay the currents rushing on to the inevitable maelstrom.

The same authority estimates the losses to the present time on railroad property alone at 50 per cent. of the capital represented—which amounts to $2,387,500,000—and this great loss falls almost wholly upon our own people, mostly by persons of limited means who hold the stock, while alien bondholders, and a few Wall street stock gamblers, who hold most of the first mortgage bonds, are rapidly acquiring the title in fee by foreclosure (or gobbling the stock at an infinitesimal price) to nearly all the main arteries of circulation of our internal commerce (our railroads) that they may slake their thirst for greed on the blood of the industries of our people—by monopolizing and pooling exorbitant charges, and taking all net receipts hereafter.

The same ratio of depreciation extends to all other classes of stocks, such as insurance, bank, mining and manufacturing, and, in fact, to all corporate investments, as well as real estate and personal property of every kind or nature on land, lake or sea, to an amount almost beyond the power of figures to represent, producing financial disaster, the result of McCulloch's and Sherman's clients' financial policy.

They have, until recently, taught that silver and gold were the true standard of all value, by reason and virtue of their indestructibility and universal use; but recently, when it better suited their crafty acquisitiveness they suddenly found that it required a third, and more potent element, viz., legislative enactment, to give those commodities a standard value, subservient to their interests; by legislative enactment they procured the demonetization of silver in Germany and in this country, thus demonstrating the axiom that the third is, was, and ever has been the most potent element in fixing and maintaining a definite monetary value to any substance or commodity. Our people are learning the importance and influence of those two words.

Our corporate bodies have for some sixty years, to consummate their schemes for plunder, relied upon what is commonly known as the Dartmouth-College decision—of our highest judicial power—which embodied the Blackstonian proposition, that whatever Parliament doeth, no power on earth can undo. But all honor to the granger, S. M. Smith, of Kewanee, who in his school days had read the story of that honorable peer of Blackstone, Lord Chief Justice Hale, who once laid aside his ermine and put on a dusty robe and represented an honest miller, to purge the court and jury of the influence of the ancestral lineage of this same money power, which is now the direst scourge of our land. That sage jurist rose higher than Blackstone and drew inspiration from the power that created Parliament, and so spread the transparent rays of unalloyed justice on the tablets of common law that the storms of two centuries have failed to tarnish them. Like diamonds of pure water, they sparkle and glow to light the pathway of our highest jurists, whose recent decisions confirm the right of the people through their representatives to so modify chartered privileges that they shall not grow into unendurable extortionists, wielded by unscrupulous officials who care not for the equities of the people, or capitalists who intrust them with their funds.

We find business prostrated throughout the land. The great mass of the people have struggled with the tide of contraction, compelled to economize, and to mortgage their homes, to pay their taxes and provide the necessaries of life, and have become so contracted that the tax-gatherers and mortgagees have taken most of their property and their homes.

Our great factories and machine-shops are closed or running at a loss. Our stores and tenements are vacant by the thousand, and their recent prosperous occupants living on public or private charity, or traversing the country, bearing the stigma of "tramps," seeking labor to procure food and raiment.

This destructive system of contraction affects alike the laborer, and mechanic, and all [illegible] industries, but it has sapped the [illegible] of the trust funds, and savings of [illegible] widows and orphans. It has de[illegible] their securities on lands, tenements, stocks and life-insurance securities, and savings bank deposits, to an alarming extent.

Advocates of contraction say it is caused by over-production. As production is the source of all sustenance and wealth, for the general welfare of all, where is the possibility of over-production of useful or ornamental commodities? Civilization unfolds new and increasing wants, which open other avenues for labor, and, as facilities increase, the cost decreases, and competition brings the price within the means of the greater number. But when the medium of exchange is, as now, inadequate to give remunerative value to labor, and its production, and the great mass of the people are unable to purchase, consumption diminishes and general stagnation of business must inevitably ensue.

I know not where to find that overproduction, unless it be of idle men, with destitute families. Of else pray tell us what? From New England's hills, our fertile plains, and Sierras' peaks, echo makes the same answer—what?

LABOR IN IRELAND.

Reports on Wages from the United States Consuls at Dublin and Cork.

The United States Consul at Dublin has forwarded to the Department of State a very full and interesting report on the rate of wages paid the laboring classes in his district, the number and classification of holdings in each province of Ireland, the annual average amount of the circulation of the six banks of issue in Ireland, a return of joint-stock banks doing business in Ireland, postoffice savings banks, returns of distilleries, etc. From this report it appears that the skilled mechanic gets per day, 8s. 6d., and the unskilled mechanic receives 17s. 6d. per week. Agricultural laborers are paid, per day, from 1s. 2d. to 2s. 6d. permanent, and from 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. in the busy season, the rate of wages varying very much according to locality and season. Near large towns the rate is much higher than in the country districts, and in spring and harvest the rate is higher than at other seasons. The price of wheat per 112 pounds, taking the average of six principal markets in 1851, was 8s. 6d., and the price obtained in the same markets for 1876 was 10s. 8½d. Oats have varied during the same period from 5s. 8½d. to 7s. 9½d.; potatoes from 3s. 11½d. to 3s. 9d.; beef from £2 2s. 2½d to £3 14s. 3d., in each case the quantity from which this average is taken being 112 pounds. The amount of the state circulation of the six banks of issue in Ireland in the year 1865 was £5,986,950, which was £367,544 under the issue fixed by the act, and in 1876 the state circulation was £7,499,183, which was £1,136,906 over the issue fixed by the act. In 1847 the number of depositors in the trustee savings banks in Ireland was 80,351, and the amount deposited was £2,410,720, while in 1876 the number of depositors had fallen off to 56,849, and the amount deposited to £2,178,266.

Mr. Lewis Richmond, United States Consul at Cork, in his dispatch of June 27, to the Department of State, gives the following information: Agricultural laborers get 48 cents a day; coal-heavers, machinists, gas-fitters and bakers, $1.09; masons, shoemakers, painters and joiners, $1.21. On public works, laborers earn from 48 to 60 cents a day. On the railways, conductors receive $4.38 to $7.29 per week; engineers, $1.21 to $1.70 per day. Last summer the railway employes struck for an advance, but failed. The cost of living to the laborer and the mechanic is about $85 per annum. Trade is much depressed, with many failures. Wages and cost of living have increased about one-sixth since 1873. The amount of paper money in circulation in Ireland is stated at $35,000,000, with a reserve of coin in the banks of $14,300,589. Paper money and coin are on a par. The trade of Cork foots up: Whisky, 8,616 puncheons and 6,931 hogsheads; butter, 500,000 firkins, with large quantities of pigs, sheep, cows and calves. The importations of wheat and Indian corn are very large.

Fire and Burglar-Proof.

The Metropolitan Elevated Railroad Company is building a vault for the safe keeping of the books and money of the company. Beginning at the foundations of the sub-cellar, a solid pier of masonry twelve feet eight inches square was erected to a height of twenty-two feet, or one foot below the floor of the first story of the building. On the top of this pier was laid a platform of railroad iron, dove-tailed together and securely bound with iron clamps. A bed of cement was laid on this, and upon the cement heavy blue-stone flagging, which forms the floor of the vaults on this story.

From the top of the pier the vault proper extends to the third floor, with separate vaults on the first and second floors. The ceiling of the first-story vault is of blue-stone, upon which is laid another layer of railroad iron, and upon this again concrete and blue-stone flagging. The sides of the vault are formed of railroad iron dovetailed together, with many bands of iron extending around the vault and riveted to every alternate rail. On the interior and also on the exterior of this iron crossing are twelve-inch brick walls. The ceiling of the upper vault is similar to the one below, except that upon the casing of railroad iron a much heavier bed of concrete and masonry is laid. The doors are double doors, with a space of two feet between the inner and outer doors, and all are fitted with the most improved burglar locks.

The entire structure is fifty feet in height, and is supposed to be proof against any probable assault of either man or the elements.—New York Evening Post.

Sending Money Through the Mails.

There is a good deal of consternation among the express companies over the prospect that the Government is to take out of their hands the transportation of gold and silver coin. This carrying trade has been a source of great profit to the express companies for many years, and now all the Government officers connected with the postoffice and mail service think it is entirely practicable for the Postoffice Department to transfer all the gold coin without material cost to the Government, and possibly all the silver coin. Although the arrangements are not yet completed, the Postmaster General thinks that they can go into operation at any time. It will doubtless end in the Government doing all its own transportation of money packages, both coin and paper. In the meantime some of the express companies have notified the treasury that their rates of transportation will be greatly reduced.

Bank of England Notes.

A £5 note of the Bank of England remains in circulation only seventy-two days; then it "retires" into some miser's coffers, and is long out of sight. A £10 note stays seventy-seven days; £20, fifty-seven days; £30, nineteen days; £40, fourteen days; £50, thirty-nine days; £100, twenty-eight days; £200, thirteen days; £1,000, eleven days. A century sometimes elapses before some of these notes are again presented at the bank. On Sept. 27, 1845, a £50 note was handed over the counter, bearing the date of Jan. 20, 1743.

How They Sleep at the White House.

[Washington Letter to the Columbus Journal]

The President and Mrs. Hayes thoroughly enjoy their present home, in spite of its evidence of many years of service; for the homely, old-fashioned White House is in every sense of the word, a "home" from the richly furnished Red Room, where Mrs. Hayes receives her guests, to the large well-stocked library and elegant bed-rooms on the second floor. The other reception rooms and the East Room have been frequently described, and their beauties extolled repeatedly.

The upper chambers open into a wide hall which is covered with the Turkey carpet formerly used in the East Room, and which now begins to show evidence of long and hard usage.

Mrs. Hayes' bed-room has a southern exposure, looking toward the Potomac and affording a view of the Washington Monument and the beautiful park south of the White House. This room is furnished with white satin-wood, with upholstrings of pale blue French "cretonne," showing to advantage against a black velvet carpet sprinkled with white marguerites. A small "boudoir" adjoining is occupied by little Scott Russell, who is still too young to leave her mother's wing.

The room of Mr. Webb Hayes, across the hall, and facing Pennsylvania avenue, is furnished with black walnut and blue reps, with carpet and curtains corresponding in color.

The adjoining apartments are used as guest chambers; one of these has upholstrings of delicate pearl colored "cretonne," with lambrequins of the same material overhanging rich lace curtain, and a soft Axminster carpet in similar delicate shades covering the floor; another (formerly occuped by Miss Platt, now Mrs. Hastings) is bright with crimson damask, the furniture, window and bed curtains and carpets all aglow with the rich, warm color, the hangings of the bed and windows being relieved by delicate lace inner curtains.

Blue is the prevailing color of little Fannie's room. Nurse Winnie shares this room at night, and is a sure protection from all harm.

Another guest chamber is furnished with ebony and crimson sattin; rich damask and lace curtains, caught in the beak of a gilded eagle, are suspended over a massive bed, the sides of which are upholstered with satin, brocade in different colors. Under this bed, concealed from view by the heavy curtains, is a long drawer, made by Mrs. Grant's order, and used by her as a receptacle for her long, trailing dresses. A small escretoire, standing by a window, is inlaid with colored woods, representing flowers and leaves, and underneath is a dainty foot-rest upholstered with a pale blue satin.

All of these bed-rooms are supplied with immense pier-glasses, massive chandeliers and handsome marble mantel-pieces provided with appropriate ornaments, and most of the apartments open into large bath rooms.

The library is very homelike. The walls are lined with well-filled book-cases, upon which are placed busts and statuettes in broze and marble; great easy chairs are scattered about the room, an upright piano occupies a conspicuous position, and upon the long writing table are always to be found the latest books and periodicals, together with a basket of lovely flowers from the conservatory. This room is a great favorite with the family, and it is here that the intimate friends are invited for a social and undisturbed chat.

The family dining-room, on the first floor, is rather gloomy in appearance, having dark furniture, carpet and curtains; but the old-fashioned mahogany side-boards, when covered with their glittering array of china and silver, serve greatly to lessen the effect. The china and plate, which is very fine, is supplied by the Government.

Providence Outdone by the Radical Party.

The Ind. Sentinel says providence has been on the side of the people and against the radical party from the first. There have been for the past ten years great wheat and corn crops, but business has steadily gone from bad to worse under radical rule. Contraction has made resumption possible, but resumption accomplished by contraction has been the most fearful curses that was ever visited upon the country. From the first, democrats recognized the fact that by contracting the currency resumption was possible, and resumption has been opposed because it could only be brought about at the time specified, by destroying the business of the country, and by impoverishing the men who having invested their money in enterprises that employed labor could not be struck down without creating a national calamity. The Shylock policy has been maintained against the will of the people, and now when John Sherman talks of resumption the rads throw up their hats as if great good had been accomplished. The resumption policy has produced a shrinkage of values throughout the country aggregating not less than $12,000,000,000. It has caused the failure of about 60,000 business firms, whose liabilities amount to about $1,750,000,000. It has thrown some four or five million people out of employment, and filled the land with poverty. It would have been wise to have listened to democrats. The contraction would have been arrested, industrial institutions would have been kept going, and the people would have had work and wages. Resumption, under the present circumstances, is not a matter of rejoicing.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at McIntyre & Son's.

"Ophelia" writes to ask if sacred history mentions card playing. Certainly, my dear girl. Moses "led" the children of Israel and when the latter got to Jordan they "passed." Solomon "ordered up" the temple. Baalam "held a jack" and the seven Priests before Jericho, took the city by "playing their seven trumps."—Whitehall Times.

Iced Tea.

[Burlington Hawkeye.]

Singular enough, science has not yet assailed iced tea. But it will not do to permit people to enjoy this cool, delightful beverage, simply because its taste is grateful to the wearied system during the scorching weather. We must do our duty, though science may shrink from it, and the people may cry out against us. There is danger in iced tea, and if you would live long and well, shun the cooling cup. We have not the space to devote to an extended discussion of the matter, and can only cite a few instances from a long series of carefully made experiments, which can not fail to carry conviction to the most incredulous mind.

On June 10 of this year, John C. [illegible], of West Hill, began to drink iced tea at dinner and supper. He kept up this practice for nearly three weeks, and then one day, going down the Division-street steps, he slipped and fell, abrading the skin on both legs, and running a sliver into the ball of his thumb so far that it made his teeth ache when he pulled it out. His clothes were also considerably torn. When he went home that evening he learned that his eldest boy had been whipped at school for sticking a pin as far through another boy as the head would let it go.

He was warned to quit drinking iced tea, but he presisted in the practice, and is now sleeping in the valley between West and North Hill, where he lives, and says he never felt so well in his life. But may be he lies about it.

Henry Estefeldt, of Eighth street, drank iced tea regularly every summer for three years. He noticed that, after drinking it about two months, his boots began to run over at the heel. He persisted and on Sunday afternoon, while he was out driving, his horse ran away and smashed seventeen dollars of a borrowed buggy. He paid the money but neglected the warning. He went on drinking iced tea, and in less than six weeks some one poisoned his dog. These statements can all be verified by writing to Mr. Esterfeldt, who is now living in Kansas City, the father of eleven children, all of whom inherit the father's vice.

A young woman who did plain sewing in this city, while employed in the family of Ralph Henderson, of Maple-street, became addicted during the summer to the use of iced tea. She soon ran a sewing machine needle through her thumb, and, for many days, whenever she picked up a cup of iced tea, a sharp pain ran through her thumb. She refused to obey the warning, however, and in six weeks she was carried away. The man who carried her away married her first, and they are now living in Sagetown.

Last week at the beginning of the heated term, two eminent scientific gentlemen of Burlington took a strong healthy black-and-tan dog, and immersed him in a tub of pure cistern water, into which a weak solution of iced tea had been poured. They held the dog's head under the water fifteen minutes, although he struggled violently, thus showing the natural and instinctive aversion to a substance which intelligent human beings blindly and eagerly drink, and when the gentlemen took him out of the tub he was quite dead. If a teacupful of iced tea in a tubful of water will kill a dog, think for yourselves what must be the effect of a strong, undiluted cup of this decoction upon the system of a weak woman.

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by McIntyre & Son's.

Wild horses roam over southwestern Kansas. The difficult feat of capturing them was formerly accomplished with the lasso. Entire herds are now secured by a new plan. The hunter's outfit ordinarily consists of a of fast-walking pair of horses attached to a wagon, four saddle ponies, provisions for several weeks, and six men. A herd being found, the persuers go toward them at a leisurely pace, doing nothing to frighten them. The wild horses run away, but are again and again overtaken. No effort is made to drive them in any particular direction, nor to hurry them. This is kept up day after day, until they become familiar with the sight of the men, who, at the end of two weeks are able to go among them. They are somewhat docile through hunger, too, having been kept too steadily moving to permit of sufficient grazing. They are at length driven to a ranch and secured.

The Trade Dollar Swindle.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

The circulation of "trade dollars" in the United States has been vastly increased within a recent period, and they have been taken by the people at par without the slightest intimation that John Sherman and H. R. Linderman were preparing for them a surprise that would rob them of ten per cent. of their hard earned wages. Such, however, is the fact. When the trade dollar was first coined it was made a legal tender to the amount of five dollars. This was in 1873, and in July, 1876, its legal tender character was repealed. Since the remonetization of the silver dollar of 412½ grains, speculation in trade dollars commenced on a large scale. Sherman and Linderman, it is presumed informed the banks, or such of them as were not posted, that a good thing was in sight. The first step to be taken was to purchase the trade dollar as bullion, for such the act of July 22, 1876, made them. Then they were to be distributed among the people, who unsuspecting, would rapidly take them at par. This done, Linderman would issue his circular, giving the information that the trap had been sprung and that the holders of trade dollars could get for them the price of bullion. The circular says:

The United States trade dollar also is not a legal tender, and, therefore, has only a bullion value. The standard silver dollar, being a legal tender for all debts public and private, is received at par at all government offices in payment of dues, differing in this respect from Mexican or trade dollars, which are not received. Mexican dollars as well as all other foreign silver coins and United States trade dollars, are purchased at the mints at Philadelphia, San Francisco and Carson, and at the assay office at New York at the equivalent of London rate for silver bullion on the day of purchase, less one-half of one cent. per ounce of fine silver contained. All silver coins so purchased are melted in an assay and the seller paid for the fine silver contained in standard silver dollars.

Just to what extent the unsuspecting people have been swindled by this master stroke of John Sherman's scoundrelism it will be difficult to ascertain, for there is no data as to the amount of trade dollars in the country. It is stated that "from the commencement of the coinage of trade dollars, July, 1873, to the close of the fiscal year, June 30, 1877, $24,518,350 had been struck," and the probabilities are that several millions remain in the country and are now in the hands of the people, for it is fair to assume that Linderman, who is Sherman's tool, would not issue his circular till the banks had got rid of their pile.

As a radical swiddle, few have been more adroitly managed. The profits, which must be large, will doubtless be promptly divided between Sherman and Linderman, and every man who offers a trade dollar now, for which he gave 100 cents, and is told that it is worth but 90 cents, may set it down as a radical steal, and thank his stars that the amount is not larger. It will be noticed that the demonetization of the trade dollar took place July 22, 1876, and that no official notice of the fact was given by Linderman until July 25, 1878, and not until by the distribution of the trade dollars among the people they are compelled to bear the entire loss. It is not surprising that the matter has aroused the indignation of the victims of the Sherman—Linderman—Shylock gang. There is a cool, cruel, footpad premeditation about the swindle that lifts it to the ranks of a first-class radical transaction. The country now enjoys the financial spectacle of the government purchasing, with dollars of 412½ grains, worth 100 cents, trade dollars of 420 grains at 90 cents, or the price of bullion. The dollar of 412½ grains as a "fiat" dollar, and worth 100 cents, while the trade dollar of 420 grains is worth but 90 cents because it lacks the "fiat." It is probably the only case on record where a great and powerful government is a party to an act of direct, open and flagrant robbery of the people. Those who now hold most of the trade dollars are working people. The ten cents taken from every trade dollar they possess means less bread, and yet John Sherman and Linderman have so managed the disgraceful affair that the government reaps the benefit of this last act of radical scoundrelism.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at McIntyre & Son's.

Snubbed.

[New York Sun.]

We received yesterday from the office of the Fraudulent Postmaster-General an official communication as follows:

"SIR: In consequence of the reduction of appropriations it will be impossible for the department to continue the subscription to your paper beyond the term for which payment has been made.

"You will therefore please discontinue at the expiration of that time, unless you feel disposed to send it gratuitously, which would be highly appreciated.
Very respectfully,
W. A. KNAPP, Chief Clerk.

We decline to furnish the Sun gratuitously to Mr. Key. It might do him some good, but his case is hopeless. No man who makes himself a partner and accessory in Fraud first triumphant in American history can be a subject of lasting improvement. Let him step down and out, and some small contribution for his benefit shall not be refused; but no associate of Hayes need ask charity of THE SUN.

A Religious Horse Race.

[Detroit Telegraph.]

A church in Wisconsin, finding its finances in that deplorable condition bordering on insolvency, and seeing the vanity of such earthly expectations as are built on the delusive hope realizing from collections, decided to adopt the "horse-race," not exactly as a means of grace, but as the most feasible plan for gathering lucre wherewith to pay debts and incidental expenses. A dozen nags were entered, the people turned out en mass, and the gate money was enough to make a noble contribution to the treasury of the Lord. In short, the scheme was a pronounced success financially, but it disrupted the church. Deacon Hines got angry because his horse was beated by Deacon Hall's mare. The pastor, who acted as one of the judges, took sides with Deacon Hall and the mare. The quarrel spread, until the pastor wandered forth seeking a new vineyard, and the voice of prayer and praise was hushed in the sanctuary.

The First Silver Certificate.

[Sacramento Bee.]

Senator Newton Booth, who returned from Washington yesterday, brought with him the first silver certificate ever struck off by the United States Government. It is marked "Series A, No. 1," and is endorsed "Good for Twenty Silver Dollars." In size and general appearance it is somewhat similar to the greenback, although the colors of the ink used in its printing are of a silver brown hue. On the face is a vignette of Commodore Stephen Decatur, and near this appears the following: "This certificate is receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued." On the back, extending the entire length of the certificate, is the word "Twenty," in letters an inch in size.

Our Next State Treasurer.

[Terre Haute Gazette.]

Wm. Fleming, of Fort Wayne, is in the city a guest of his son-in-law, Dr. L. J. Willien. Mr. Fleming has been over the state considerably during the past month, in the interests of his candidacy for treasurer of state on the democratic ticket. He reports the prospects as being excellent for the election of the entire democratic ticket, by a handsome majority. He will be in the city for two or three days. Mr. Fleming is a quiet, unassuming business man, who inspires confidence in his reliability by his presence. In him Indiana will have a treasurer who will keep faithful guard over her interests during his term of office.

Base Ball Players' Salaries.

[New York Sun.]

A meeting of the League Association is to be held in Providence on Friday to arrange a permanent schedule of salaries for League professional players. The arrangement will include four classes of players under the appended salary list for the six months of service from April to October: Pitchers, $1,200 catchers, $1,000; first basemen, $700, second basemen, $800; third basemen, $900; short fielders, $700; out fielders, $600; substitutes, $500. No salaries are to be paid in advance, and the League clubs are to be bound to pay no higher salaries than the League schedule. No engagements have been made for 1879 by any League club.

Meaning a Dictator.

[Washington Capitol.]

The subsidized press of the capitalists openly advocate the re-election of Gen. Grant, upon the ground to use their own words, that "we have reached a point where a firm, steady hand is required to guide the nation." This was the talk that preceded the advent of Louis Napoleon and paved the way to his despotic power. And this means a Dictator if it means anything. Under the Constitution a President is the Chief Executive, and his official duty is the execution of the laws. When these creatures begin talking of "a steady hand to guide" they uncover the design and put us upon our guard.

Another Deserving One.

[New York Sun.]

Shameless as many of Hayes' and John Sherman's appointments have been the report that Mrs. Jenks has been rewarded for her purjuries with a berth in the New Orleans Custom House is almost incredible. Contempt for decency and public opinion could not go any further than that. Yet no scandal is impossible under this Fraudulent Administration.

May Be All Romance.

[Cincinnati Commercial.]

Since seeing Grant's assertion that there was no battle of Lookout mountain, Joe Hooker has formed the opinion that the story of the skirmish at Shiloh may be all romance.

Need Not Worry.

[Syracuse Courier.]

Some one has suggested the possibility of Jefferson Davis being elected to the Senate from Mississippi, and straightway several millions of the "truly loil" have been thrown into violent hysterics. Let them possess their souls in peace and dismiss their morbid fears. Jefferson Davis never being pardoned is not eligible to the senate, or to any other office, high or low, under the United States. Even if he were eligible, it is not supposable that the good people of Mississippi are such lunatics as to throw such a firebrand as this old irreconcilable into the arena of congress.

Comparative Failures.

[New York Sun.]

The hard times in Great Britain are shown by the last semi-annual report of Richard Seyd, a leading authority in business affairs in England, from which it appears that for the first six months of this year the failures in the United Kingdom were 7,516. According to Dun, Barlow & Co., the failures in the United States and the Canadas for the same period were only 5,825. These were out of a list of 700,000 persons or firms engaged in business, and it is claimed that there are not so many in the United Kingdom.

Hendricks.

[New York Express.]

The speech of ex-Governor Hendricks at Indianapolis, shows that he is a conservative, conciliatory statesman of the first rank. The difference between his clear, calm, sagacious statements and the voluble rattle of the wordy and windy Woodford is that between an able statesman who knows what he is talking about and a political popinjay. Mr. Hendricks represents both the head and heart of American democracy, and, while the former is level, the latter is in the right place.

Hits Indiana.

[Washington Post.]

In the states where the radical party has shut up shop and put up the shutters there is a lack of popular excitement. The demand for some sort of diversion is so great that the show business is better than it has been for many years. A circus seems to fill the aching void. Such a substitute for the Republican party is a great improvement, morally and financially, on the original.

Ben's Stomach and Mrs. Jenks.

[Bridgeport Standard.]

Ben. Butler woke up the other night covered with a cold sweat, and after glaring gloomily around sank back on his pillow muttering feebly, "Thank heaven, it's only that strawberry shortcake. I thought it was Mrs. Jenks.

All For Grant.

[Bryan Argus.]

The District of Columbia ring, the Navy contract ring, the army sutlership and post traders ring, the whisky rings, and all the corrupt rings in the country, are in favor of a third term for General Grant.

A Banker, of Course.

[Evansville Courier.]

The nationals of the tenth district have nominated John Skinner, of Porter county, for congress. Mr. Skinner owns a majority of the stock in a national bank, and is a banker by trade.

Good Sense.

[Fort Wayne Sentinel.]

About the best way to secure the election of the apostle of gold resumption, Ben Harrison, to the senate, is to vote the national ticket.

Republican Slur.

The Kokomo Tribune refers to the "fiat" county convention in that county as a gathering of big feet and small heads.

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by McIntyre & Son's.

LIZZIE AND I ARE ONE.

Lizzie and I are one, and one we mean to be,
Seeing it's forty years since she joined hands with me;
And this honeymoon of ours, I'm sure 'twill never set,
For as it shone so long ago, 'tis shining on us yet.

We then were linked together for better or for worse,
She took me for a blessing—I might have proved a curse;
Perhaps I've not been either, yet luck was on my side,
For Lizzie has been a blessing since the day she was a bride.

I carry here her picture, in a pocket near my heart,
And never truer angel face was drawn by human art.
They may not think it beautiful, but never do I see,
In throngs of charming women, a face so dear to me.

And now as I look on it I'm back at the happy day,
When Lizzie and I, united, were smiling along the way.
Not pompous was the journey, yet all the world took part,
[illegible] ing heart.

Our wedding jaunt it was, and my proudest day of life,
For it led to the loving old folks, to show my precious wife;
And as Old Gray jogged onward, all earth and air and sky
Were naught to me, for heaven was there in Lizzie's beaming eye.

To her it seemed all nature in summer's richest dress
Was thus arrayed in sympathy to greet our happiness;
And even wayside posies looked up as if to say,
God made us to shed fragrance on the holy marriage day.

Yes, she with sense superior detected in the air
The odor of each blossom, and knew 'twas blooming there;
And oft Old Gray was halted in each elapsing hour,
That I, responsive to her wish, might cull the wilding flower.

The woods and fields and mountain sides for her had wealth untold—
A silver flood the river ran, the sun cast rays of gold;
With soul refined she saw and felt ten thousand glories there,
While I—well, I could only see my wife so wondrous fair.

Ah, me! It was a tour of joy, an episode of bliss—
With earnest faith in every pulse, hope fervent as a kiss;
And ever as the day wore on I seemed to love her more,
Yet now, with forty years agone, we love as ne'er before.

Childhood has claimed maternal care that never was denied,
As the gentle, tender mother followed the blushing bride;
And all who grew around us with love reward her care,
And think there's none so kind and wise as mother sitting there.

The years have sped, and good and ill have met us on the way,
But jointly we've kept moving on, as on the joining day;
And still, for better or for worse, life's lessons we have conned,
But never dreamed of learning how to break the joining bond.

Yes, Lizzie and I are one, and two we'll never be,
Till death an arrow launches at Lizzie or at me;
And though our heads are frosted, and the frosty locks are thin,
Our hearts, like winter fires, are glowing warm within.

THE HISTORY OF A LIFE.

"Miss Cameron."

Leonie Cameron, lazily looking out of a bow-window upon a garden flaming with autumn tints and sunset glow, lifted a pair of soft, dark eyes to Mrs. Tollman's face. It was an anxious face just at that moment, and, being usually full of happy content, the anxiety was very apparent to Leonie. So, after her first careless glance, she straightened herself in her low chair, and said, quietly, yet with every appearance of interest:

"What is the matter?"

An awkward pause followed that question.

Mrs. Tollman fidgeted under the inquiring glance of the dark eyes, cleared her throat twice, and finally said, with nervous emphasis:

"John Furber."

Miss Cameron's face seemed to freeze. It was a very beautiful face, with pride for a leading expression. Sweetness lurked in the mouth, intellect beamed from the radiant dark eyes, but pride shadowed all. It carried the small head gracefully erect, it swept the folds of the rich dresses with a regal motion. It touched the small patrician hands, and was evident in the well-modulated tones of the refined voice.

"There," Mrs. Tollman said, despairingly, "I've made you mad already, and haven't said anything."

"I am not mad," Leonie answered, and there certainly lurked a smile in her mouth at the good woman's consternation: "But you have not told me what troubles you."

"It's—it's—John, Miss Cameron, and"—then rapidly, as if the words were forced by a fear of her own inability to finish her self-appointed task, she hurried on. "He's my nephew, miss, as you know, though his father is a rich man, very rich, and John is above his mother's place in her life. She's dead, and John was spoiled somewhere between the year she died and two years ago. I don't know where he took to bad ways. He was brought up an idler upon his father's money, and from idleness to drinking, gambling and bad ways is an easy road. His father is a hard man, and he thrust him out nearly a year ago and disinherited him. He came here, for I love him. I've nothing else to love; husband and children in the graveyard, so I love John."

There was a piteous pleading in the woman's face, but Leonie's was blank, save for an air of polite interest.

"He was most desperate when he came here, but I've coaxed him up a little. But—but—oh, Miss Cameron, you know what I want to say. You are beautiful, rich—a lady far above me in education and position, and only staying here for country quiet. I've no right to find fault, but—but don't flirt with John. He is in trouble, despondent, disinherited, and he's falling in love with you as fast as he can. I believe if you play with him he will kill himself, body and soul."

Fairly out of breath with her own earnest utterance, Mrs. Tollman paused, looking pleadingly in Leonie Cameron's face. The expression of polite interest never wavered, as that young lady said:

"If I understand you aright, you wish me to ignore your nephew. It is not so easy, as he is in your house, so I had better leave it."

"Goodness!" cried the widow aghast at this interpretation of her words. "I never meant that. Where can you find another boarding place near here?"

"I can return to London."

"I've put my foot in it. John will never forgive me," said Mrs. Tollman disconsolately.

But there was no sympathy in Leonie's face, and she turned away at last, perplexed and more anxious than ever. And Leonie, sinking back in her chair again, looked at the sunset clouds and variegated foliage, and thought perhaps it was time to return to London.

She had come to S——, weary with a round of fashionable life, tired of flattery, dancing, flirting, and she had found rest and quiet under Mrs. Tollman's motherly care. She was rich, richer far than the landlady had any idea of; but she had no near relatives, only a second cousin to keep her lonely home and play propriety.

Society constituted itself her amateur guardian, and, lying back in her cushioned chair in the sunset glow, she wondered indolently what society would say about John Furber. It would grant him a rare perfection of manly beauty of face and form, and forgive the evident traces of dissipation, if it was only known that he was the son of a rich man, and had been educated an idler by profession. But in what holy horror it would turn away, with uplifted hands, when it was known he was disinherited, with no home but a room in the house of a widowed aunt eking out her narrow income by taking boarders. It would smile at his biting sarcasms, his brilliant conversation, his cynical sneers, if he was reinstated in his father's favor, but how rude these would be in a poor man.

Leonie, from thinking of society's opinion, quite unconsciously glided into considering her own. This dark-browned man had made a fair portion of her summer pleasure for three months, had been her cavalier in many country walks, drives and sails, had quoted poetry under trees, sunk in a superb baritone upon the murmuring waters, looked into her eyes on a moonlit porch, and whispered delicately-worded flattery. No more than many another man had done. A beauty and rich, Miss Cameron had looked upon more than one languishing suitor, and forgotten him when his amusement wearied her. Scarcely a flirt—for she encouraged no downright love-making—but a beautiful, fascinating woman, who wounded hearts with merely careless grace.

Musing in the sunset, it was impressed upon the proud heart that, unconsciously, she had poisoned a life that was already sinking. There were capabilities for better things than dissipation and suicide in John Furber, and she shivered as she thought he might be upon some dangerous precipice, waiting for the clasp of the hand to draw him back, or its repulse to throw him over. She passed in review her host of male friends, and found none who had wakened her heart to hours of such keen pleasure as John Furber had given her. She tried to recall one mind whose grasp of intellect had dwarfed her own as his had done, who had met her fairly in so many arguments and worsted her, and she could only remember soft flattery of her "wonderful mind."

Finally, lifting her eyes with a soft sigh, she saw him leaning against a tree opposite the low window, looking at her. A vivid flush stained her cheek as he said:

"What can you have been thinking of? You have not stirred for half an hour. Only that your eyes were open, I should have thought you asleep."

"Your powers of observation are marvelous," she answered, lightly. "I was dreaming."

"Of what?"

"The world in general, my world in particular. It is almost time I returned there."

She was prepared for some polite show of regret, but not for the ghastly change in his face.

She shuddered, remembering his aunt's words.

"Going away! Why, of course you would be soon," he said, trying to speak carelessly, while his eyes hungrily devoured her face, and his white parched lips were drawn as if in sharp physical pain.

"I have been here three months," she said, feeling her own heart ache at his misery.

"Yes, yes! You will go, certainly."

"And you," she said, very gently, "you will be in the city, I presume. I should be glad to welcome you to my house."

"No," he said, harshly; "I will not take such advantage of your kindness; I am a man your friends would tell you to shun, Miss Cameron—a man who has wasted his life till it is too late to take up the threads again. You do not know, perhaps, that my aunt keeps me here from charity?"

"I know you have offended your father," she answered; "but you are a man, scarcely 30, and it is cowardly to talk of despair at your age."

Her words cut him like a whip-lash. The dark blood mounted to his forehead as he repeated:

"Coward! I might fight the whole world yet, but," and here his tone was bitter, and yet strangely pathetic, "the battle is scarcely worth winning. What would I gain? Money? I do not value it. Position? I have thrown it behind me. I have played the fool, and I must take the fool's wages."

"I will not have you say so," she said, roused by an earnestness she had never intended to betray. "You shall not uselessly throw away your life."

A hope sprang to his eyes, new there, lighting them to dazzling radiance.

"Miss Cameron—Leonie," he cried, "were there a prize to win, were one's heart's hope centered upon me, I would trample down these demons of temptation. I would prove myself a man if I had any motive."

There was no mistaking the prayer in his eyes, the pleading in his voice.

Only for a moment, close to the low window, before a hand like a snow flake fell upon his shoulder, a voice, low and sweet, murmured low in his ear:

"Be a man for my sake."

She was gone before he spoke again, and he wandered off to the woods to muse upon a possibility of this new life.

The next day Mrs. Tollman lost her summer boarder. Society, languidly contemplating Miss Cameron for the next three years, found her eccentric.

She was grave and gay by flashes, fascinating in either mood, but she was mysteriously unapproachable.

The bravest suitor found himself met at the point where friendly attentions merge into lover's devotion by a wall of icy reserve that was impassible. She never flirted, but she had the reputation of a flirt, because she was popular and admired, and remained single until 27. She was known to be truthful, and she had distinctly told several inquisitive lady friends that she was not engaged, so there was not even the spice of romance in the gossip.

S—— knew her not in those three years, but Mrs. Tollman was the recipient of various hampers of city delicacies from her, and would acknowledge the same by letter.

One of those, dated three years after the beautiful Miss Cameron left S——, after elaborately thanking that young lady for a hamper of dainties, added:

"Do you remember my nephew, John Furber? He left me the day after you did, and I fretted more than a little. But he took a turn for good, Heaven be thanked. He worked himself up, and to-day he writes me he has made friends with his father again, and is to be taken partner in a commercial house. His father's to buy it, but John's earned a place too by hard, honest work. Oh, my dear, I'm happier than I ever thought to be. Perhaps you've heard of the house in London that John is in. But I'll tire you, writing about my affairs, I wouldn't only I thought perhaps you'll remember John."

"In London," Leonie murmured; "so near me all these years, and yet never seeking me. Was I too bold? Did I drive him away by showing him my heart too plainly? Well, even so, I am glad. I gave him the first start toward an honorable manhood. Remember him? Yes, Mrs. Tollman, I do remember John."

She had folded the letter and was dressing for the opera, when a visitor was announced.

"What a barbarous hour," she murmured, not looking at the card. "In a few moments, Jane."

She was robed in her fleecy dress of white lace, over pale-blue silk, had clasped diamonds on throat and wrists, and in the little ears, when, as she took the opera cloak from the maid's hand, she looked at the card:

"John Furber."

A great heart-throb sent the blood over her brow and neck; then it faded, leaving only a soft tint upon the fair cheeks, and in the dark eyes a light of happiness harmonising well with the smiling lips.

She looked like some visitant from another world, in the radiance of her beauty, as she came across the wide drawing-room to the window where he stood.

He had not heard her light step, but he turned when she was near, showing the stamp of his better life in his noble face.

He held out his hand, looking earnestly into her face, and seeing she only spoke a happy truth, as, taking it, she said:

"I am glad to see you."

"Leonie," he said, "you gave me a hope three years ago, that has borne me above temptation and suffering to a position where I am not ashamed to look any man in the face. Leonie, you bade me—"

Blushing brightly, she took up the words as he passed:

"To be a man, John, for my sake."

"And I obeyed you, my love, my darling. I have come for my reward, Leonie, loving you with all my heart, daring now to ask for your love in return."

So, society had a ripple of sensation in a fashionable wedding, when John Furber married Miss Leonie Cameron.

But only you and I, reader, know the romance of the summer in S——, of how John Furber redeemed his manhood for Leonie's sake.

A Frontier Battle.

A new and nameless town near Fort Keogh, Dakota, was recently the scene of a regular frontier battle between gamblers, soldiers, and the civil authorities. It started in a low dance house between Jim Crow Collins, a gambler, and a bugler named Thomas, of Company I, Second cavalry. Thomas, after a scuffle, received a fatal shot in his body. Collins was arrested and lodged in jail. Down came a large squad of soldiers of the Second cavalry from Fort Keogh and demanded Collins. Sheriff Hess refused to give him up, and the soldiers opened fire on the Sheriff's log castle. The Sheriff was wounded in the hip, and a truce followed long enough to give him time to jump out of the window. The fire was reopened by the soldiers, and Collins, who was armed with a revolver and Winchester rifle, returned it, killing a soldier named Harley, and wounding another named Sanders, of Company I, Second cavalry. A company under Capt. Dewesse was ordered out by Gen. Miles and the fighting stopped. Miles made a sharp speech to the boys on their disorderly and unsoldierly conduct, wherein they got the worst of it.

A Noble Game.

Some reporter who had been tempted to play a game of ball next day dropped into his chair and homilized as follows: "Base-ball is a noble game. It develops the muscles, closes up a man's eye, makes his back feel as if fourteen mules had kicked him for a week, smashes his fingers into seventeen different shapes and costs him a pile of money. Then he lays off for a week to doctor up, and by the time he pays up his bets he begins to feel there are other amusements quite as pleasant, and a great deal more profitable, than hunting a base-ball and then running like a madman 360 feet in the heat of the sun, to say nothing about chasing the balls that some other fellow bunts away over some high fence or on top of some house. But then, they all do it, and wasting words on this subject is about as useless as trying to convince a girl that the same amount of strength spent mixing bread that she wastes pounding a piano would make her a more useful if not quite as ornamental a member of society."

A "Busted" Weather Prophet.

Couch, the Iowa weather prophet, has gone clean out of business, hopelessly bankrupt; can't pay 15 cents on the dollar. And here is what "h'isted" him. This is his prophecy for July:

"July, 1878, will be windy, cool, and during the last half quite showery. The July harvesters should use extra care in setting up the grain, and in stacking. The storm periods will be from the 1st to the 3d; 6th to the 7th, cool; 12th to 15th, severe; 27th to 28th, severe; and 30th to 31st, cool. The marked cool days will be near the 4th, 7th, 15th, 28th and 31st."

Go West, young man, go West. Go about 928,000 miles west.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

THE LONDON TIMES.

Interior Workings of the "Thunderer."

[London Cor. Baltimore Sun.]

Permit me to say a few words as to the modus operandi of journalists on the chief London press. Since Mr. Delaine has ceased to be the chief "leader" editor of the Times, and is a valetudinarian in the south of France, many changes have taken place in the writing departments of "The Fourth Estate Thunderer." Three representatives of the great universities—Oxford, Cambridge, and Trinity College, Dublin—now sit in judgment on the leaders they respectively write. There is always a supply of old-stock leaders ready in type, held in abeyance for the proper time in the Times' chief office. These are under lock and key and the supervision and custody of two men, who are held responsible for them. Obituary criticisms of celebrated men or personages of the world are always ready in type, subject to finish or amendments. One gentleman in particular has charge of this department, with some three or four subeditors under him. Most of the "leaders" of the Times on daily events that are fresh, are written by the university men I alluded to. They sit in council and amend, alter, or reject, as seems prudent. This is done between the hours of 10 and 12 p. m. I have known, however, the best "leaders" written for the Times of the same day at 8 a. m., or two hours before going to press. The late Lord Palmerston frequently sent "leaders" to the Times, after a debate in Parliament, when the clock was striking 4 in the morning. His mode was after this manner: "Lord Palmerston's compliments to the editor of the Times, and begs to say:" Here commenced the "leader," the chief night editor first carefully examining it and cutting off the bit above quoted before sending it to the compositors or chief foreman. At present this foreman or press manager is Mr. MacDonald, a Scotchman about 37 years of age, but a keen and far-seeing man. Here let me note another matter. Press cable news hence to America goes at 5:30 a. m. for 12½ cents per word. Before that hour the charge is 25 cents per word. From 5:30 a. m. to 12 m. you can send cable news hence to America for 12½ cents per word. The aim of American newspaper men in Europe is to give their papers at home the first and best service of news. They have to contend with one or more news associations here, and the efforts to get an early edition of the morning papers are humorous to behold. Many a ruse has been employed to get a copy of the Times to skim its "specials" and forward them in season to New York. A certain paper styled "enterprising" took much pains in many ways to get the Times under such early circumstances. Mr. MacDonald "espied the stranger," as they say in the House of Commons, and lay in wait for him. An old copy of the body of the Times was prepared with the new date put on the head line. The "enterprising" Col. A., like a rat-terrier at a hole where no rat is, was fussing and smiling, having only a few minutes to send off his skimmings as "specials." Words alone were what he wanted; sense he had not time to dwell on. Off went many words, and at a cost of $50 per ten words in those days. Out came the great "enterprising" detonator, and all Gotham was amazed. Since then Mr. MacDonald has not been troubled much by demands for early copies of the Times.

An Editor's Experience With a Female Book Agent.

The editor of the Santa Clara (Cal.) Echo is happily deaf, and thus tells of his adventure with a female book agent (the book was not a female, of course):

We thought everybody in the State knew we were deaf, but once in a while we find one that is not aware of the fact. A female book-peddler came to the office the other day; she wished to dispose of a book. She was alone in this world, and had no one to whom she could turn for sympathy or assistance, hence we should buy her book. She was unmarmarried, and had no manly heart into which she could pour her sufferings, therefore we ought to invest in a book. She had received a liberal education, and we could not, in consequence, pay her less than $2.00 for a book. We had listened attentively, and here broke in with:

"What did you say? We're deaf."

She started in a loud voice and went through her rigmarole. When she had finished we went and got a roll of paper, and, making it into a speaking trumpet, placed one end to our ear, and told her to proceed. She nearly broke a blood-vessel in her effort to make herself heard. She commenced:

"I am alone in this world——"

"It doesn't make the slightest difference to us. We are a husband and a father. Bigamy is not allowed in this State. We are not eligible to proposals."

"Oh, what a fool the man is!" she said, in a low tone; then, at the top of her voice, "I don't want to marry you; I want to sell-a-b-o-o-k!"

This last sentence was howled.

"We don't want a cook," we remarked, blandly; "our wife does the cooking, and she wouldn't allow as good-looking woman as you to stay in the house five minutes. She is very jealous."

She looked at us in despair. Gathering her robes about her, giving us a glance of contempt, she exclaimed:

"I do believe if a 300-pounder was let off alongside that deaf fool's head he'd think that somebody was knocking at the door."

You should have heard her slam the door when she went out. We heard that.

These "Protuberances."

A few years ago the astronomers insisted upon astonishing themselves and alarming the credulous and timid, who are always ready for a panic on account of celestial phenomena, by learned disquisitions about the "protuberances" seen on the sun's surface during an eclipse. When the moon covered the face of the sun the "protuberances" were seen at the edge. These were supposed to be prodigious waves of flame—some of them about 100,000 miles high. It was estimated that if the earth and moon were tumbled into one of the great "protuberances" they would vanish in fervent heat like lumps of coal cast into a furnace. It was supposed that the excessive heat of the month through which we have just passed was, perhaps, due to the unusual agitation of the "protuberances." But the astronomers on the line of totality of the eclipse of July 29, report no "protuberances." There was a lovely corona, but as for "protuberances," not one. This seems almost like a practical joke on the astronomers by the sun.—Cincinnati Commercial.

The Mystery of Matter.

Some years ago George Jacob Holyoke, the famous secularist, in discussing the "Limits of Atheism," gave the following rhetorical statement regarding the mystery of matter: "Look at this humble, obscure and commonplace stone! We neglect it with the eye, we spurn it with the foot—it is not worth raising from the shore. Yet no book was ever written, no message was ever delivered, no romance ever depicted, no epic ever sung containing such wondrous interest as the story of this stone, could any man tell it. What thronging conjectures! What unbidden and tumultuous memories rise as we contemplate its possible mutations of existence! History was unwritten when it first slept in the earth. What generations of men have lived, and struggled and died since it was first broken from the rock! Great battles, changing the fate of dynasties and involving the servitude of races, have been fought over its calm resting place. Possibly thousands of years ago the mastodon trod upon it, and the icthyosauri paddled it into the sea. Ancient waves may have washed it into the ocean, before the first ship was launched by the first mariner. In the silent and wondrous caverns of the great deep, which no plummet has fathomed, and no eye has ever seen, it has lain in regal rest. What monsters have glared at it! What tempests have raged! What tornadoes have broken over it! What earthquakes may have tossed it up from its hiding-place! On what shore did it reappear? Did some Assyrian lover watch the waves which washed it up? Did some young Pharaoh play with it? Has it been imbedded in the walls of Troy? Did Achilles plant his spear by it? Did it lie on the plains of Marathon on the morning of the memorable battle? Has it been dyed by the blood of Cæsar in the streets of Rome? Have Chaldean shepherds picked it up as the Orient sun broke over their silent plains? When all these and a thousand other questions have been answered its history is not begun. Its elements are indestructible. The parts of which it is composed were never created—in some form, in some world, they have always existed. Where were they when the earth was without form and void? To what astral system did the matter of this pebble once belong? Of what star did it form a part? Where was it before time on this planet began to be? If matter has existed forever, this stone in its countless transmutations is a geological wandering Jew of eternity. If we cannot tell the history of a single stone, who shall tell the history of God? If a poor pebble is a surpassing mystery, who shall understand the Deity?"

Its Effect.

A month before the bombardment of Fort Fisher began, the celebrated powder explosion occurred which was intended to blow down this solid earthwork, a mile in extent, with forty-feet traverses every few yards. Its ridiculous failure is well remembered. That night after the explosion of the powder-ship some pickets on the beach were captured and carried on board the Admiral's ship. Among them was a very solemn-looking fellow, who sat silently and sadly chewing tobacco. As there was intense curiosity among the officers of the fleet to know the result of the remarkable experiment, one of them asked the solemn-looking "reb" if he was in the fort when the powder-ship exploded, to which he replied in the affirmative, but without exhibiting the least interest in the matter; whereupon the officers gathered around him and began to ask questions.

"You say you were inside the fort?"

"Yaas, I was thar."

"What was the effect of the explosion?"

"Mighty bad, sir—powerful bad!"

"Well, what was it? Speak out."

"Why, stranger, hit waked up pretty nigh every man in the fort!"

Naughty Papa.

About noon yesterday a portly, dignified gentleman chanced to meet his daughter, a handsome, stylish little miss, wearing a jaunty velvet hat, and with her hair rolled up at the back of head in the shape of a Vienna bunn, sauntering down Vine street under the escort of a young man dressed with excruciating scrupulousness and exceeding taste. The old gentleman stopped his daughter, and, without noticing the confusion their meeting threw her into, commenced talking about the weather, her shopping, etc. She listened dutifully a moment or two, and then remarked, referring to her escort, "Papa, this is Mr. ——." Papa, however, paid no attention to the young man, but kept on talking. Again she said, "Papa, you didn't hear me; this is Mr. ——."

"Yes, yes, my girl, I heard you," said the old gentleman, with an impatient wave of the hand. "I heard you, and I don't care to know Mr. ——."

The immediate departure of that young man in a very shrunken-up condition was one of the funniest sights of the day.—Cleveland Herald.

A Scientific Opinion.

The London Lancet says the usual course of people in a heated term is in direct violation of the laws of nature. Perspiration is a moisture which nature spreads over the surface of the human body for much the same purpose as an intelligent housewife sprinkles water over her butter-cooler. But perspiration is checked by sitting in draughts, by wearing very little clothing, and by adopting light colors for dress. The remedy is taken for the disease, and, through impeding the processes of nature, summer colds and other allied evils are contracted. "The conditions of health require that, within very narrow limits, the temperature of the human body should stand the same, whether the the thermometer stands at 90 deg. in the shade, or sinks to a few degrees below zero."

HOW THE CATCHER WAS CAUGHT.

BY VANDYKE BROWN.

Full tall was he, with sinewy muscles,
And shoulders broad and full and square,
With limbs designed for mighty tussels,
And the regular prize-ring crop of hair;
And he played, with skill exceedingly fine,
The catcher's place in a Western nine.

He was rich in all of the manly graces—
A very Apollo from head to heel;
And, though he was good at the stealing of bases,
He never was base enough, surely, to steal.
A foul, indeed, his pulses stirred,
But he never was foul in deed or word.

As fair was she as the sun uprising,
A blooming maiden, with luscious lips,
Whose dainty completeness was really surprisin
Down to her rosy finger tips;
And she often sat on the stand in the shade,
And saw the games which that catcher played.

And whenever he seized on a hot one nicely,
Or caught a foul with agility,
She clapped her hands, for that was precisely
The sort of thing she wanted to see;
For much did this blooming maiden pine
For the catcher who caught in that Western nine.

Wherefore it was meet, when the games were over,
The catcher, so brave and manly and tall,
Should frequently play the part of a lover
In a game considerably other than ball;
And if an occasional error be made,
'Twas simply because with a miss he played.

For, spite of her love, this maid was addicted
To ways most coquettish and naughty and sly,
And the man of the diamond field was restricted
To taking love's favors, as 'twere, on the sly;
And, though she protested at kissing, I doubt
If the maid by the catcher was ever put out!

At that dangerous hour, while yet the sun lingers
Above the horizon, and Nature is dumb,
He would hold her small hand between his jammed fingers
And stroke her soft hair with his stiff-jointed thumb;
And often their walks were extended so late,
'Twas eleven o'clock when she crossed the home plate!

At last he mustered up courage and told her
How fondly he longed to make her his wife,
And she rested her head on his manly shoulder
While he eagerly asked "would she give him a life?"
And he hinted with emphasis, leaving no doubt
That, should she refuse him, he'd surely strike out.

'Twas the umpire Love that gave the decision;
The maiden permitted her lips to be kissed,
And then, looking up with a slightly blurred vision
She blushingly murmured: "Why, yes—I'll assist!"
So the game to a right happy ending was brought,
And thus, as it happened, the catcher was caught!

A discomfited soldier, who found that he had shot an Indian already defunct, was overheard to murmur, "I didn't know it was Lo dead."

"Ah," sighed a hungry tramp, "I wish I was a hoss. He's nearly always got a bit in his mouth, while I haven't had a bit in mine for two days."

"One is glass in eyes, and the other is isinglass." That is the answer—and a very clever one it is, too. What we want now is a conundrum to fill it.

Go to the mosquito, ye shiftless; consider his energetic ways and learn gumption. On second thoughts, though, you needn't go. He'll be apt to come.

Restaurant patron—"These sausages are hardly up to the mark?" Waiter—"They ain't, eh? Well, d'ye expect Italian greyhound and thoroughbred Scotch terrier for two bits!"

The older the seeds the more perfect the lady-slippers will be. And the older the banana peel the less graceful and the more perfect will be the gentleman slippers.

A well-known dramatist can say rude things. Some one said to him, last week, "You want a new hat." "Yes, that's quite true," he replied, "but why say it? I never told you you wanted a new head."

"I wonder where the clouds are going," sighed Flora, pensively, as she pointed with a delicate finger to the heavy masses floating in the sky. "I think they are going to thunder," said her brother.

The things which people are willing to give us are the things we do not want. When Lincoln was sick with the small-pox he said to his attendant: "Send up the office-seekers. At last I've got something for each one of them."

Did the prophet Isaiah ever eat at a railroad station? It certainly looks so, for how could he have described it so literally if he had not? "And he shall snatch on the right hand and be hungry; and he shall eat on the left hand, and they shall not be satisfied."

A witty clergyman, accosted by an old acquaintance by the name of Cobb, replied: "I don't know you, sir." "My name is Cobb, sir," rejoined the man, who was about half seas over. "Ah, sir," said the minister, "you have so much corn on that I did not see the cob."

A simple-minded man having an attack of the gout wanted to know why he should be so afflicted, as he had always lived a temperate life. "It is probably hereditary," said the doctor. "Sure enough," responded the poor victim. "I understand it now; my wife's father had it awfully."

Pittsburgh authorities prohibited last winter the employment of waiter girls in saloons. Some of the proprietors, to evade the law, ostensibly took the girls in as partners in the business. One of the girls was then arrested, and a test case was made, which has just resulted in her conviction and punishment by fine. The Mayor has ordered all saloons to be closed in which women are employed as waiters.

SABBATH READING.

Ere the Sun Goes Down.

I have work enough to do
Ere the sun goes down,
For myself and kindred too,
Ere the sun goes down.
Every idle whisper stilling,
With a purpose firm and willing,
All my daily tasks fulfilling
Ere the sun goes down.

I must overcome my wrath
Ere the sun goes down;
I must walk the heavenly path
Ere the sun goes down;
For it may be death is wending
Hither with the night descending,
And my life will have an ending
Ere the sun goes down.

I must speak the loving word
Ere the sun goes down;
I must let my voice be heard
Ere the sun goes down;
Every cry of pity heeding,
For the injured interceding,
To the light the lost ones leading
Ere the sun goes down!

As I journey on my way,
Ere the sun goes down,
God's command I must obey,
Ere the sun goes down.
There are sins that need confessing,
There are wrongs that need redressing,
If I would obtain the blessing
Ere the sun goes down!

Other People's Feelings and Failings.

Most of us have a very tender regard for our own feelings. We do not like to have them injured. We are amazed that people can be so rude and clumsy as to tread upon our toes, or roughly expose to the air our scarcely healed wound. But so weak is human nature and so prone are we to think less generously of others than of ourselves, that we often sin in the very way which we would be swiftest to condemn in our neighbors. It is a great delight to meet a man or woman who is always considerate, gentl and polite in his treatment of those he or she meets in daily life.

This topic came up around the breakfast-table in a city house one morning lately. You, happy readers, who live in the country, know comparatively little of the persistent annoyances which city folks undergo from the continual rappings and ringings, and shoutings and screamings, of people who go from door to door to buy, to sell, or to beg. The room in which the breakfast alluded to was being taken was a front basement, on a pleasant street, intersecting a busy thoroughfare. Coffee was poured, biscuits had been passed, eggs were being broken, fruit was being pared.

N. B.—Those who think it preferable to say eggs were breaking and fruit was paring, are at liberty to do so.

Interruption No. 1—"Any r-a-a ags!" The speaker darkened the window with his head and dimmed the shining glass with his breath, as he hurled this remark, ascending, interrogative, and declamatory, at our shivering ears. Somebody shook her curls at him pleasantly, and he departed, with a jingling of bells at the hand-cart he was wheeling along, and a fainter cry of "Any r a-a-gs?" gradually lessening in the air as he went his way.

Interruption No. 2—"Please ma'am, any cold meat and bread?"

It is a little, blue-looking, pinched-looking mite of a boy, with a basket nearly as big as himself. "Don't encourage professional beggars," says the gentleman of the house.

"Oh! my dear," returns the lady, as she sweeps the contents of the bread-plate into the not fastidiously-clean receptacle. "I can't refuse a child when he looks as hungry as that little fellow does. Just think. It might be our own Harry!"

Interruption No. 3—Man rings the door-bell violently. Domestic responds. Presently she enters and inquires if the mistress can step out and look at some prize packages of stationery, etc.

"No!" cries paterfamilias, loud enough to be heard outside. "Tell him to be off with his trash!"

"My dear," the lady urges, seriously, having dismissed the children first, "I do wish you would not be so impolite in your manner to tramps and peddlers. It is their only way of earning a livelihood, and I think Christians ought to be kind to them."

"I fully agree with you. Your sentiments and mine perfectly correspond, but your patience is greater than mine, you see. How you endure it, staying here all day, too, is quite beyond me to comprehend. I believe in politeness to one's equals and superiors—but I won't take my hat off to inferiors."

"A tramp is not necessarily your inferior, my friend," observed the Philosopher, who happened to be staying at the house, and who was giving lectures in the lyceum course. "I have heard of tramps who had at one time been millionaires, and of others who had received the education of a university."

"I shouldn't wonder," said madame, meditatively balancing her spoon on the transparent edge of her Sevres teacup—"I shouldn't wonder if you called Homer a tramp, or Diogenes, if either of them were living now."

"Very likely," replied monsieur, taking up the newspaper to find out whether our representatives in Congress had been giving any more national object-lessons on good manners. And then the talk drifted to the affairs of the day, what engagements each had, what visits were to be made, what shopping done, which closets cleaned, etc., etc.

One person only remembered the morning's discussion, and sat down to think upon this matter of courtesy. And she came to the conclusion that courtesy is a word of very wide meaning. It is an index-finger to character. You observe a true lady, a true gentleman, anywhere. They cannot commit a rudeness. It would hurt them and jar them to wound the feelings of the lowest and the farthest below them. To be truly polite implies that one shall be thoughtful of the feelings of everybody, and of inferiors most of all.

When are we to begin our training in this regard?

With our little children, at once. Do not permit Susy or Jennie, unreproved, to bother or tease or annoy Bridget in the kitchen. Never let them allude to her as the "servant-girl," or speak of "servant-girls" in her presence. The phrase may define her position, but she does not like to hear it, and it takes off the bloom of their refinement every time they use it. Do not jump to pick up your own thimble which has rolled away when Charlie is in the room. Let him bring it to you, and say "Thank you" to him for the kindness.

Do not encourage in yourself the habit of criticising and commenting upon the foibles or faults of any member of your own family. There is nothing gained by it, and a great deal is lost. Love itself is often choked back and hindered in its growth by the rank sturdiness of weeds which spring up against it, unchecked, in houses where people say all manner of ungentle speeches to each other.

If you want to cultivate real happiness, cultivate goodness. Think more of others' excellent qualities than of their failings, and be gentle and amiable to all.—Christian at Work.

PERILOUS VOYAGE.

Crossing the Atlantic Ocean in a Dory.

[London Cor. New York Herald.]

The American boat Nautilus arrived yesterday in Mounts' bay, an inlet of the Atlantic on the coast of Cornwall. The Nautilus is the smallest vessel that ever attempted to cross the ocean. She was built at Gloucester, Mass., is 19 feet over all, 15½ feet on the bottom, and 27 inches deep. The crew, consisting of two brothers, William and Walter Andrews, of Boston, who left Beverly, Mass., June 12, landed in the village of Mullion, Cornwall, appearing greatly fatigued. They give a very interesting account of their perilous and adventurous voyage. For a few days after leaving the American coast they experienced fair weather, but this pleasant state of things soon changed, and fogs, wind and rain prevailed for a considerable period. This was very trying, and they were subjected to a great deal of hardship. Their bed-clothes got quite wet, and for four weeks they had to sleep in their wet clothes. On many days they could take no sleep whatever, and were worked so hard by reason of the bad weather that they could scarcely eat or drink anything. On the Fourth of July they had the luxury of a bottle of lager beer, which they had kept specially for that day. For eighteen days they never saw the sun, and could take no observations. They passed many schools of whales, and experienced some danger from them. They were often so close to the whales as to be able to touch them, but hesitated to do it through fear of having their little boat upset. They spoke several steamers and sailing vessels, and obtained some observations. On July 1 the seas ran mountain high, putting their little craft in imminent danger, and imposing on them the most strenuous exertions and the most sleepless vigilance. This continued for a number of days, till the strain on their bodies and minds became very great; but they bore up cheerfully and overcame every danger. They underwent, during a portion of the time, some really terrible weather, and at one period were literally between life and death. Their chronometer was broken and rendered entirely useless, and they encountered tremendous difficulties and dangers. July 26 was decidedly the worst day of the voyage, the weather being very tempestuous. During the whole of the voyage such sleep as they were able to get was very disturbed, and was more like a sort of continuous stupor. This was perhaps the most trying ordeal they had to go through, as they felt the fatigues of the voyage much more keenly through the want of rest. Neither of them had ever crossed the Atlantic before. Sometimes they had to lay-to for many hours with the drag out and throwing oil overboard. On July 18 they took the first observation they had been able to make for eighteen days, when they made Scilly light. They were very much exhausted, and hove-to in the Mullion roads on Wednesday night. William seems to feel the strain most. Walter looks better, but has a bad hand, caused by so much strain. The whole passage occupied forty-five days.

Leprosy.

Two cases of leprosy among the Chinese in San Francisco have given rise to considerable apprehension. One of the lepers was found lying abandoned in the street in the Chinese quarter of the city, and his countrymen passed him by in throngs, refusing to give him relief in any form or to touch him. He was placed by white men in a fruit wagon, from which a load of oranges had just been sold, and was taken to the Chinese hospital, but was there denied admission. He was then taken to the hospital of the city prison. The other leper was discovered in the jail, and was utilized as a lecture specimen by the Academy of Sciences. These cases will show whether the fear of contagion displayed by the countrymen of the sufferers is well founded, for the two wretches were freely handled by white men. The introduction of leprosy into the Hawaiian islands has been a great calamity to them, and the possibility of a similar curse to California is not viewed with equanimity. To what extent the disease now exists there among the Chinese is not known, and there is no way of discovering. The mortality returns report nearly all the deaths that occur among them to result from "causes unknown," and a large proportion of them may be owing to this disease. Now that it is known to exist in this country, it becomes important to learn under what conditions it is infectious.

The Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York.

Hon. Hiram Hitchcock has been induced to take an interest in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, on account of the impaired health of Mr. A. B. Darling, who is now in Europe. Mr. C. W. Griswold retains his active interest in the firm. On the 1st inst. the hotel commenced its twentieth year with a reduction of price from five to four dollars per day, and all extra accommodations in the same ratio. The incomparable situation of the Fifth Avenue Hotel and its superior accommodations throughout will continue to make it more than ever the favorite resort of travelers.

They were sitting on the piazza near the seaside. He was her lover, handsome, and full of the ardor of impassioned youth. She was sentimental and pretty, but the mosquitoes were buzzing around her so lively that even love became monotonous. Finally there was a lull in the conversation, which he broke by observing: "What are the wild waves singing?" She smiled sweetly, and, swinging one of her ivory arms over her golden curls, lisped: "I think they must be singing Home, Sweet Home." He left.

LEGAL LORE.

Interesting Decisions from the Latest Law Reports.

The case of the young man who hired a horse in Paterson, N. J., on Easter Monday, to drive four miles to Little Falls, but drove ten or twelve miles further to the great injury of the animal, has attracted considerable attention on account of the supposed novelty of the decision that this was an unlawful conversion of the horse to the hirer's own use. This is said to be a new doctrine in the courts of New Jersey, but it has been distinctly asserted in at least one instance within our knowledge, by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts. In 1875 that tribunal decided (Perham vs. Coney, 117 Mass. Rep., 102) that a person hiring a horse to go to a place agreed upon, but driving him beyond it, was guilty of conversion, and was liable for any subsequent diminution in the value of the animal, even though it proceeded from some infirmity of the horse himself. It would be well for people who hire horses to keep these decisions in mind.

The idea that a notary public should be invested with power to commit a witness to jail for contempt would strike lawyers in this part of the country with amazement. Different notions prevail in Missouri, however, as we learn from a decision which has been rendered by one of the Judges of the Appellate Court of St. Louis. A witness whose deposition was being taken before a notary in that city refused to answer one of the questions put to him. The notary held that he could lawfully be required to give the evidence which the inquiry sought to elicit, and upon his refusal committed the witness to prison for ten days, or until he should answer. Upon a writ of habeas corpus sued out in behalf of the prisoner, the authority claimed by the notary was maintained, and the release of the witness was refused. The Chicago Legal News says of this case that it may do for a notary public to commit for contempt in Missouri, but it would never be tolerated in Illinois. We hope there are very few States where it would be tolerated.

An Ohio bank has been defeated in a somewhat remarkable suit brought to recover damages for the non-delivery of a telegraphic message. A person had applied to the bank to have a draft cashed. Being doubtful as to his responsibility, the officers wrote to a correspondent in another place, making inquiries, and asking a response by telegraph. The letter also stated that if the telegram was not received by a given time the draft would be cashed. A message was delivered to the telegraph company to be sent in reply, but it never reached the bank, which, therefore, cashed the draft. The paper turned out to be valueless, and the bank sued the telegraph company for the amount paid on it, claiming that the draft would have been rejected if the telegram had been duly received. The language of the message, however, was not such as to indicate to the company the object for which it was sent; and, under the circumstances, the Supreme Court Commission of Ohio held that the damages claimed by the bank—that is, the amount paid for the draft—did not naturally flow from a breach of the contract to deliver the telegram, and could not be regarded as within the contemplation of the parties, and hence were not recoverable.

The obligations of railroad corporations in respect to the delivery of baggage to passengers traveling by the same train with it are clearly defined in a case lately decided by the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice in England. A maid had been journeying with her mistress on the Great Western railway, and they alighted at Paddington station in London, where she saw all their baggage, including her own trunk, taken from the cars and placed together on the platform. She went for a hotel porter to take the baggage to a hotel, but it appears that he did not find her trunk, for it was not among the things which he brought to the hotel. Upon the trial of a suit to recover $150 as the value of the trunk, the jury found that the loss occurred through the negligence of the company, and that there was no delivery to the plaintiff. They rendered a verdict in her favor, which was upheld on a motion for a new trial; and Baron Cleasby quoted the following passage from Redfield's American work on carriers, as a very intelligible and convenient statement of the law: "It is the duty of a railroad company, in regard to the baggage of a passenger which has reached its destination, to have the baggage ready for delivery upon the platform at the usual place of delivery until the owner, in the exercise of due diligence, can call and receive it, and it is the owner's duty to call for and remove it within a reasonable time."

People whose farms are fenced with wire will do well to note a recent decision of the English Common Pleas Divisional Court. The plaintiff and a Yorkshire iron mining company held adjoining premises under the same landlord, with whom the company had contracted to fence the land it occupied. For this purpose lines of wire rope, supported by posts, were placed along the border of the plaintiff's farm, which was used for pasturing milch cows. The strands of this rope were rusted away by long exposure to the weather. Bits of the wire fell into the grass on the plaintiff's land, where they were hidden from view and involuntarily eaten up by the cattle grazing near the fence. The result was the death of three valuable cows. A suit was brought to recover the value of the third animal thus lost, and the County Court Judge held the mining company responsible, on the principle that they were bound to use their own property so as not to damage another's. His decision was affirmed by the Common Pleas division in London, which declared that the injury to the cow was the natural result of the acts of the defendants. They knew the nature of the wire; that it should fall on the adjoining land when it decayed was to be expected; and the pieces, being concealed in the grass, were plainly liable to be swallowed by cows pasturing there. Upon the principle already mentioned, the company was adjudged to be answerable for the loss of the cow.

A poor son of the Emerald Isle applied for employment to an avaricious hunks, who told him he employed no Irishmen, "For the last one died on my hands, and I was forced to bury him at my own charge." "Ah, your honor," said Pat, brightening up, "and is that all? Then you'll give me the place, for sure I can get a certificate that I never died in the employ of any master I iver served."

The Prevention Of and Remedy for Sunstroke.

Sunstroke is caused by excessive heat, and especially if the weather is "muggy." It is more apt to occur on the second, third or fourth day of a heated term than on the first. Loss of sleep, worry, excitement, close sleeping-rooms, debility, abuse of stimulants predispose to it. It is more apt to attack those working in the sun, and especially between the hours of 11 o'clock in the morning and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. On hot days wear thin clothing. Have as cool sleeping-rooms as possible. Avoid loss of sleep and all unnecessary fatigue. If working in-doors, and where there is artificial heat—laundries, etc.—see that the room is well ventilated. If working in the sun, wear a light hat (not black, as it absorbs heat), straw, etc., and put inside of it on the head a wet cloth or a large green leaf; frequently lift the hat from the head and see that the cloth is wet. Do not check perspiration, but drink what water you need to keep it up, as perspiration prevents the body from being overheated. Have, whenever possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after 11 o'clock in the morning, on very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, and lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold cloths to and pour cold water over head and neck. If any one is overcome by the heat, send immediately for the nearest good physician. While waiting for the physician, give the person cool drinks of water or cold black tea or cold coffee, if able to swallow. If the skin is hot and dry, sponge with or pour cold water over the body and limbs, and apply to the head pounded ice wrapped in a towel or other cloth. If there is no ice at hand, keep a cold cloth on the head, and pour cold water on it as well as on the body. If the person is pale, very faint and pulse feeble, let him inhale ammonia for a few seconds, or give him a tea-spoonful of aromatic spirits of ammonia in two table-spoonfuls of water with a little sugar.—Springfield Republican.

The Epidemic of Drunkenness.

Drunkenness has been by many believed to be on the increase, at any rate in higher circles. It is curious to note that just 150 years ago an epidemic of drunkenness seemed to break out in England. The passion for gin-drinking had got hold of the masses, and the result was, in London at least, that increase in the population was almost wholly checked. Before gin became popular the consumption of beer was enormous. Almost a third of the arable land in the country was devoted to barley. In 1688, with a population of 5,000,000, very nearly 12,500,000 barrels of beer were brewed. Up to this time our distilleries were very insignificant, and French brandies were far too dear for the masses. But hatred to France led to the encouragement of home distilling; the trade was thrown open, and in 1689 the importation of foreign spirits was absolutely prohibited. Then gin-drinking began, and in 1735 the British distilleries manufactured nearly 5,500,000 gallons. Gin-cellars, where men could get "drunk for a penny, dead drunk for twopence, and have straw for nothing," abounded. Hogarth's "Beer Street" is bad enough, but his "Gin Lane" is so horrible that, but for contemporary descriptions, we should deem it an exaggeration. Legislation endeavored to check the evil, but laying on a heavy duty merely produced a great deal of illicit distilling. The consumption arose to more than 11,000,000 gallons, and Fielding prophesied that, "if the drinking of this poison is continued at its present height for the next twenty years, there will be very few of the common people left to drink it."—London Quarterly Review.

Just Like Boys.

A Medina boy invited several of his friends to his father's house to have a good time the other evening. The boys were given the dining-room "all to themselves." When the lady of the house ventured to look in upon the happy party the picture presented was not exactly of a kind to quiet her nerves. An adjoining bed-room had been despoiled of its bed. The straw-tick had been placed in the middle of the dining-room, and one of the lads had worked his way inside of it, until all that appeared was his head. A battle was in progress, and pillows were used as weapons. Several squirt-guns also did good service on the flanks and wall-paper, while various kinds of liquids served as ammunition. In the midst of all this the lady of the house meekly inquired if that was the way they acted when they went visiting. "Sho! that's nothing," said one. "Down to B——'s the other night we got his fat hog in the parlor, tapped his cistern and let the water out, and then took down the kitchen stove and set it up in the garret."—Medina (Ohio) Register.

A convict at Auburn escaped hard work during his confinement of two and a half years by feigning paralysis. He was so successful in the fraud that he was lifted about by attendants, and, on his release had to be carried to the depot in a chair and placed in the cars. An hour afterward he visited the prison officials and astounded them at his speedy and full recovery.

Cyprus turns out to be a very poor naval station after all. There isn't a single harbor nor a good bit of anchorage in or around the island. The promptness with which Mr. Bull will go to work and construct a harbor down there, however, will astonish the effete natives of the Orient.

A Balm for Every Wound.—Grace's Salve is now so generally used for the cure of Flesh Wounds, Cuts, Burns, Ulcers, Felons, Sprains, and all diseases of the skin, that praise of it seems almost needless. Those who have tried it once always keep a box on hand, and nothing will induce them to be without a supply.

Serve an Injunction on Disease

By invigorating a feeble constitution, renovating a debilitated physique, and enriching a thin and innutritious circulation with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the finest, the most highly sanctioned, and the most popular tonic and preventive in existence. It strengthens the stomach, remedies torpor of the liver and bowels, and gives a healthful impulse to the secretive and discharging functions of the kidneys and bladder. Not only does it arrest and prevent the recurrence of malarial fevers, but it furnishes the only adequate safeguard against them to persons who have never been afflicted with those maladies, but would be liable to incur them if medicinally unprotected. It eliminates from the blood certain impurities which the most skillful pathologists assign as the exciting causes of those agonizing complaints, rheumatism and gout, and it is, moreover, an excellent remedy for an enfeebled or overwrought state of the nerves, and for mental despondency.

Cottage Gingerbread.

Take one cup of butter and lard melted together, add one cup New Orleans molasses, stir into this one cup each of sugar and cold water, two large teaspoonfuls ginger, two eggs beaten, and four cups of flour, having in it three large teaspoonfuls Dooley's Yeast Powder. Bake in moderately hot oven.

Public Speaking!

The people of DeKalb county are invited to be present at the following meetings. Come out and hear the doctrines advocated by the Indiana Democracy.

Auburn, Monday, Aug. 26,
At 2 o'clock P. M.

GOV. WILLIAMS!
—AND—
HON. D. S. GOODING.

WATERLOO, THURSDAY, SEPT. 19,
At 2 o'clock P. M.

HON. D. W. VOORHEES.

The present Democratic State Central Committee, like those of former years, frequently fails to give sufficient time in notices of appointments made for speakers. County committees cannot be expected to get up a big demonstration for a prominent speaker on a week or ten days notice. Announcements should be made at least three weeks in advance of the time fixed for the meeting.

Eight hundred shoemakers are on a strike at Chicago, and the Six Companies of San Francisco have offered to supply their places with Chinamen at 75 cents a day. This is bringing the Chinese question pretty nearly home, but there is not much fear this offer will ever be carried out. There would not be a pig tail of them left in two days after they struck the Garden City.

We are highly gratified with the encouraging reports from the Democrats of the several townships in this county. Every one interested in the success of the party appears to be at work for the entire ticket. Now let us see how much majority we can give, by a united effort for the state and county ticket.

The great city of Detroit is evidently seeking a south western outlet. The people along the line of the Eel River Rail road should be on the alert, that no opportunity may be lost in presenting the advantages of an extension of the Eel River road, east from Butler to connect with a road partly finished which is on a direct line to Detroit.

Remember that Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, the Democratic Greenback champion, will address the people at Waterloo on the 19th of September. Every Greenback man in the county should hear him.

Laboring men should make it a point to hear every Democratic speech made in the county during the campaign. Come to Auburn next Monday.

Mr. —— Adams, of Angola, is the Democratic nominee for Prosecutor in this judicial circuit. He was nominated at Kendalville last Tuesday.

Hon. David S. Gooding is a speaker of great ability. Don't fail to come to Auburn and hear him next Monday.

Ex-Gov. Palmer, of Illinois, at a Democratic meeting at Springfield, said: "If Mr. Tilden had mounted his horse on the 4th day of March, 1876, and said, 'I am president of the United States,' and we had been the men we should have been, he would have been president to-day. Next time we elect a president we'll elect a man who will do that." Then nominate a western man next time. The eastern politicians of to-day are like the majority of the eastern soldiers in the late war—more ornamental than useful.

We suggest to our friends of the REPUBLICAN the propriety of having the TWO TRAITOR article in their issue of last week electrotyped and placed upon each page of the paper, as we are confident every publication would increase the Democratic majority in this county from 10 to 50 votes. If such scurrilous, vile, mean, low, contemptible, despicable, depraved, hateful, defamatory, abusive trash and absurd balderdash is not enough to nauseate the political stomach of all fair minded Republicans then we miss our guess.

At the Democratic Congressional Convention held at Kendalville last Tuesday, Mr. John B. Stoll, editor and proprietor of the Ligonier Banner, had the honor of being chosen to "fight the good fight" in this district. As the currency question is one of the leading issues in this campaign, Mr. Stoll, with his store of knowledge in that particular, and his ability as a forcible and logical speaker, is well fitted for the duty to which he has been assigned. We predict that he will prepare Mr. Baker for a warmer climate before the campaign closes.

Some of the Republican and Independent papers of this district have been insisting that Judge Tousley's letter of declination was written by J. B. Stoll, of the Banner; that the Judge did not have the ability to produce such argument, or, in other words, that Stoll was a man of much greater intellect than Tousley. Now that Stoll has been nominated for Congress we suppose these same papers will transfer the honors, and no doubt Stoll will be written up as the veriest ignoramus in the district.

According to notice given, the members of the Democratic Central Committee, and the candidates on the county ticket met at the court house last Saturday and perfected arrangements for conducting the campaign. All present were confident of success at the coming election. Reports from all parts of the county indicate the election of the entire Democratic county ticket by from 300 to 500 majority. The committee and candidates will see that the campaign is properly conducted, and if every Democrat in the county will lend a helping hand a large majority will be the result.

The sealed bids for the erection of the Indiana state house were opened by the commissioners last week. Thirty-one bids in all were submitted, the lowest being that of Kanmacher & Denny, of Austin, Texas, the sum named being $1,611,672.65. The highest estimate on the entire work was that of the New England and Granite Stone company, which was $2,114,714.13. The commissioners did not make a selection or accept any of the bids offered, and will not for several weeks. They will canvass each bid made, and after they determine just who the lowest bidder is, and whether the bond is sufficient, they will make the selection. The commissioners seemed well pleased with the figures offered, and feel confident that a house can be built according to the plans adopted, at considerable less than the original estimate.

The Whipping Post.

The relic of barbarism resurected by the last Virginia Legislature has made another blotch on one of the last pages of American history. The new criminal code went into effect July 1st, 1878, and provides as to whipping criminals "that it shall be the sentence in all convictions of petit larceny, except where the person convicted is a woman, and then imprisonment may be imposed instead of stripes, at the discretion of the court, or justice of the peace. The number of stripes in no case to exceed 78 and not more than 39 are to be administered on any one day."

An exchange says: "The principal provisions of the new code under which the most whipping will be done are the following: For stealing goods or chattles valued at less than $50 and more than $5; for obtaining goods under false pretenses; for maliciously burning any building where the value is less than $100; for poisoning horses or cattle; for setting fire to woods, wild grass, etc.

The whipping is done with a cow hide, and the offender is fastened by his wrists to the post, usually the body of a large tree or a piece of hewed timber. Women are undressed to the wrist, though in case they have hitherto borne good characters they are allowed to retain a single garment of thin material. Unless very thin skinned the lash does not bring the blood from the back of the criminal, but raises deep scarlet welts. Old thieves who do not care a fig for imprisonment, shrink with horror from the pain and agony of the lash and public execution. The sight is revolting and degrading. It puts power of the most absolute degree in the hands of those who, by its constant use, are so brutalized that they have neither justice nor pity left in their calloused hearts.

The editor of the Butler Record, in a late issue of that paper, urges the importance of voting for the best man for local offices. His article is in keeping with the independent idea of politics, and we cannot censure him for presenting the (to him) bright side of the question. It is not with a view of opening any discussion nor indulging in any controversy, that we venture to submit our views upon the subject of independence in politics. People differ in opinion as to the proper mode of governing a [illegible] or state so as to [illegible] prosperity, peace and safety; therefore it becomes necessary for the different political elements to organize and labor for the promotion of the doctrines they advocate, and which they regard as being necessary to attain, in order to protect the rights and liberties of the citizens, the preservation of their morals, and guard the interests, duties and obligations of the governing and governed portions of society; for that reason platforms of principles are adopted from time to time by the different political organizations, which principles are made the test of public opinion. In all nominating conventions, from the national down to county, the principles advocated are adopted in form of resolutions before any nominations are made, for the very purpose of indicating the doctrines which the candidates there nominated are expected to endorse. Candidates nominated by the different parties are the representatives of the principles adopted by their respective parties, and every vote cast for any candidate is a vote for the principles which that candidate represents, whether it be for national, state or county candidates. Hence we vote for PRINCIPLES not men.

Party lines have been and ought to be closely drawn in every political contest. Democrats, Republicans and Greenbackers should vote for the men that are pledged to carry out the principles advocated by the party they represent. If a Democrat votes for a Republican candidate, he endorses the principles which that candidate represents and is therefore a Republican in fact, and Democrat by name. The same will apply to Republicans and Greenbackers as well.

The argument presented by those who favor principles in one instance and men in another, is detrimental to the interests of good government to a greater or less degree, as he who votes for the MAN is inclined in time to loose all interest in state and national affairs and goes to the polls only with a view of electing some personal friend or acquaintance to fill some local office, without any regard to his duties as an American citizen.

The charges frequently made against party leaders with bringing forward, and demanding the nomination of corrupt and incompetent men for local offices are unreasonable and rediculous in the extreme; no leader who has the success of his party at heart, would be so foolish as to recommend the nomination of men who he knew were unpopular, unqualified and undeserving; on the other hand, if the selection of candidates is left wholly with the masses, and each voter is expected to make his own selection, which he does by voting for some personal friend without regard to availability or qualification, the result is that men are placed in nomination who can never be elected, therefore the necessity of honest leaders who have the confidence of the party they represent. The science of politics is not fixed and unchangeable, but is progressive of civilization, and fluctuating with the exigencies of society. While parties grow weaker, the government grows weaker with them.

DIED.—On Monday morning, August 19th, 1878, Matilda, wife of John McClellan, Esq., about 62 years of age.

Mrs. McClellan was formerly from Ashland county, Ohio, was married in 1832, and came to this county the same year with her husband. About three weeks ago she was taken with intermittent fever, from which she never rallied. She was a kind, industrious, faithful wife, and leaves many friends to mourn her loss. Mr. McClellan returns his thanks to his good neighbors for their great kindness and attention shown the bereaved family.

We suggest to newspaper editors that the following from the South Bend Herald would make a good foundation for a circular to be sent in return for the cart loads of "extra inducements" offered to publishers. The proceeds from the sale of "old papers" and the editors ragged clothes would perhaps pay the postage:

"The fools have not failed to replenish our waste-basket with circulars, contracts and advertisements for organs, pianos, sewing machines, buggies, wagons, farming implements, etc., conditioned on the payment of one-third or one-half the price in cash. The only consolation we derive from this annoyance is in the reflection that printers somewhere get pay for this flood of advertising propositions coming through the mail. Whenever these foreign manufacturers come up to the scratch and offer to send us their work even up for an equivalent amount of work in advertising, we will take the trouble to consider and answer their propositions, and not till then."
